[Answer] I regard the imperialists, who are inclined to attach various labels to me, as my enemies. I am a Namibian first, an African second and a member of the human race third. By virtue of that, I struggle for justice for my people and for their rights. As for SWAPO, as a progressive movement, it has set the aim of liquidating any form of colonialism, imperialism, racism and the exploitation of man by man. When we speak of independence, we mean real independence and not merely the right to one's own flag and anthem. We know that those who control our country's means of production also control political power. SWAPO is now a movement that mobilizes the masses, but we will transform it into a party following the attainment of independence, a party that determines the political and economic objectives, a party whose ideology is based on socialism.

AIRFIELDS CLOSED TO CIVILIANS--The army has closed all airports in northern SWA to civil aircraft until further notice. A spokesperson from the SWA territory force stated in response to a query that the large airports near Ruacana and Ondangwa as well as all other airports and airfields in Owambo have been closed to civil traffic "because of air force aerial maneuvers." The spokesperson was unwilling to elaborate on this explanation. As far as can be determined this is the first time that the air force has conducted a maneuver in that sector. The last time that the airports in the north were closed was in connection with large operations across the Angolan border. [Text] [Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 25 Aug 81 p 1]

VEILED ATTACK ON AL-QADHDHAFI--Niamey, 29 August (AFP)--The Niger Government newspaper LE SAHEL made a thinly veiled attack today on Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's overtures to Niger's Tuareg population. Without naming Colonel al-Qadhdhafi the paper denounced the use of the classic weapon of ethnic and religious rivalries by certain power-hungry leaders with expansionist aims. Le Sahel was commenting on yesterday's conference of state executives which discussed national security, the economic crisis, the food situation and social development. The paper said that despite a difficult start an agricultural campaign was gathering momentum, and indicated that the government had taken important measures of support for agricultural prices. The conference decided to set up nationwide cooperatives and continue to give responsibility to the country's youth to take over the destiny of the nation, Le Sahel reported. The paper attacked the attempts at undermining by certain deserters and the maneuvers of certain jealous impenitents who believe firmly that Niger can be colonised again. NATIONS RECEIVES FUNDS FROM EEC UNDER STABEX

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 7 Aug 81 p 8

/Text/ Recently, transfer agreements were signed at the headquarters of the European Economic Community in Brussels by the EEC and the 27 ACP /African, Caribbean and Pacific/ countries participating in STABEX /stabilization of export earnings system/ for fiscal year 1980 in an amount totaling about 138 million ECU /European currency units/, which is equal to about 41.53 billion CFA francs (one ECU = 301 CFA francs).

What is the STABEX system? It is a mechanism for which provision was made in the first Lome Agreement (1975) and which was included in the second Agreement (1980). The purpose of STABEX is to compensate for losses in revenues from exports to the EEC by ACP countries for over 40 agricultural or primary products (peanuts, cacao, coffee, cotton, leathers and hides, timber, bananas, shrimp, rubber, etc.) This mechanism operates in the following way: if for a given product and year revenues derived from exports to all destinations represent at least 6.5 percent of the total export revenues of the ACP country in question, and if revenues derived from exports to the EEC are at least 6.5 percent lower on the average than revenues for the preceding 4 years, the ACP country has the right to a transfer; i.e., compensation equal to the difference between the average revenues for these 4 years and the actual revenues for the year in question.

This mechanism operated to the advantage of Senegal for the first time for export revenues from unshelled and shelled peanuts, and peanut oilcakes for the year 1978. From these export categories, Senegal received a total of 18.87 billion CFA francs.

The system was applied once again for revenues from the same products for 1980. In fact, because of the very bad 1979 harvest, 1980 export revenues were over 50 percent lower than those of 1979 and 65 percent lower than those of the average of the 4 previous years.

It must be emphasized that for 1980 many sizable claims were filed by ACP countries for various products: following peanuts (excluding Senegal, the principal claimants were Gabon, Gambia and Mali) were coffee (basically the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Tanzania, Rwanda and Burundi) and bananas (Jamaica, Somalia, Dominica and Ste Lucie). Total justified claims amounted to 261 million EDU while available funding was only 138 million. Therefore, it was necessary to reduce the sums allocated to each claimant. The ACP-EEC Ambassadors Committee voted to decrease transfer rights to 40.49 percent for the least developed ACP states and 52.64 percent for the other ACP states, with Senegal falling in the second category.

Finally, transfers to Senegal, by far the highest of all, were in excess of 38 million ECU; i.e., 11.6 billion CFA francs. Account taken of the fact that Senegal received an advance on its claim of 25 million ECU during the last 6 months of 1980, it, therefore, has a little over 4.1 billion CFA francs coming to it in the future.

It should be emphasized that the Senegalese government can use the funds it receives from STABEX as it sees fit. The only obligation in accordance to Article 23, paragraph 2 of the second Lome Agreement is that they be used to offset financial fluctuations in the sector in question or, with a view to diversification, that they be channeled into other appropriate sectors and thus promote the country's economic and social development.

ACTIONS OF FEW DISHONEST SOLDIERS CONDEMNED

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 21 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views]

[Summary] If defense and security organizations have a bad reputation, either because of a few bad people or because of a poor system, people cannot have confidence in these organizations and therefore they live in fear. When it happens in a country that people begin to live with nervous tension, if they are uncertain concerning their security, this is a bad thing. Anything which causes fear like this among people makes it necessary to take strong steps to improve the state of affairs. It is for this reason we are asking for the promise of the minister of home affairs, Muhidini Kimaro, to oppose strongly the few soldiers who are destroying the good reputation of our armed forces. We believe that all our good soldiers will cooperate with the commanders in their forces to reveal those few who are engaging in wicked acts.

This is a very obvious question. If soldiers having guaranteed to ensure the rights, security and defense of the people are engaging in theft, cheating and black marketeering, who will defend the citizens? The answer is that the citizens are not only without defense and security but they are also the victims of crimes by those people who are relied on to defend them. Conditions like these must not take root in our country.

Tanzanians have established institutions including the armed forces in order to use them. Tanzanians are incurring considerable expense to establish and develop security organizations not to teach people to engage in criminal acts but to teach people to prevent transgressions in the country.

For a long time after independence all our armed forces had a considerable reputation of being a model citizens' army free of wicked acts and close to the people. Many of our soldiers have tried until now to maintain this reputation. But there are a very few whose actions are destroying the armed forces' good name. Our soldiers should set a good example in behavior and action wherever they are. Those who do not have this reputation are unsuitable to be soldiers.

PRESS FROM FOREIGN COUNTRIES CRITICIZED

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 27 Jul 81 p 4

[Commentary by Apolon Apolott: "Uganda Does Not Need Foreign Press Blessing"]

[Text] If a question was put to the whole world that what treatment does Uganda need to recover from the mess the 1971 coup plunged it, perhaps the first itching answer would be the foreign press.

However, just like in a primary class mental work, the first hand up does not necessarily mean that the owner knows the correct answer.

Apart from the designers of the coup, the foreign press has all along tried to be multipurpose in Uganda. It has tried to be the player, referee, linesman and spectator at the same time.

When Idi Amin was hatched to ruin this country, the foreign press praised him as being soft spoken and an intelligent man despite near to nil education. But when the bully later hit it squarely on the face the foreign press changed to call him a punch drunk former heavyweight boxer and a village tyrant.

The story goes on to include the post liberation period where the foreign press has never settled in their wish on what Uganda should be like. Today, reports we read or hear are even more alarming in that they tell us about what has not happened.

Recently, President Obote condemned the foreign press for distorting the situation in the country as it is today. The President was definitely bitter at these detractors who do not see that Ugandans are sacrificing a lot to rejuvenate their economy even if it meant using rare economic policies.

The foreign press finds it lucrative business to land what our enemies and selfish persons imagine is happening here. It finds itself a spokesman for self-exiled groups and former leaders who lost during the war and the general elections.

When Amin claims imaginary successes by his supporters in West Nile and their closing in on Kampala, the foreign press dispatches correspondents to Saudi Arabia to confirm the tyrant's hallucinations. Similarly when Lule and Binaisa lie to the whole world about their popularity, ample time is given in the foreign mass media to cheat the people.

But what is not said by the foreign press is that if Binaisa claims that he is wanted back as president, why did his party name him as vice-chairman representing a mere region? Above all the leader of his party has also vowed to fight for the number one position in this country!

It is not news to the foreign press when a vice-president of the World Bank appreciates the steps a developing country like Uganda is taking on her way to recovery. Nobody dispatches correspondents to Kampala to find out how the floating of the shilling is being received and how the millions of worthless money is finding its way back into the Bank of Uganda. And that long queues for sugar, salt and petrol are no longer there.

Instead there must be reports about insecurity, lack of morale, "factions" which necessitate a prime minister "to go into exile" and exaggerations about "guerilla" activity. It is even more insulting to the conscience of Ugandans to divert their attention now from real issues like increased production for a better living.

The question of freedom of the press has time and again been defined and analysed by the relevant authorities. It is not anybody's intention to be the keeper of the thinking of the press. But just like the local press was told to be responsible in their reporting, the foreign press should be reminded of the journalists' saying that "facts are sacred".

It would not be surprising if the source of these distortions and fabrications is the now so-called exiles.

These people have to justify why they have travelled long distances to London or Washington leave alone Saudi Arabia.

If one had to be involved in a fool's retaliation, the stories to get prominence in our media would be the uncontrollable insecurity where an attempt is made on the life of a head of state or the Queen. The increasing riots and thuggery in places like Brixton would become everyday stories and overshadow important occasions like the wedding of a prince.

But the Ugandan press being moulded is a responsible one whose concern is the destiny of the nation. It is for this reason that the directorate of information at Nakasero is cautioned for its reception and accreditation of foreign journalists.

Uganda has many tickling problems to solve ranging from rehabilitation and reconstruction to fighting famine. It does not need to wait for the foreign press to wish her well. In any case at the time of the war and polls, it did not send us a success card. The point is Uganda is on the road to recovery despite the wishful thinking of the foreign press and its allies.

LARGE ARMS CACHE REPORTED FOUND IN KAPCHORWA

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 27 Jul 81 pp 1, 8

[Article by Sam Wakoli]

[Text] The Uganda National Liberation Army (UNLA) based in Bukwa, Kapchorwa district have recovered 108 guns and large quantities of communications from bandits who have been terrorising the people in the area.

This was revealed over the weekend by the Brigade Commander Col C. Kisembo when he welcomed the UNLA Commander Maj Gen Tito Okello currently on a three day tour of the military units in the brigade.

The weapons which were displayed before the Maj Gen at the brigade headquarters, Mbale, included revolvers, sub-machine guns, G3, SLR, MK 4's and home made guns.

Col Kisembo informed the army commander that the weapons were recovered mainly from the hands of the notorious remnants of dictator Amin defeated army elements misguided by disgruntled politicians and cattle rustlers.

He revealed that during the operations carried out by the security forces, under the command of Lt Birungi Rwamutwe ten bandits were arrested and were under interrogation.

The Brigade Commander commended the Kenyan authorities along the border for their cooperation in improving security in the area.

Maj Gen Okello thanked Lt Birungi and his men for their efforts to curb insecurity in Kapchorwa district. He urged the people in the area of cooperate with the security forces in isolating bandits and collecting the guns still in their possession.

The army boss warned power hungry politicians who agitate trouble to destroy life and property that the government would not rest until they are crushed.

He said some of the politicians living in luxurious hotels abroad were preaching the gospel of bloodshed while innocent Ugandans were being murdered here.

But the army commander assured Ugandans that the government under President Obote would provide enough security for their lives and property.

Addressing men and officers of the 21st battalion Mbale, Okello called for discipline and dedication to duty. He said Uganda aimed at building a strong and efficient force whose duties would not only be the defence of the country but participation in national development.

Maj Gen Okello cautioned soldiers against harassing civilians and warned that those who would not try to establish harmony with members of the public would be dismissed from the army.

He reminded the police officers and their subordinates of their role in maintaining law and order and called upon them to work diligently.

Maj Gen Okello introduced Captain Michael Adoko as the new commanding officer of the battalion to replace the outgoing officer Lt Col Tito Opodo who has been transferred to Mbarara.

Earlier the Maj Gen visited Mbale prison and addressed detainees the process of being released. He advised them most of who are ex-soldiers of Amin to be good citizens when they rejoined their families. He said the government had decided to set them free because it believed in human right and freedom of movement.

FORMER PRIME MINISTER PLANS AFRICAN TOUR

PM260747 Brussels LE SOIR in French 4 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Interview with Nguza Karl-I-Bond, former Zairian prime minister, by Colette Braechkam in Rhode-Saint-Genese: "The Best Thing for Zaire Is for Mobutu To Go"; date not given]

[Text] "I am not encountering any problems in Belgium. I am regarded as a foreign resident here and not as a political refugee. I am not in exile, and am not prepared to be, and I hope to be able to return to my country fairly quickly."

Former Zairian Prime Minister Nguza Karl-I-Bond, who received us at his pleasant villa in Rhode-Saint-Genese, where he has strengthened the security system at the entrance as a precaution, rejected the accusation that he is preaching violence, inciting Zairians to revolt and, hence, abusing Belgium's hospitality. "I am a responsible politician," he said, "and I am merely postulating hypotheses, in view of the situation in Zaire." "However I observe that the country's economic situation is terrible and that the population's purchasing power, already so low, was halved after the Zairian currency was devalued by 40 percent. Moreover the IMF's credit is merely a shot in the arm and the funds are only being released in dribs and drabs.

"In analyzing this situation, I am merely postulating hypotheses which are not subversion plans. The first and most positive is that President Mobutu should agree to leave willingly!

"That would make a peaceful change possible and would remove the dangers of a social explosion. Do you know that the country is a positive powder keg? The people are suffering from malnutrition, infant mortality is high and endemic diseases have reappeared. What I fear is a brutal revolt by a people who are so desperate that they would have nothing to lose! That is why I envisage other possibilities if the head of state should refuse to leave, although I certainly do not want them to be used!"

Mr Karl-I-Bond mentioned the possibility of a people's revolt or a military coup d'etat. "Don't forget that the army is also part of the people. The army can express its view in its own way and turn against the man giving the orders."

The Army

Moreover the former prime minister stressed that two of the main forces in Zaire have expressed their views: the deputies in January and the bishops quite recently. "The army has so far said nothing, but I have close contacts with the military and I know that the appeal I made on 30 June was widely distributed by them...."

Another hypothesis is intervention by armed Zairian groups living in other countries which have so far not returned to the country for fear of reprisals. The former prime minister specified that, although he has maintained relations with his fellow citizens, he has also kept in contact with Zairian communities living in other countries, in Europe or Africa. "Moreover that is why I am planning to leave for Africa, in order to explain my approach to some leaders and also to meet with my compatriots." Although he refused to confirm it for security reasons, he said, there is reason to wonder whether the former prime minister intends to visit Angola where there are still thousands of Zairian refugees, most of whom come from Shaba, which is also Mr Karl-I-Bond's home. In any case the latter denied that he intends to visit Libya: "I have no reason to go there, I am not a terrorist...."

Indeed the former prime minister favors peaceful change, which he thinks is still possible today. But he fears that he himself might later be overtaken by events: "Don't forget that half the Zairian population was born after independence and that their revolt could one day sweep away everything, including me."

Without wishing to pose as a savior and without claiming to unite the opposition behind him ("I am just one Zairian among others, and the oppositionists should not forget who the main enemy is"), Mr Karl-I-Bond nonetheless thinks that it is now no longer possible to keep saying that if Mobutu were to go there would be chaos and anarchy and that there is no alternative. His proposals are clear: "We must create a de jure state, free the political prisoners and allow exiled people to return. A government of public salvation will have to be formed, after which the new constitution must be drafted, restoring public freedom and the political parties. We must recreate a democratic regime adapted to the Zairian situation in which all political forces will be represented. I am only one of those forces and am certainly not obsessed with the desire for power. Moreover, I proved that since I voluntarily left the job I was doing—something which had never happened in the history of the regime. But there will be no miracle and even if we restore some austerity and abolish privileges it will take a long time to rebuild an economy which is in a disastrous state."

Mr Karl-I-Bond repeated that the change of which he was speaking is not just a question of individuals: "We must also restore honesty in public life and change people's thinking." According to him it is possible to end the institutionalized corruption and the oligarchy's privileges.

The West's Interests

"It is also for this reason," he said, "that some people, even in other countries, prefer to see the present situation continue, and fear the risk which any change represents." But to those people he said: "My appeal is a warning. The longer the present situation lasts, the more radical this change will be.... The defense of the West's interests and of Belgium's interests in particular does not depend on maintaining the existing regime...." But the former prime minister, who admits that Zaire will always need the West, was also anxious to make another point clear: "Things will not be the same with me: I am not in favor of continuing a system which consists of exploiting the people. I am not in favor of perpetuating certain privileges to the detriment of the population's interests."

Moreover the former prime minister denied that he is one of the regime's men who benefited from the system before rejecting it, which would have made him suspect in the eyes of those who precisely want a radical change.

"Don't forget that I was humiliated, imprisoned and tortured by the present regime. Therefore I wanted to be rehabilitated, publicly cleared of all accusations and reinstated in my job by the very man who had ousted me. That is what happened. I was not fired but left voluntarily, as I wished, despite the discomfort and risks that might involve for my family and myself. I did not leave on impulse but after planning my gesture and thinking out my political stance for a long time, as my 30 June appeal proves. I believe that the population has not been deceived, has not associated me with the system and knows why I left. They also know that the fact that I have been prime minister has given me national and international credibility and if there were to be elections in which I was just one candidate among others, I am certain that the Zairian people would be anxious to make good of their votes...."

As he showed us out, Mr Karl-I-Bond returned to the fears he has for Zaire's future if his appeal, which he regards as a warning, is not heeded. "There are precedents," he said, "of countries in which a revolt has swept away everything; just look at Iran." He also cited the example of Chad, where it was the state's very existence which was threatened....

JUSTICE MINISTER OPPOSES 'ENTRENCHED' SEATS IN PARLIAMENT

CA271034 Salisbury Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 27 Aug 81

[Text] The minister of justice and constitutional affairs, Comrade Mubako, says the very concept of racial representation in Parliament is counter to one of the basic principles of equality of all people before the state. Addressing a meeting of the National Unifying Force in Salisbury yesterday on the subject living with the Lancaster House agreement, Comrade Mubako said the provision for entrenched white seats was repugnant, racist, subvertive of democracy and peace, as well as potentially destabilizing. He said although there had been reserved white seats in the Kenyan and Zambian independence constitutions the number of seats in both cases was smaller and not entrenched. However, Comrade Mubako said the constitution has proved workable in the short term and the government has been able to pursue socialist policies and put them into practice without being unduly hampered by the constitution. The minister added that the government will effect changes in the appropriate time to promote the presidential instead of the present prime ministerial system of government in line with the wishes of both ZANU-PF and ZAPU-PF at the Lancaster House conference. Comrade Mubako supported the prime minister, Comrade Robert Mugabe, in assuring Zimbabweans that a one-party state will not be imposed but will come through the ballot box.

LESS EMPHASIS ON OIL, MORE ON TRADITIONAL INDUSTRIES URGED

Kaduna GASKIYA TA FI KWABO in Hausa 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "We Must Be Careful"]

[Text] This nation's heavy dependence on petroleum exposes it to some jeopardy. For petroleum is a finite resource and its price is labile.

OPEC today is holding an emergency meeting in Geneva. If the market, as is rumored, forces Nigeria to cut the price of a barrel of crude oil from $40 to $37, it would mean a daily loss of nearly $2.7 million (2 million naira) for Nigeria.

We are all aware of market fluctuations and they are certainly nothing that pleases us.

And that is another strong and pointed indication that we should not become dependent on petroleum.

It would really be best if the federal government and the state governments too would focus on upgrading agriculture and also on making needed improvements in out-of-the-way tourist sites to render them attractive. The search for other minerals should continue all over the country so we can remain self-sufficient.

Assistance should be provided for practicioners of traditional industries such as tanning, metal-working, dyeing, weaving, etc. This would help them develop their God-given talents and would lessen our dependence on foreign imports by stemming the spate of such imports being sold on our markets.

It would even enable us to export such goods.

In conclusion, it is our hope that the OPEC conference opening today in Geneva will benefit us.

APPEAL JUDGES UPHOLD LEGITIMACY OF POPULAR REVOLUTIONARY GOVERNMENT

Victoria NATION in English 17 Aug 81 pp 2, 3, 4

[Text] UNNOTICED by most people, the recent Valabhji tax appeal case took the Seychelles Court of Appeal into the most captivating and complicated debate ever on the legality, before the courts, of a revolutionary government that has popularly overthrown a existing constitutional order, but which rules for a time by decree without a new, popularly-accepted constitution and without going to the polls.

The issue in the case was not the validity of the present Government, which was set up under the 1979 People's Constitution, which, in turn, was endorsed by elections. The appellants in the appeal case did not question this.

What they claimed, in an effort to prove the tax assessments of Mr. Valabhji illegal, was that from the 1977 revolution to the 1979 Constitution, the revolutionary Government was illegal and based on unconstitutional authority, thus making all its laws illegal.

Though the attempt was unanimously and firmly rejected by the three judges of the highest court in the land, which upheld the then Government's legitimacy on the grounds that right from the start it was accepted by the people, the arguments put forward are of considerable political, as well as legal and constitutional, significance.

Mr. Valabhji appealed to the Court of Appeal on a number of grounds. The main one was the contention that the Income Tax Assessment Decree (1978) was invalid and unconstitutional, making the assessments made under it illegal. In effect, Mr. Heald, a Queen's Council from Britain who led Mr. Valabhji's appeal, claimed that all legislation enacted in Seychelles in 1977 and 1978 was unconstitutional and invalid and had no effect, including two Proclamations published by the revolutionary Government which are essential to the understanding of the case.

The Proclamation on June 13, 1977 vested in Mr. France Albert Rene the duties and powers of the President immediately before the revolution and suspended temporarily the 1976 Constitution. It also gave Mr. Rene power to make laws by decree.

A further Proclamation on June 28, stated that Mr. Rene had been invited to assume all the powers of the Government and that, being satisfied that it was in the interests of the people and necessary for the preservation of public security, he had done so.

The Proclamation revoked the 1976 Constitution and replaced it by a Constitution consisting in the main of provisions contained in the former.

By paragraph 3 of this Proclamation, the President was also required to prepare a Constitution incorporating the wishes and giving effect to the aspirations of the people of Seychelles.

As a result proposals were made by a Constitional Council and embodied in new Constitution which has been endorsed by the 1979 elections.

Mr. Heald did not question this new constitution. He was, in the words of the President of the Court of Appeal, Sir Michael Hogan, "content to train his guns on the Decrees made in 1977 and 1978 and more particularly on the Income Tax Decree (1978). These were not, he said, made in fulfilment of the 1976 Constitution but contrary to it and consequently were invalid."

Mr. Heald submitted that the 1976 Independence Constitution could not be abrogated, suspended or amended by proclamation by Mr. Rene as he was not constitutionally appointed President (between 1977-1979) and who, in any event, had no power to do so.

The coup government, Mr. Heald said, did not acquire power by any means recognised or foreseen by the 1976 Independence Constitution and the coup itself was unconstitutional.

Arguing the Government's legitimacy during 1977 and 1978, the Attorney General, Mr. Bernard Rassool, attached particular importance to the application of a "Kelsen Doctrine", saying, "when a government in power has effective control with support of a majority of the people and is able to govern efficiently that government should be recognised as legal."

The main case used to support this doctrine is the State versus Dosso and Several Others in 1958 in Pakistan, when the country's Supreme Court had to consider the situation arising from General Ayub Khan declaring martial law and annulling the Constitution.

The then Pakistani Chief Justice, Mr. Muhammad Munir, said, ". . . if the revolution is victorious in the sense that the persons assuming power under the change can successfully require the inhabitants of the country to conform to the new regime, then the revolution itself becomes a law-creating fact because thereafter its own legality is judged not by reference to the annulled Constitution but by reference to its own success." Furthermore, he continued, the essence or "international entity" of the State remain the same, making the revolutionary government and the new constitution, according to International Law, the legitimate government and valid constitution of the State. "Thus a victorious revolution or a successful coup d'état is an internationally recognised legal method of changing a constitution", he concluded.

Later, quoting Kelsen's 'General Theory of Law and State' Chief Justice Munir pointed out that a revolution changes the entire legal order in a state, not just the constitution, thus depriving all previous standards of the old order of their validity.

Mr. Heald on the other hand, maintained that Dosso's application of the Kelsen Doctrine no longer commanded support since a later and more authoritative decision of "... the new regime had, by June 28, 1977, received such widespread and unqualified acceptance and consent that it was, already a legal authority at that time."

Sir Micheal Hogan, President of the Court of Appeal

the Pakistan Supreme Court, Asma Jilani versus Government of the Punjab, refused to follow it, saying it was wrongly decided.

The Chief Justice in this case, Mr Hamoodur Rahman, said that a revolutionary government could not annul the the former constitutional set-up legally before that government achieved legitimacy by the habitual obedience of the country's citizens over a period of time.

The 1977 to 1979 period was not long enough to qualify here, Mr. Heald claimed.

Then the chief Justice in the Jilani case, relied upon heavily by Mr. Heald, argued that the acts of a revolutionary government could however be valid if they were necessary for the usual orderly runnning of the State, the preservation of social order, and the good of the people and if they did not impair the rights of citizens under the lawful (previous) constitution and were no aimed at entrenching the revolutionaries in power.

Mr. Heald emphasised on this point that no attempt had been made to show that it was necessary to amend the income tax laws in 1978 and, consequently, the assessment decree could not be validated on that basis.

Later, quoting other cases, Mr. Heald also submitted that the validation could only be by a subsequent election or by a subsequent constitutionally formed government.

Mr. Heald contended that all these arguments and cases added up to an authoritative rejection of the Kelsen Doctrine in the Jilani case.

In his findings, Justice Abdulla Mustafa, another of the three appeal judges who sat in on the case, would say that from purely juristic and analyical point of view the Kelsen theory was the most logically consistent and valid. He was convinced, he said, that the criticism levelled at the doctrine in the cases quotted by Mr. Heald to descredit the theory, did not "seriously impair the validity of Kelsen's doctrine."

In answer to Mr. Heald's arguments the Attorney General stressed the absence of any opposition to the coup in Seychelles, indicating popular acceptance by the citizens.

Mr. Rassool maintained that right from the first day of the coup the new Government was firmly in effective control of the country. He submitted that Seychelles has a very small population and many outlying districts, making it very easy for resistannce, if there was any, to emerge. None had.

The Seychelles (Constitution) Proclamation of June 28, 1977 was validly enacted, he said, by a President who had assumed control in the interest of security and to preserve law and order in the country and who had full control and the backing of the people.

Since the 1979 Constitution — the validity of which was not challenged — was passed, legislation had been enacted dealing with and amending legislation and decrees made by the coup Government in 1977 and 1978. Thus, the Attorney General contended, all the legislation and decrees passed since June 5 1977, were clearly recognised by the post—1979 Constitution Government as valid and part of the law of the country. The decrees passed since June 5, 1977, formed a portion of the body of existing legislation in the country. In fact, income tax was still being collected and assessed under the Seychelles Income Tax Decree 1978, which even if it was invalid then, had been validated by the constitutionally formed Government of 1979.

In his approach, the President of the Court of Appeal, Sir Michael Hogan, paid overwhelming attention to the issue that popular acceptance of the Government and the change it brought about made that Government legal.

"Central to nearly all thinking on this subject", Sir Michael said, "is the belief that sovereignty ultimately depends on consent or acceptance by the people, manifested by obedience to the precepts of those claiming authority."

While the Chief Justice in the Jilani case suggested that the obedience to the revolutionary government by the people should be extended over a period, Sir Michael said that experience indicated that, on occasions, it has been so widespread and complete as to leave no doubt as to its existence virtually from the outset.

"In any event... there appears to be a consensus, or at least a strong preponderance of opinion, that once the new regime is firmly or irrevocably in control it becomes a lawful or legitimate government and entitled to the authority that goes with that status," he continued.

Even the Supreme Court of the United States, in Williams versus Bruffy, said, "...in the case of an ultimately successful insurrection the courts deriving from it would uphold acts of insurgents from the beginning and courts of other countries would do the same".

In the 1968, British Appeal Courts case of Madzimbmuto versus Lardner — Burke and Another, the Chief Justice, referring to a number of American cases dealing with legislation passed by the revolutionary states during the War of Indepedence said that as far as (this) group of cases was cocerned, they affirmed that in the case of successful revolution the validity of the new government's laws date back to the day when the revolution first broke out.

Sir Michael pointed out that since the June 5, 1977 revolution the revolutionary Government had enjoyed unchallenged authority and maintained stable and effective government, with little or no interruption in the ordinary life of its citizens.

"When a government in power has effective control with the support of a majority of the people and is able to govern efficiently, that government should be recognised as legal"

Bernard Rassol A.G.

Sir Micheal continued: "But, even if I did not have the benefit of this hindsight I believe I would have come to the conclusion from the smoothness and efficiency of the revolutionary transition, that the new regime had, by the 28th June 1977, received such widespread and unqualified acceptance and consent that it was, already, a legal authority at that time.

"Even if I were wrong in this assessment, because, for example there had been insufficient time for the habit of obedience to become manifest, I see no reason to differ from the view reflected in the American cases just mentioned and expressed by Garner that when a regime is firmly established and accepted as legitimate this legitimation is extended back to cover legislation enacted by the regime from the inception of its control.

"For these reasons I think the Income Tax Assessment Decree (1978) was a valid enactment."

Judge Mustafa, for his part, pointed out that by June 13, 1977, eight days after the coup, the Government must have believed it had consolidated its position for it to publish Proclamation No 2 of 1977.

On June 28, 1977, the judged noticed, the new Government perhaps thought that its position had become impregnable for it issued another Proclamation. On June 29 it held Independence celebrations with dances, parties and so on, and save for a limited curfew the country was back to normal.

The judge continued: "I think, dealing with such situations, that pragmatism must inform the judicial attitude. I am satisfied that the successful coup or revolution had acquired effectiveness through habitual submission to it by the people of Seychelles.

There was nothing which disturbed the even tenor of the René Government right from its inception to the present day... About three weeks after the coup the Government in its proclamation on 28th June 1977, the Seychelles (Constitution) Proclamation, provided that there would be consultations with the people to prepare a new Constitution, and the Government carried out its promise and in 1979 a constitution was enacted and an election held under it.

"The post—1979 elected Government continued to administer the decrees enacted by the coup Government, and incorporated them in the corpus of its laws. The coup Government, in issuing its proclamation of June 13 and June 28 1977, must have belived that its position had been consolidated and that it had the support, express or implied, of the people. I see no reason to disagree with that assessment. The subsequent history in Seychelles would seem to support that assessment.

"I am of opinion that a coup Government which continues in office and existence must be viewed as a whole, and if it has become legitimate and valid, then such legitimacy related back to its inception; that is, it becomes legitimate and valid "ab initio."

"I think that one has to accept a successful revolution as valid from its inception if it has remained in office for a sufficient period of time and has the consent and backing of the people, express or implied.

"On this basis, the coup Government has acquired legitimacy and validity and the decrees it enacted in 1977 and 1978 are valid and enforceable."

The third judge on the case, Justice of Appeal Maurice Lavoipierre believed that Sir Michael Hogans' easoning in particular dealt adequately with the present case.

"I am of the opinion that the Income Tax Assessment Decree (1978) was a valid enactment", he wrote.

PRESIDENT RENE SENDS MESSAGES ON WESTERN SAHARA

Victoria NATION in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] SEYCHELLES' view that there will be no lasting solution to the Western Sahara issue unless a truly free referendum under really impartial conditions is held to allow the Saharaoui to determine their own future, was clearly reiterated by President Albert René on Wednesday in a special message to the OAU Implementation Committee. Mr. René's expressions of concern were made in the light of signs that Morocco had really agreed to a referendum that would entrench the status quo.

The identical messages were sent to the heads of state of Guinea, Kenya, Mali, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Sudan and Tanzania, who make up the Implementation Committee set up by the Organisation of African Unity at its last summit in Nairobi in June, this year. The Eighteenth Ordinary Session of the OAU Heads of State and Government called for a meeting of the Committee before the end of this month to prepare the ground for the implementation of a cease fire between the Polisario Front and Morocco, to be followed by the referendum.

CONCERN

While Seychelles welcomed King Hassan II of Morocco's commitment to accept a fair and general referendum on the Western Sahara issue, Mr. René said in his message, it was now "concerned by some of his recent declarations which seem to indicate that the referendum is only intended to confirm the status quo." "Moreover," the President's message continued, "the King seems reluctant to enter into direct negotiations with the Polisario Front or to withdraw his troops from the territory in order that a free and fair referendum may take place."

President René then listed certain conditions that had to be accepted by both sides to allow a really general and free referendum. Direct negotiations between the Polisario Front and Morocco would have to be held, leading to a ceasefire. Moroccan forces would have to withdraw from Western Sahara. The Moroccan administration would have to be replaced by a neutral, temporary one under the aegis of the United Nations and the OAU. These conditions, Mr. René's message continued, were contained in the report of the OAU Ad Hoc Committee on Western Sahara which was adopted at the June Nairobi summit.

The Seychellois Head of State then expressed his continuing conviction that "despite all difficulties, the Implementation Committee will satisfactorily fulfil its mandate in order that the people of Western Sahara may freely express their legitimate aspirations for self-determination." SAP

PIONEER DELEGATION LEARNS FROM SOVIET CAMP OUT

Victoria NATION in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] MANY young Seychellois who are members of the Young Pioneer and Pioneer Movement are, since the formation of the Movement, having the chance to travel and meet other young people of a great number of countries.

Last, but not least, to benefit from such chances were Douglas Accouche of Grand' Anse Praslin and Rosemay Léon from Bélonie School.

Accompanied by a senior instructor from the Department of Youth, Mr. Tony Belle, the two Pioneers spent an enjoyable month in Aptek, USSR.

Mr. Belle explained that the Soviet Government had invited Seychelles to participate in the International Camp of Aptek where several other pioneers from progressive countries meet to share views and ideas.

The Aptek camp, said Mr. Belle, is made up of ten smaller camps which consist of a number of units. The camp was formed since before the Second World War and has, during the war, helped to accommodate homeless children.

The instructor compared the camp to our National Youth Service Village. "It is run basically on the same lines, except that Aptek's is much bigger. However, most of the activities, including those connected with the sea (Aptek is by the sea), have not much difference. All participants have to wear different uniforms for different occasions.

As to whether he thinks the Seychellois participants have learnt much, Mr. Belle said that they have acquired a lot in the sense of unity and openness.

PRC HELPS CONSTRUCT ANSE ROYALE SCHOOL

[Excerpts] With much enthusiasm and all-round expressions of support for continued fruitful co-operation, Ministers Maxime Ferrari and James Michel yesterday officially launched Seychelles' most important joint-project with the People's Republic of China--the construction of the Anse Royale Senior Secondary School.

As scores of Seychellois and Chinese workmen broke off work temporarily to attend the ceremony, Dr Maxime Ferrari, Minister of Planning and Development, explained that the inauguration of the project would see the start of foundation work on the main teaching block, the principal building of the extensive complex. The large site of over six hectares would change in appearance daily from then on, Minister Ferrari said.

Landmark

"The end product will be of vital importance in the education development of Seychelles, and the building of it is a landmark in the history of the friendly and fruitful co-operation between the people of our two countries," he added.

The Minister of Education and Information, Mr. James Michel, in the following speech, pointed out that the project was the fruitful result of an agreement signed by President Albert Rene during his official visit to China three years ago.

"This agreement signifies the importance which the two countries attach to the proper development and advancement of our young people," he said, as well as being an expression of friendly relations.

IMPORTANT MILESTONE

Describing the future school as an important milestone in educational development, the Minister explained that it had been designed to cater for about six hundred students. One of its most important roles would be the provision of higher education facilities and opportunities to graduates of the National Youth Service. In fact, the school is expected to be ready by January 1983, in time for the first NYS graduates from Port Launay.

The new school would give great impetus to the country's educational programmes, Minister Michel said, adding "It will not only improve the learning environment but it will also reflect the confidence and hope that we place in our youth."

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES

Referring to the Seychelles People's Progressive Front's declared policies of providing equal educational opportunities for all Seychellois children, the Education Minister said that the reform of the secondary level of education, which became operational at the beginning of this year, would further enhance such opportunities for all children to continue their studies beyond the universal nine years of primary education. The new school, Minister Michel continued, would offer children the type of opportunity considered best to meet their future needs, thus doing away with the previous system of turning out hundreds of unskilled job-seekers on the market every year.

The importance of the project in the friendly co-operation programme of the two countries was also stressed by the Chinese Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Guan Zong Shan. So far fifty-two Chinese engineers and technicians had arrived for the project, he said, and these had enjoyed fruitful co-operation with the Seychellois construction and education officials and workers concerned.

JOINT EFFORT

Both China and Seychelles were developing countries of the Third World, Mr. Guan pointed out, and this was all the more reason for a strengthening of friendly relations.

"I believe", the Chargé d'Affaires continued, "that with the joint effort of our two sides, this edifice which symbolizes the friendly co-operation between our two countries, will go up smoothly."

After Mr. Michel had cut the ceremonial ribbon, the two Ministers and the Chargé d'Affaires each poured a barrowful of concrete mix into the foundation excavation.

The two Ministers and Mr. Guan then toured the site watching Seychellois and Chinese workmen sweating side by side. The party, which included other education and government construction staff, toured stores, workshops and living quarters.

STRAIGHT FROM CHINA

Over 10,000 tonnes of equipment and material have been stored on the site, including 4,000 tonnes shipped from China. The latter include lorries, bulldozer, a mechanical shovel, and many woodworking and iron-forging machines. The Chinese workmen have even come with their own mini-bus and their living quarters on the site include a doctor's surgery.

After the visit of a Chinese mission to Seychelles in 1978 to collect information related to the project, the planning and detailed design of the school was done in China. Before the Chinese construction team arrived, Full Employment Scheme workers cleared the site.

OBOTE CLOSES UPC NATIONAL COUNCIL CONFERENCE

EA221610 Kampala Domestic Service in English 1000 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Text] President Milton Obote has closed the Uganda People's Congress [UPC] National Executive Council conference at the Kampala International Conference Center with a warning that the UPC as a party will not accept holding fresh elections.

Dr Obote said the UPC won the last general elections because the party had a united, competent and solid leadership. UPC, he added, also won the elections because its leadership had been tried, tested and (?found) clean and above all because the party has good [word indistinct] workers and [word indistinct]. The UPC leader made it clear that the will of the electorate was (?reposed) in the UPC and any view contrary to that was calculated to create instability in Uganda.

He said that it would be most dangerous to the future of democracy in Uganda if the country succumbed to a situation where any party or person who lost the elections and (?took guns) and refused to go to the high court were rewarded by subjecting the whole country to [word indistinct] and fresh elections. He said such a situation would put an end to peace and stability.

On elections petitions Dr Obote pointed out that under the rule of law the government and the president are not allowed to direct judges as to what they must do. The president also noted with dismay that some persons had even suggested the presence of a peace-keeping force. He said that despite our very difficult economic situation (?one) wonders why the country should be subjected to great expenses by bringing foreign troops.

Dr Obote said that although his party and government inherited a country destroyed by neglect, terror and murder and economic turmoil, the country is marching into the future with confidence in the party's ability to meet the challenges. The president, who is also the president of the party, told the delegates that the UPC must always be a party whose leaders promote unity and solidarity and must have foresight.

He warned UPC members to guard against electing leaders who harbor hatred, corruption and intrigues in any organ of the party.

ZINCOM CHAIRMAN PRESENTS 'GLOOMY' ECONOMIC REPORT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] ZAMBIA'S payment arrears are now around K500 million and it is unlikely there will be dramatic change in the country's economic performance in the medium term.

This gloomy picture was painted in Lusaka yesterday by chairman of the Zambia Industrial and Commercial Association (Zincom) Mr Hellins Chabi at the organisation's annual meeting.

Mr Chabi said the last 12 months had not experienced any real change in the country's fortunes, while at the same time unemployment continued to cause concern.

"The overall balance of payments is still adverse. As of now payment arrears are around K500 million, and of this 60 per cent is in respect of the imports pipeline".

As the country continued to rely heavily on imported raw materials, there was unlikely to be any dramatic change in the economic performance in the medium term.

Zincom still maintained the view that the Government should do everything possible to provide real incentives for rapid economic growth.

"It is only rapid economic growth that will guarantee employment of our people and affluence. Stagnation will only produce instability and many social problems".

Basing the 1958 optimum copper prices and discount these by the average rate of inflation over a period of almost 23 years, the country had never enjoyed real increases in this commodity.

"If this trend continues, our mines will gradually decline into unprofitability and eventual bankruptcy. Zambia could well experience a very severe structural unemployment problems in the Copperbelt area well before 2000".

On the other hand, growth in local industry depending on imported raw materials would only continue to exacerbate the situation.

It was imperative that attractive incentives for exports were provided and that the demand for foreign exchange would continue to be a problem if postive measures to arrest the situation were not taken now.

PUBLICATION OF NKUMBULA'S MEMOIRS

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 23 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] THE long-awaited memoirs by former leader of the defunct African National Congress (ANC) Mr Harry Nkumbula will be published in October to coincide with the 17th Independence anniversary.

In the book which has been written by former Times reporter Goodwin Mwangilwa, Mr Nkumbula, popularly known as the "Old Lion" in Zambian political circles, has outlined what he considers as his failures and achievements.

Mr Nkumbula has traced his early life, background, education and how he started his involvement in Zambian politics.

A spokesman for the publishers, Multimedia, said the book deals with what the veteran politician considers as the failure of African governments to deliver the goods to the masses.

Mr Nkumbula has contended that there "is ideological confusion on the continent" and this had led to the myriad of problems which governments in Africa are faced with.

He offers his vision and what he would have done or tried to had he succeeded in his aspirations to the leadership of the country.

Referring to the political situation in Zambia, Mr Nkumbula traces early attempts by his one-time lieutenants such as Mr Berrings Lombe to topple him from the leadership of the ANC.

After Mr Lombe failed he broke away from the ANC and together with Minister of Mines Mr Mufaya Mumbuna formed the United Party.

Later he was joined by Prime Minister Mundia who defected from the ANC and was made president of the United Party which was later proscribed by the Government.

The announcement that Mr Nkumbula has finally put to print his long involvement in the political era ends year of speculation on whether the veteran politician would finally come around to do so.

Mr Nkumbula, 69, has recently been in ill-health.

COURT DISMISSES WITH COSTS DETAINEES' APPLICATION

[Text] THE LUSAKA High Court yesterday dismissed with costs an application filed by detained former High Court Commissioner, Edward Shamwana and former Bank of Zambia Governor, Valentine Musakanya challenging the banning of their petition to Parliament.

High Court judge, Mr Justice Wamulungwe Mainga ruled that Mr Shamwana and Mr Musakanya's application was misconceived in law and therefore liable to be dismissed with costs.

Mr Justice Mainga said the procedure taken by Mr Shamwana and Mr Musakanya in filing their application by way of originating summons was not proper and therefore his court had no jurisdiction on the matter.

He ruled that if the plaintiffs (Mr Shamwana and Mr Musakanya) wanted to file another application, they were at liberty to do so but should do so under the proper procedure by way of issuing a writ of summons.

The judge said under the procedure which they had adopted in bringing the application to court, witnesses who were needed to come and give evidence could not be called as this could be done only by issuing them with writs of summons.

"The proceedings are not properly before me and I will not have jurisdiction. Therefore, the matter is dismmised with costs," he said.

Mr Musakanya and Mr Shamwana were seeking a court declaration on whether the petition to Parliament should be prohibited and whether the State was acting within its power to prohibit them from reading newspapers, magazines and books.

Further the two detainees, in an affidavit filed by Mr Shamwana, complained that they were taken to Katete and Chipata respectively under gun point despite protests that they could not get the needed medicines they were prescribed to take in that area.

Mr Justice Mainga further ruled in favour of Mr Abdulaziz Kinariwala over arguments by Mr Bruce Munyama, counsel for Mr Shamwana, that the State should have applied for leave to make an objection that the two plaintiffs' application was misconceived in law.

He said although it was normal that an application should be made to raise an objection by way of notice or summons with the deputy registrar of the High Court at the close of proceedings, this was not so in this case since there were no proceeding and the application filed by the plaintiff was not made through the registrar but with the court.

He added that infact an application for leave could not be made because the case came straight to court.

The judge said Mr Kinariwala indicated to the plaintiff by sending a letter to his lawyer, Mr Munyama dated July 29, this year that he was going to raise an objection.

"This constitutes an application for leave to raise an objection on a point of law to the application," he said, adding that he was satisfied that the defendants had complied with the law.

Mr Justice Mainga pointed out that the question of whether the State had power to stop a petition or the court from hearing such a petition was contempt of Parliament raised the question of whether the court could decide this matter.

He said that he found this issue to be partly law and partly factual adding that every action needed to be commenced by writ except where this was indicated.

He said since under the present procedure no witnesses could be called to come and testify for him to decide the issues at hand he found that the plaintiff who was seeking a declaration on matters which called for evidence had not taken the proper procedure.

FOREIGN AIRLINES PROTEST BANK OF ZAMBIA ACTION

[Text] AIRLINES whose planes do not land in Zambia will not be allowed by the Bank of Zambia to externalise funds in a move to conserve foreign exchange.

And British Airways, the Dutch airline KLM and the West German airline Lufthansa, the airlines affected, have already protested to the International Air Transport Association (IATA) in Geneva and the Government about the action.

There was no comment from Bank of Zambia officials. But a bank circular number 13 dated August 14 to commercial banks states:

"Authorised dealers in foreign exchange are advised that with immediate effect, no airline that does not land and uplift passengers from Zambia shall be allowed to externalise funds save for those funds already accumulated in the country."

Other airlines such as Air Malawi, Kenya Airways, the Soviet airline Aeroflot, Air Zimbabwe and the French airline UTA have not been affected.

Although the bank has said that the airlines would be allowed to remit funds accumulated before the circular Mrs Tina Malyon of Lufthansa said the airline had not externalised any funds since November last year.

The airline had a "substantial amount of money" in the pipeline which would be affected by the move. Asked whether the airline would close down operations in Zambia, she said:

"Obviously this will change international attitude about the general economic conditions in Zambia."

She said West Germany might take retaliatory action against Zambia Airways which maintains offices there.

The bank's move had taken her airline by surprise since Zambia and West Germany had an air services agreement, which allowed for airlines from the two countries to operate freely.

But she indicated that retaliatory action against Zambia Airways would only be taken if efforts by IATA and at governmental level failed to achieve a compromise.

KLM manager in Zambia Mr Herman Wilterbrood confirmed that his airline had been affected although there had been no official communication from the bank.

They had only been informed of the bank's action through their bankers.

The airline's head office in Amsterdam had sought clarification from the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications.

The Government had promised to look into the matter although there was no indication that it might rescind the bank's action.

Chairman of the Travel Agents Association of Zambia Mr Terry Hinton said he was "closely watching" the situation

SWEDISH EMBASSY SPOKESMAN DISCUSSES AID PROGRAM

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 24 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] SWEDEN is to assist Zambia assemble locally 300 wagons costing K5 million for Zambia Railways during the 1982-83 period.

A spokesman for the Swedish embassy said in Lusaka that the wagons are in addition to the 300 being assembled at Kabwe under the 1979-81 K10 million agreement between the two countries.

The agreement for the assembling of the 100 wagons has already been signed.

The spokesman also said that his country would assist Zambia in the training of 40 people in various skills under the personnel and Consultancy Fund Programme.

He said that there was favourable development co-operation between Zambia and Sweden which dates back to 1965 when Sweden started giving aid to Zambia.

"Our co-operation and assistance to Zambia is in line with our country's policy to help developing countries become self-reliant," he said.

The spokesman said since 1965, Sweden's overall aid to Zambia stood at K120 million, mainly in the fields of agriculture, health education and import, Support Fund and Personnel Consultancy Fund.

There are also 60 Swedish experts all over the country working in various fields including government departments and ministries providing expertise.

The spokesman explained that within the next three years, Zambia would receive K46 million for agricultural, health and education.

For this year, Zambia had already procured drugs, spare parts for Zambia Electricity Supply Corporation (ZESCO), wagons for Zambia Railways and a bridge for the Ministry of Works and Supply.

The spokesman further expressed Sweden's desire to support the recently formed regional South African Development Co-ordinating Conference (SADCC).

In this direction, Sweden and Norway have embarked on a telecommunications link between Zambia, Botswana and Zimbabwe and work on the project started early this year.

The spokesman also described trade between the two countries as among the highest Sweden has with African states.

INDECO MAY HAVE TO PAY COMPENSATION FOR PLANT'S REPOSSESSION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Indeco may have to pay about K1 million to a Lusaka-based private company as compensation for repossessing the Nega Nega brick factory in Mazabuka.

Libro Textiles Industries managing director Mr Mohamed Limbada said last week that his firm was not bitter the Government had decided to repossess the K6 million plant.

"But we do hope Indeco will pay us as soon as possible so that we can use the money to develop a new mill elsewhere," he said.

President Kaunda directed that the factory be handed back to the State because "it is desirable or expedient in the interest of the public" to acquire the property.

This was contained in the Government GAZETTE published on August 7 and signed by Minister of Lands and Natural Resources Mr Clement Mwananshiku.

Indeco sold the plant to the private firm at K800,000 after making a loss of about K15 million.

But Mr Limbada complained that since the President's directive neither Indeco nor the Ministry of Commerce and Industry officials had "the courtesy to inform us about the new developments.

"The only official communication has been through the Government GAZETTE and what had appeared in the Press."

During the last session of Parliament early this month, Commerce and Industry minister Mr Remmy Chisupa was taken to task over the transaction.

MPs queried the minister on how much the Government had invested on development of the project; what measures had been taken to protect it from vandals; and whether the Government had any offers from individuals and private companies to buy the plant.

Mr Chisupa said the Government did not invest into the abortive scheme but Indeco's total liability was K6,996,697.

The amount represented the original investment on the plant by way of fixed assets only, but Indeco had borrowed a total of K22,370,000 from various sources to set up Nega Nega and Kalulushi brickfield plants.

Mr Chisupa said Indeco had posted security guards at the complex to guard the factory, machinery and houses.

But a TIMES team which visited the factory recently was told vandals had smashed windows, ripped off doors and stolen fixtures from the factory and houses.

Workers employed by Limbada Company said apart from broken window panes theives had virtually ransacked the 145 houses comprising of high, medium and low cost structures.

Mr Limbada said his firm has drawn up an inventory of expenses incurred since "we moved on the site last March."

The company had to erect a temporary water pump for domestic use and had for the last few months been pulling down machinery belonging to Indeco.

Indeco has declined to comment on the latest developments saying "we are still waiting for guidance from the Government."

The private firm was to turn the factory into a textile mill employing about 500 people. It envisaged to spend K2 million on new machinery and renovation of the factory.

MPHEPO SAYS LACK OF RAW MATERIALS BRINGING SOME FIRMS TO HALT

Mphepo Presents Annual Report

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Aug 81 p 4

[Excerpt]

SOME companies are slowly grinding to a halt because of lack of raw materials and letters of credit.

Lusaka chamber of Commerce and Industry chairman Mr Francis Mphepo said this in Lusaka at the weekend when he presented his annual report to the mother body, the Zambia Industrial and Commercial Association (Zincom).

Reviewing events of the year, Mr Mpepo said that the business community had met and was still facing many problems.

He said when President Kaunda abolished the old technical committee and substituted it with a ministerial committee, businessmen's problems started.

Foreign allocations for the first half of 1981 were slow to materialise and when they did, they were "disastrously inadequate".

"Some companies have up to now not received their allocations. This is despite that the Government had a draw-down of K300 million from the IMF loan of K800 million," said Mr Mpepo.

Next came the cancellation of all import licences issued on Form 1A and the no funds involved licences issued before April 9, 1981. This was followed by the revalidation of old import licences issued on Form 2A.

The consequences this would cause were obvious unless something was done about it now, and fast.

Despite all this, the chamber has had cordial relationship with the Government, particularly with ministries of Commerce and Industry and Finance.

Industry Needs Positive Attitude

[Editorial]

[Text] IT is high time industry in Zambia adopted a more patriotic and positive attitude towards solving the nation's economic problems than its present mercenary stance and expecting to be spoonfed all the time.

Patriotism is for all those who have made Zambia their home. That should include industry and business houses operating in this country.

Loyalty demands hard work, innovation and inventiveness in the face of growing national economic difficulties.

Industry and business houses in the nation's capital should in fact lead in this by example.

It is a great shame to Zambia that we have to report on our Business Review page that the Lusaka chamber of commerce and industry is singing the same old negative song.

It says that some companies in the country are slowly grinding to a halt due to lack of imported raw materials.

Blaming all our economic difficulties on the "lack of foreign exchange" scapegoat points an accusing finger at our own mercenary attitudes and an easy escape route from our own laziness.

Instead of wringing hands in despair, our industrialists and businessmen should be thinking hard about ways to save foreign exchange and to set up new industries using locally produced raw materials. That is what import substitution is all about.

It little occurs to them that if they improved the country's economy through increased production of local resources the little foreign exchange available would be used to import capital goods which we do not produce locally.

During the Rhodesian UDI the Rhodesian industrialists and businessmen created a lot of secondary industries for import substitution because they just didn't have the necessary foreign exchange.

Why can't Zambian industry do the same at a time when we are in a similar position? Where is the loyalty of our business tycoons?

If they have the interests of Zambia at heart then they should not childishly wait to be spoonfed by the Government. They must find ways of generating foreign exchange themselves.

The K800 million IMF loan facility granted to Zambia last May will be made available to the Government in driblets.

Industry and business houses should not actually bank on it. It is not meant to be the panacea for all their economic ills. Nor will it in any way pull Zambia out of the present economic rut.

Rather it will merely support the country's financial and economic programme especially in diversifying domestic production and achieving a financial equilibrium.

Now that Mr Vernon Mwaanga is the new chairman of Zincom, perhaps there will be a change of heart for the better among local industrialists and businessmen on the vexing foreign exchange problem.

DELAY OF BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] CONSTRUCTION of the bridge across Kafue river at Mufuchani in Kitwe has been delayed by lack of funds, Copperbelt permanent secretary Mr Jordan Munkanta has said.

Mr Munkanta said in an interview in Ndola that the Mufuchani Disaster Fund committee needed about K500,000 to build the bridge, but so far it had only K10,000. "The Mufuchani Disaster Fund is still open and donors are more than welcome to donate to it."

Mr Munkanta was not aware of any company which had offered to build the bridge.

The Mufuchani Disaster Fund was set up in 1979 after 45 people drowned when a pontoon carrying them across the river capsized.

Early this year visiting Lord Mayor of Sheffield Mr William Owen told Kitwe district council that his city had some of the greatest bridge builders who if persuaded to come to Kitwe on an exchange programme could help in constructing the bridge.

Mr Owen was speaking at the disaster area after executive secretary Mr Gilbert Zimba told him the council was determined to build a bridge to facilitate development on the other side of the river.

The cheapest bridge would cost about K300,000 while a bigger one would cost K1 million.

MUMPANSHYA DEFENDS HIS REPORT ON RAILWAYS

Controversy Continues

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] CHAIRMAN of the commission of inquiry into Zambia Railways Mr Joshua Mumpanshya has defended his report saying it was based on truth.

"There is therefore no question of me or my commission having lied in the report of findings in the Zambia Railways," Mr Mumpanshya said at his Hotel Inter-Continental room. He is in Lusaka for specialist medical treatment.

He declined to discuss the issue in detail because there was nothing he could say about current developments.

"I have presented the findings to the President and my job ended there. I was a mere messenger reporting what the people said." It was now up to the Government to say something.

Minister of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula has on two occasions attacked the report describing it as false and not worth the paper it was printed on.

Last Tuesday, Mr Chuula told a Press conference that although there had been resistance to publish the report by some lawyers in the Government some "forces" had demanded its publication.

On Saturday, he made another statement insisting he was right in saying the Government could not have appointed Mr Basil Monze Zambia Railways general manager without first clearing him of any allegations contained in the Mumpanshya report.

He said the Government could not have given Mr Monze the railways job without first clearing him.

By appointing him to the post the Government by implication exonerated him.

Mr Chuula's remarks were prompted by Central Province Member of the Central Committee Mr Pius Kasutu who called on the Government to clear Mr Monze of his implication in the Mumpanshya report or nullify his appointment.

In Kabwe, the Zambia National Farmers Union supported the Mumpanshya report.

Union chairman Mr David Mazimba said in a statement on Saturday that by failing to implement the recommendations in the report, the Government had denied the people their fundamental rights.

Mr Mazimba supported the Railway Workers Union of Zambia on the issue and attacked Mr Chuula for saying the report — which revealed tribalism, corruption, nepotism and thefts — was false.

The railway union, with support of Mr Kasutu and his provincial political secretary Mr Samson Mukando, has insisted that the appointment of Mr Monze be deferred until he was cleared.

Mr Mazimba warned that his union would take action if the demands by RWUZ were not met by the Government.

"I can assure you brothers that we in the Zambia National Farmers Union are behind you. It will not be long for us to act. This is not a threat but some of us believe that action speaks louder than words."

Bwacha Member of Parliament and deputy Chief Whip of the National Assembly Mr Richard Banda and Legal Affairs permanent secretary Mr Charles Manyema are among those who have attacked Mr Chuula for saying the report was false.

Mr Manyema, who was a commissioner, said last Friday that Mr Chuula had attacked the Government by calling the report false.

He said this view was shared by secretary to the Cabinet Mr Evans Willima who held a meeting with him.

And last week, Choma MP Mr Daniel Munkombwe challenged Mr Kasutu "to produce concrete evidence" which should be used to nullify Mr Monze's appointment.

Part and parcel

He said he could not understand why Mr Kasutu, who was part and parcel of the appointing system, should now be opposed to the decision.

He charged that Mr Kasutu's opposition of Mr Monze's appointment "was in total violation of the Party supremacy and a breach of confidence in President Kaunda, who is the overall head of the appointing authority".

Mr Munkombwe felt that if Mr Kasutu failed to tell the nation "the truth" about why he opposed the appointment of Mr Monze, it might appear the Central Committee member had a grudge against the former permanent secretary.

Mr Munkombwe supported Mr Chuula that the findings of the Mumpanshya commission could not be used against the appointment of Mr Monze.

The MP said he could not understand why Mr Kasutu did not persuade the Central Committee to implement the findings of the commission if these were true.

Government Should Issue Statement

[Editorial]

[Text] WHO IS RIGHT?

Is it the Mumpanshya report which confirmed that there were malpractices such as corruption, nepotism, tribalism and thefts in Zambia Railways?

Or, is it the Minister of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula who has described the report as an unreliable document which was not even worth the paper it was printed on?

It is now one week since Mr Chuula, who was once Minister of Legal Affairs and Attorney-General, attacked the report, but the Government has remained silent on his serious allegations.

Why should the Government remain silent when a report it accepted through a White Paper is being torn apart by a Government junior minister?

Should the nation conclude that the Government's silence over Mr, Chuula's serious allegation is its acceptance that the Mumpanshya report was indeed a fabrication?

But the nation would be groping in the dark because a Commission of Inquiry's report which was accepted in a Government White Paper can only reasonably be disowned by a statement from the Government.

We are sure that the Government is aware that the nation takes White Papers on Commissions of Inquiry seriously.

After all, some White Papers on Commissions such as the Whelan report, the Mwanakatwe report and the Muchangwe report have benefited some workers financially.

Some of these Commissions were simultaneously published with Government White Papers.

But the White Paper on the Mumpanshya commission was published two years after the Commission's report.

The Government had therefore two years in which to do a thorough job.

Why then should the Government shy away from recommendations it had made after such a long and exhaustive exercise?

Last week, we published stories in this newspaper that Zambia Railways, in 1975, sold 12 locomotive wagons to the Broken Hill division of the Nchanga

Consolidated Copper Mines Limited [NCCM] in an irregular manner.

They were not only sold on a verbal undertaking but they were also sold at scrap value even though some had a 32-year life span.

There are also no records to show that NCCM paid Zambia Railways for the wagons.

Today, we have published a story in which the commandant of the Zambia Railways police, Mr Abson Chanda has confirmed that a senior management official wanted his fraud squad disbanded because it was investigating the misuse of company transport and other malpractices.

These are some of the irregularities which the Mumpanshya Commission investigated and the management of the Zambia Railways has not denied the fresh allegations.

So why should the findings of the Mumpanshya Commission be in doubt at this stage?

It is time the nation realised that it is dealing with a more complex and bigger issue than the findings of the Mumpanshya Commission.

The Government should therefore issue a statement now.

Mumpanyisha Report Becoming Charade

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 23 Aug 81

[Editorial]

[Text]

TO be cleared or not to be cleared — that is the question now looming up through the dense fog of the deepening Mumpanshya report controversy.

The focus is back on the disputed appointment of Mr Basil Monze as Zambia Railways general manager. Was he in fact cleared of any allegations that might have been made against him in the report before he was moved to Zambia Railways recently?

Unfortunately for him and for everybody else, Mr Monze has refused to shed any light on this, let alone discuss the Mumpanshya report. Yet he is the eye of the whirlwind.

Likewise the Zambia Railways board, the parastatal mother Zimco, and indeed the Government itself, have all remained tight-lipped on the saga so far.

But the man who re-opened the Mumpanshya wounds, the "tell it-as-it-is" Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula, ostensibly "to defend the Government", has made a spirited comeback into the ring now to clear himself of the charges being levelled against him from many quarters including his colleagues.

He raises a valid point. Why did the Government, and only on the prodding from Parliament, publish a White Paper accepting and adopting the Mumpanshya report two years after it had been published? Normally a White Paper is published simultaneously, and not belatedly, with a report.

From what Mr Chuula now says, it appears the Mumpanshya report was embraced with more gratitude than conviction by the Government. His uninhibited discussion and brutal candour has revealed certain ambiguities which show that the report was neither persuasive nor conclusive.

The metastatic spread of scandals around the report bear witness to his arguments. But the questions he raises, instead of cutting to the heart of the matter, deflect the talk into aimless byways.

The Mumpanshya report saga is becoming a charade — a tactical game whose four most important rules are: how to "play" the problem: What "stroke" to use with people: Which way to "tilt": and whether or not to "stone wall" or to follow the "hangout" option.

Instead of revealing bedrock, it shows only shifting sands. It is now a rumbling muddled and circular business of scenarios and hypothetical positions which might prove futile.

If the latest act does not prove Mr Chuula's guilt, it surely does not prove his innocence. He spoke publicly, perhaps too candidly, when he should have taken refuge in reticence, or spoken out quietly in the corridors of power.

He may, of course, have been actuated by the best of intentions. But he now feels like a soldier who has dragged himself through no man's land only to be denied asylum by his own side. His reach may have exceeded his grasp.

The moral here is that an excess of idealism might lead one to consequences one has not bargained for. One might end up the most moral person but, at the same time, the most isolated.

But the question still remains: Is the Government going to clear itself, now that Mr Chuula has somewhat cleared himself?

Authorities In a Jam

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] YESTERDAY's enthusiasm can so easily become today's inconvenience and, eventually, tomorrow's embarrassment.

There is no end to it — but no beginning either. That seems to be the story of the Mumpanshya report. The last word is yet to be said and written about that much-publicised and scandal-ridden report.

The Chuula bombshell on it this week has created its own unfortunate ripples, the worst of which has been to widen the credibility gap between the people and their Party and its Government.

That is why yesterday we asked the Party and its Government to "come out without fail and state categorically where it stands on the Mumpanshya findings". It is still tight-lipped.

Lest we forget, that report made serious charges against specific and respected members of the society. Charges ranged from cattle theft, rampant tribalism, to nepotism and corruption in Zambia Railways.

The Mumpanshya report was a saga of one mistake after another. In its initial classified report, the culprits were named and unfortunately some of those named obtained copies of it.

That alone immediately created big problems for the Government in law suits threats. To avoid that a final report was published, this time without the culprits' names but with imaginary initials instead.

In accepting the final report, the Government seemed to be groping for a face-saver, something that would get it out front, or on top or ahead of a dangerous curve.

It put a blanket ban on any possibility of law suits against itself by those who had been named in the first report.

That did not help matters at all. Another omission was its failure to suspend from office, until they were cleared, all those people against whom allegations had been made by the report.

In the end the report left much in the air as it answered. Rumours started flying around. People were asking: "Who is who in the report?"

All in all it revealed a kind of reckless rot and rotten recklessness that can be expected from the vile vilifiers bent to vilify vilely. Because of that a dangerous situation has now emerged.

The more things are allowed to happen around that report, the more the position of the authorities is falsified, causing more confusion. Surely nobody wants that.

The fact that the Government is so far tight-lipped about the matter is a recognition that the authorities are in a jam.

Their plight is understandable. There is a lesson to be learned here. This is that you cannot simply open a door part way. It is either shut or open. Whichever way, one must be ready for any consequences, good and bad.

The only way out of the present jam is to lift the ban on law suits and let the courts decide one way or another for those who may want to clear themselves of the stigma of the Mumpanshya report.

RAILWAYS POLICE RESISTS OFFICIAL'S ATTEMPTS TO DISBAND IT

[Text] THE ZAMBIA Railways police department has resisted attempts by a high-ranking official in the organisation to disband its fraud, it was learnt from Kabwe yesterday.

Commandant of the railways police, Mr Alson Chanda confirmed when contacted at his home that attempts were made by a senior official to influence management to disband the squad.

But these attempts were thwarted by the department which resisted strongly when the official made his manoeuvres, Mr Chanda said.

He said the official was being investigated for misuse of company transport and other offences. He did not disclose.

"It is true that there were attempts by a high-ranking official to disband the squad in June, but we have resisted and it is still operating," said the commandant.

The squad has become unpopular with management because its investigations of thefts, frauds and corruption cases in the system are normally thorough.

Consequently, the squad which comprises an officer from the internal audit unit and two police officers with the commandant as the overall supervisor, has tended to tread on the toes of some top railway officials.

The squad was first disbanded in 1977 and the then railways police commandant, Mr Bartholomew Mwale sacked for insisting that his men should continue investigating the alleged theft of cattle in transit and other corrupt practices in the system.

But last year, the government ordered management to reconstitute the squad and Mr Mwale was reinstated on promotion and directed to pursue investigations in close liaison with Zambia Police.

The government, in its White Paper on the Mumpanshya report also asked the Prime Minister to set up a committee to implement the recommendations of the Mumpanshya inquiry team.

Meanwhile, the commandant has promised to tell the government the truth about what actually transpired in the 1975 deal in which Zambia Railways sold 12 of its wagons to the Broken Hill mine.

Mr Chanda said although the transaction took place before he was appointed commandant, he would pursue the case records in possession of the fraud squad and acquaint himself with what transpired.

"If I am satisfied that the case was thoroughly investigated, then, I will inform the government accordingly," he said.

He confirmed however, that investigations into the deal have been completed, but he was unable to say whether management had accepted its recommendations.

BRIEFS

ARRIVAL OF ROMANIAN EXPERTS--Seventeen Romanian experts have arrived in the country to recondition Aro vehicles used by the police. Since the vehicles started coming in the country last year there have been persistent breakdowns. A spokesman for the Romanian embassy said in Lusaka yesterday that nearly 1,000 Aro vehicles used by the police had so far been provided by Romania to the Zambian Government. He dismissed reports that the vehicles were not suitable for Zambian conditions. He said 30 police officers were recently in Romania where they inspected various types of cars from which they had chosen the Aros. The 1,000 vehicles are part of a K15 million credit facility extended to Zambia by the Romanian government. The spokesman, however, declined to indicate how much money had been spent on the Aro vehicles. But he said apart from buying the vehicles part of the money was being spent on importing consumable goods and items from Romania. [Text] [Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 23 Aug 81 p 7]

RCM'S SECOND QUARTER LOSS--ROAN Consolidated Mines (RCM) made a loss of K11,475,000 in the second quarter ended June 30 compared to a net profit of K9,102,000 recorded in the corresponding quarter last year. A quarterly report released yesterday said during the period under review, the company made a total revenue of K97,711,000 compared to K113,563,000 in 1980. And in view of the loss incurred, the board of directors who met in Lusaka yesterday decided that no dividend be declared in respect of the quarter. The company blamed the industrial unrest for the low copper production, which dropped from 63,712 tonnes to 52,540 tonnes. Copper sales of 57,034 tonnes were below the comparable figure of 64,080 tonnes sold in the corresponding period last year. Copper sales values were K1,533 a tonne showing a reduction on the K1,620 achieved a year ago. Cobalt production in the quarter under review totalled 452 tonnes, against 464 tonnes produced in the June 1980 quarter. Sales of 264 tonnes showed an increase on the 143 tonnes sold in the corresponding period. The report said sales of cobalt remain at a low level and the cobalt market was depressed generally, adding that world cobalt production was well in excess of demand. LAND MINES PREVENT ELECTIONS--Party elections may not be held in some areas of Gwembe district because roads have not yet been cleared of land mines. District political secretary Mr Robert Michelo confirmed yesterday and singled out Sinazongwe where security forces are still removing landmines. Party elections from section to ward level in Mulolo Ward have already been cancelled until the area was declared safe by the security forces. Mr Michelo said Party officials had been advised not to venture into the area to prepare ground for the election until security forces move out. MUGABE FAVORS MILITARY TRAINING FOR CHILDREN

[Text] Children without school places would in future undergo military training, preparing them to help in the defence of Zimbabwe, should the need arise, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said yesterday.

Training would take place at youth centres throughout the country where children would also be trained in creative as well as productive occupations, including farming.

The Prime Minister made several references to the military training plan at a series of ZANU (PF) rallies held throughout Mashonaland last week.

In Mrewa he assured crowds that the children would not be allowed to keep guns or move about with them.

"They might be tempted to pop their guns at their elders, and we wouldn't want that," Mr Mugabe said.

The children would be allowed to handle guns and other weapons only during the actual training sessions, after which the arms would be taken away, he said.

Mr Mugabe, who is also president of ZANU (PF), also urged that children in or out of school should be allowed to join the party.

All youth wings of political movements all over the world consisted of children who were in or out of school, he said.

The Prime Minister did not say, however, that children should be allowed to organize political parties or to participate in party political activities at their schools.

An official in the Prime Minister's Office denied a newspaper report earlier last week that one of its spokesmen had said Mr Mugabe's call for children to join ZANU (PF) marked a break with the previous system of forbidding political activity in schools.

The official said the report quoted the Prime Minister out of context, and was both incorrect and misleading.

He added: "What the Prime Minister said was merely that children, whether in or out of school, should, like everywhere else in the world, be allowed to join the party.

"He did not say they should be allowed to organise party activities in their schools."

Parents and other political parties had expressed concern about the report, saying the introduction of political activities in schools would create chaos and confusion in the country's educational system.

MINISTERS SUCCEED IN GETTING SQUATTERS TO LEAVE VICTORIA EAST

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Gwelo. Land-hungry people of the newly installed and almost landless Chief Chikwanda in the Mtilikwe area of the Victoria Province who last week caused alarm by squatting on commercial farms in Victoria East were yesterday moving off again and returning to their own area.

This was on the instructions and advice of two Government ministers, Dr Eddison Zvobgo and Mr Moven Mahachi, who after giving assurances to the commercial farmers at a meeting on Friday later addressed the people.

Commercial farmers in the area are still worried about the situation.

Said one: "The problem is very serious and we are sitting back to wait and see what will happen. It is a tricky situation. It seems that the hands of the police are tied when it comes to squatters. They can only prosecute them for cutting down trees."

Tribalistic

Said another: "Chief Chikwanda claims this area (Victoria East) as his ancestral home ground and the danger is that if the Government accepts claims like that then the whole of the country will revert to tribalistic claim. Every chief could lay claim to something."

Chief Chikwanda, who is thought to have about 3 000 followers, has only a tiny area near Zano School in the north-eastern tip of the Mtilikwe communal land near Kyle Dam.

The chief was installed as his kraal by Dr Zvobgo last Sunday and on Monday he and his followers moved on to the surrounding commercial farms.

Mr Robert Menzies, the under-secretary (development) for Victoria in the Ministry of Local Government and Housing, takes up the story: "Efforts were made by the Government at every level to try to deal with this without resorting to the use of force," he said.

"This was trespass, for they marked out areas where they thought they were going to plough and live and graze their cattle.

"There was a whole host of meetings and on Wednesday the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Muzenda, came down and explained to the chief that what his people were doing was not in the terms of the Government's policy of reconciliation."

Mr Menzies said Dr Zvobgo told the commercial farmers that the Government had no intention of expropriating land or to do anything that was not in terms of the law. He said that as in the past farms would be acquired by the Government on the basis of willing seller, willing buyer.

Later on Friday, at a hastily-convened but well-attended meeting with Chief Chikwanda, his advisers and followers, "the minister made it quite clear that there was no excuse for them to go on to commercial farms. He told them the Government was doing what it could to relieve the land pressure and that they must withdraw from the farms."

Mr Menzies said that in the meantime the police had been mounting an operation to deal with the law-and-order side of the matter, but it was intended to use persuasion rather than have a confrontation.

"The ministers returned to Salisbury and they believe the situation has been brought under control and that the people are returning to their tribal areas," he said.

"The police are remaining in the area to see that no one disregards the instructions and those who do will be prosecuted. If law and order is not maintained then firm police action is intended."

PRIVATE SECTOR DEEMED VITAL TO SOCIALISM

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 12

[Article by A. J. A. Peck]

[Text] Socialism may be defined as the ordering of an economy in order to achieve maximum economic benefit for all the participants in that economy.

Socialism does not necessitate state ownership of the means of production--indeed, Sweden is an example of an extreme socialist country in which industry is controlled predominantly by private enterprise.

The commonest and most gregarious error made by socialist thinkers is the failure to appreciate that the ideal socialist economy is one in which state enterprise and private enterprise are both utilised to best advantage.

This error is historical in its origin, deriving from the unfounded assumption of early socialist thinkers that private enterprise must of necessity be exploitive by nature.

It is utterly crucial for the future welfare of Zimbabwe that this error be exposed and made glaringly obvrious, so that Zimbabwe may benefit from the advantages of socialism but be spared the disastrous misconceptions so often associated with socialism.

Creates Wealth

The manifest truth is that the major part of private enterprise, so far from being exploitive, creates wealth and employment that did not exist before; and, far from utilising "means of production" that would otherwise be utilised by others, private enterprise creates its own means of production by, for example, building its own factories and importing equipment from other countries.

Supposing, for example, a multi-national company was permitted to establish itself in Zimbabwe to manufacture refined chrome products. It would bring in a great deal of equipment and a group of skilled technicians.

If, for example, it created one million units of wealth in Zimbabwe each year, even if it removed five hundred thousand units of that wealth from Zimbabwe, it would not be "exploiting" Zimbabwe.

It would only be removing wealth that did not exist before the multinational created it: Zimbabwe would be better off by five hundred thousand units of wealth per annum; many Zimbabweans would have jobs that did not exist before; and Zimbabwe, by exporting chrome products instead of chrome, would utilise her basic raw materials to greater advantage.

Similarly, the Zimbabwean enterpreneur, is, as a rule, not exploiting anyone: he is creating wealth and employment that did not exist before, and which would not exist but for his enterprise.

His position is that he is in practice a trustee of certain of the nation's resources.

Fraction

These he uses to create wealth and jobs and incomes for his employees that did not previously exist; any income he may receive is merely a fraction of that new wealth that would not have come into being at all but for his initiative and managerial capabilities; and in any event a minimum of 52 percent of the profits of a company are then taken by the State as taxation, as well as 20 percent of any dividends declared by the company.

Clearly state enterprise must play its role--and in Zimbabwe it always has played its part. The Post Office, the Railways, Colcom and Risco are examples.

Nevertheless, the economy of Zimbabwe could be destroyed unless it is appreciated--as is beginning to be appreciated even in countries like China and Soviet Russia--that any government that endeavours to eliminate private enterprise will inevitably only succeed in deeply injuring if not in destroying, its own economy.

Complex

The reasons for this are quite simple. The art of good management, it has been said, is the art of delegation. A modern economy is so incredibly complex that any government capable of managing every detail of that economy would have to have a mind as powerful, as all-seeing, as ubiquitous, as the mind of God.

No government has such a mind.

The government can define the parameters to which private enterprise must adhere by means of, inter alia, industrial legislation and taxation; but the private entrepreneur should be left to get on with the job.

NKOMO URGES GOVERNMENT TO CONTROL FARM, LAND PRICES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Minister without Portfolio, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday made a strong call for Government control of farm and land prices.

He said the very high prices of commercial farms frustrated any aspiring young black farmers wanting to go into the big commercial farming sector, and the Government itself when buying farms for resettlement.

The prices also frustrated co-operatives which had been set up with a view to buying commercial farms.

"The sellers are demanding exorbitant prices for their land and Government must control the prices so that they are fair for both the purchaser and the sellers," he said.

Some of the farms were even undeveloped and still forested with indigenous trees like mopani and only indigenous grass was growing, he claimed.

"Yet you hear the seller say that his farm is very well developed when all he has been doing was cutting the mopani and sell it as firewood without building dams or planting good trees."

Dr Nkomo was guest speaker at the open day of Hlekweni Rural Training Institute, run by the Friends (Quakers) Association, 12 km from Bulawayo off the Plumtree road.

In a wide ranging one-hour-long speech Dr Nkomo also renewed his call for formation of co-operatives in communal lands.

"The land in the so-called communal lands is badly used. What is needed is not so much of resettlement of the people, but creation of enough grazing land as well as resources to generate cash."

He said by forming co-operatives the people could achieve great success through harnessing rivers to form dams and moving their homes to one place and create grazing land.

"The trouble is that, in all communal lands, homes are dotted all over and it is difficult to supply such people with services like pumped water and adequate roads. The solution is for you people to come together and build in one place, then leave the rest of the land for crops and grazing."

Even if the Government bought all commercial farms and told the people to move on to the farms the dotting of homes everywhere would mean a haphazard system of living.

BOOM IN AFRICAN LITERATURE HAMPERED BY SHORTAGES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 6

[Text] A PROMISED post-independence boom in African literature has been badly hit by a foreign currency and paper shortage.

Scores of new works ranging from collections of poetry to novels have been accepted by publishers but have little chance of reaching the bookshelves until the situation improves.

A major cause of the crisis is the sudden upsurge in paper requirements, particularly for education.

Although booksellers, publishers and printers sounded optimistic about the future, a spokesman for the Umtali Board and Paper Mills, the sole suppliers of paper, said it would take at least three years to correct the paper shortages.

Demand in educational material has far outstripped the supply of paper and with a new syllabus in the pipeline for the entire education system, problems facing the publishers will take a long time to resolve.

In July the Minister of Education, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, said the intake of primary school children had risen from 800 000 to 1,8 million, while the number of Form One pupils for this year had gone up from 17 000 to 80 000.

"This broad base will continue to feature as this year's intake progresses through the upper levels. It means therefore that we have to gear ourselves for these new streams until they go through," one publisher said.

ALLEGATIONS

Two of the country's biggest publishers, Longman and College Press, dismissed allegations by one bookseller that present shortages were a result of complacency on their part because they had not taken the Minister of Education seriously when he indicated there would be a boom in students' enrolment.

"This is totally untrue," the managing director of College Press, Mr Luchi Balarin, said. "I am sure the Ministry of Education is quite aware of our plight. People must realise that we are being bedevilled by factors virtually beyond our control."

College Press, which has its own printing press and receives less than 50 tonnes of paper a month, while Mardon Printers, who print for Longman, receive a monthly 220 tonnes for all requirements — far short of the present levels of demand.

Newspapers were getting more papers than other consumers but, according to a statement early this year by Mr George Capon, the chairman of assessment committee No. 8 of the Industrial Import Control, the country's estimated newsprint needs for this year exceed supply from Umtali Board and Paper Mills by 8 647 tonnes — almost 50 percent of its present capacity. The circulation of the newspapers is badly affected by the shortage of newsprint.

Foreign currency shortages have also hampered the production of more specialised books because the paper has to be imported.

The various problems had caused difficulties in clearing last year's publications, said College Press marketing manager Mr Ben Mugabe. Printing this year's works had only just started.

BACKLOG

Publishing manager for Longman, Miss Marylin Poole, also complained of the problems creating a big backlog of orders running into several thousand books.

She was excited, however, over prospects for books now being written and edited which presented a whole new set of ideas on a wide range of subjects, including social studies, science and history.

"Actually we were working on some of these books long before independence but failed to get approval for them from the then Ministry of Education," she said.

Many of the works, she said, had wide relevance to Southern and Central Africa as a whole.

College Press has also embarked on a training programme, including an advanced course overseas, for African editors who will help map out the changing approach to Zimbabwe's academic and general literature needs.

The publishing house is in the process of producing an African Writers' series including works by authors elsewhere on the continent. It had also published a number of educational books for use in other African countries.

SADCC VENTURE BEGINS TO TAKE SHAPE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 30 Aug 81 p 12

[Text] REGULAR customers of Maputo's foreign exchange shop have recently begun finding Zimbabwean food products on the shelves that used to display South African goods.

This small change illustrates a reality which, slowly, begins to take shape — regular trade between two countries that belong to a greater effort, the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference.

Fifteen months ago the nine heads of state and governments of SADCC met in Lusaka to approve the guiding principles of the new venture: inter-regional co-operation and a reduction of foreign dependence, particularly in relation to South Africa.

Today, out of the 97 transport and communications projects presented at last year's Maputo donors' conference, 23 are already being implemented. This led a top official of Mozambique's Ministry of Ports and Surface Transports to comment: "Things have gone better than we expected," reports Ziana.

Finance has been secured, or is in the process of being secured, for 16 projects.

Among others there are the increase in capacity of Mozambique's Beira port, the rehabilitation of the Mozambique/Swaziland railway station with the establishment of an exchange yard, the construction of a standard B earth station at Beira, the construction of a new airport in Lesotho, the upgrading of the open wire carrier system linking Beira to Umtali, and the upgrading of the Thaba-Tseka-Taung-Mpiti road in Lesotho.

Documentation for 28 other projects has already been forwarded to financiers.

Documentation for a further 12 projects is expected to be given to financiers until mid-September this year, including those for which financing should be secured by then.

A number of countries and international agencies which pledged support for SADCC projects at Maputo's November conference last year, are now involved in the actual mechanisms of project implementation.

Belgium is involved in the rehabilitation of the Nacala-Malawi border rail, and the rehabilitation and doubling of the Beira-Dondo section on the Beira-Umtali line.

Britain is taking part in the improvement of transport and communications systems linking Mozambique to Zimbabwe, including the rehabilitation of the 100 km stretch between Alnada and Machipanda on the Beira-Umtali line.

Australia has come out in support of civil aviation, roads and railways projects, and Brazil is financing feasibility studies and technical assistance.

BAN ON EMIGRANTS' EXPORTING HOUSEHOLD GOODS DISCUSSED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 1]

[Editorial]

[Text]

ON the face of it, the banning of emigrants exporting certain household goods looks irrational in terms of economic laws and in impingement of the emigrants' right to property.

It is easy to accuse Finance Minister Enos Nkala of wanting to force disgruntled people to live in Zimbabwe against their will.

Already the RF Members of Parliament have raised a hue and cry. Their nostrils seem to smell a big rat in the Minister's ban.

The last thing any Government would do is to force people to reside in the country. Forced residents are worse than no residents at all. They are potential or active subverters and saboteurs. They can never be loyal to a country that is keeping them captive, no matter what standard of life they may be enjoying.

So the idea that the Government might be wanting to keep some people in the country by denying them the right to export their property is just out: it is an absurdity.

The reasons for the measure (which we believe came too late) are obvious, and the Minister was not slow to spell them out. It would be an act of irresponsibility on the part of the Minister to do nothing to stop the sustained erosion and depletion of our foreign exchange, and the exporting of most of the furniture, leaving little for local consumption.

It is common knowledge that emigrants were buying more furniture than they needed as a means of dodging the currency control regulations. The goods they exported had an imported content on which foreign exchange was expended.

It means that the Government spent foreign currency on goods that were going to be used in a foreign country by foreign people while its own people were starved of household goods.

The sudden recession in the furniture industry after the ban vindicates the Minister's action. The idea that an industry should be sustained by runaways (transient consumers) is untenable in terms of any concepts of economic development. It should be supported by normal consumers — permanent residents.

The Minister summed it up properly when he said: "We haven't got foreign currency to import all the components needed to replace these goods."

The allegation that there is a smack of racialism in the ban is not factually founded since it affects all emigrants — Zambians, Mozambicans, Batswanas, Tanzanians and South Africans.

The Government has a duty to stop the drain of household goods and the smuggling of currency through disguised means. Zimbabwean goods are for Zimbabweans, first and foremost.

FACTORIES LOSE $1,4M. AFTER FURNITURE BAN

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] FURNITURE retailers around the country had cancelled about $1,4 million worth of orders with Bulawayo manufacturers by Friday — only four days after a Government ban on the export by emigrants of some furniture articles.

This figure was released by Mr Benny Grevler, who is the chairman of the Matabeleland Furniture Manufacturers' Association.

But both Mr Grevler and other furniture executives said only high-quality furniture had been affected.

Said Mr Grevler: "I would estimate the total cost of high-quality furniture orders cancelled since Tuesday to be about $1,4 million. I think factories may have to start laying off staff.

"The whole industry will enter a recession which will affect staff and put up the price of cheap furniture. It will not be profitable to produce cheap furniture at the present prices because one used to compensate the other."

Mr Grevler said a delegation representing furniture manufacturers would see the Government this week. This, he said, would be done through the Salisbury body which will have been briefed by the Bulawayo association.

Salisbury furniture dealers also complained bitterly about the Government's move.

Mr Frank McGran, manager of Bradlows, said several of his customers had cancelled orders since the export ban was announced.

SUCCESS OF SALISBURY SHOW REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] A RECORD 172 000 people attended the Salisbury Show this year—and the crowds were among the best behaved in the show's history, general manager Mr Alan Dawkins said yesterday.

"It has been a very peaceful show, with surprisingly few incidents. I think we had about 40 000 people watching the fireworks display on Friday and yet when it was over they simply dispersed quietly. There wasn't even any jostling at the gates," Mr Dawkins said.

The crowds yesterday were sparse in the morning but increased later. At one point queues of eight people abreast stretched more than 200 metres from one of the entrances, but that was the exception. In most cases there were no queues at all.

Even so, the catering facilities were overwhelmed.

"We've learned a few things from that. We need much larger catering facility areas, more places where a family can sit down after all that walking and have a quiet meal. We'll have to provide more next year, even if it means doing away with some of the existing stands," Mr Dawkins said.

In general, however, people seemed to enjoy themselves. The most popular exhibits for farmers were those of heavy agricultural machinery, despite recurrent grumbling about the unavailability of the machinery.

The tiny Grindlay's Bank stand continued to attract huge crowds thanks to its two star attractions — Baby and Kaponch, the friendly elephant calves. Fed on a steady diet of tree branches and horse pellets, Baby (age 2½) and Kaponch (nine months) sniffed kisses at visitors of all ages.

Also popular were the stands for Government statutory bodies like the Cold Storage Commission and the Natural Resources Board.

"The interest we've seen at those stands is one of the best parts of the show. It means there's communication at all levels between the Government and the people about what the Government is doing," Mr Dawkins said.

HELICOPTERS

Another big draw, attended by President Banana and the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, was the air force helicopter display. The sound of the chopper blades brought crowds running from all over thte showground.

Members of the Mashonaland Skydiver's Club managed to form a four-man canopy stack over the stadium yesterday, despite heavy winds. They landed on the target drop zone, but a fifth man was blown behind the main arena area.

The prize for this year's champion live steer at the Salisbury Show went to Mr Sam Levy, a Salisbury businessman and one of the country's leading breeders of stud stock.

Mr Levy last year scooped all categories for carcasses. This year, show officials said, the standard of competition was among the highest in history and Mr Levy did not place at all in the carcass competition, which was won by Mazoe Estates.

CHANGING SALISBURY'S NAME TO HARARE NEARS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 6

[Text] THE Salisbury Publicity Association is already making plans for Salisbury's future name change to Harare.

T-shirts on sale at the bureau now bear the slogan, Harare-Zimbabwe.

Bulk stationery orders are being withheld and street maps of Greater Salisbury have become a thing of the past. All the bureau can offer tourists at present is a limited number of maps of the city centre.

"We're no longer ordering our stationery in bulk because we're expecting Salisbury to become Harare fairly soon, one of the publicity girls, Miss Kate Holmes, said last week.

"The little booklets containing maps of Salisbury which we normally hand out are not being printed until all street and city name changes have been finalised. But it's rather awkward for us not having them available for tourists," she said.

The association will probably feel the financial pinch of the name change more than most because the symbol "S", which has become their slogan for "Salisbury—The Sunshine City", is scattered throughout the bureau.

The colourful curtains are printed with bold, orange "S" symbols and the neonlight outside bears the same symbol.

"I think it's going to cost us thousands of dollars to change everything, but being the publicity association we'll have to be one of the first to see it's done properly," said Miss Holmes.

BRIEFS

EDUCATION AGREEMENT REACHED--The Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, and UNESCO's director-general, Mr Amadou-Mahtar M'Bow, signed an education agreement in Salisbury yesterday. The agreement called for co-operation between UNESCO and Zimbabwe in the fields of education, science technology, culture, energy, water development, women's affairs and the preservation of historical monuments, including Great Zimbabwe. A national UNESCO commission would be established in Zimbabwe to see that contents of the agreement were carried out, the minister said. Full details of the agreement would be published later, he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 1]

AID FOR FIFTH BRIGADE--The Korean Government had given Zimbabwe $12 million to assist in the training and establishment of the fifth brigade, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, disclosed last week. Addressing a rally at Mrewa on Thursday, Mr Mugabe said the aid was in addition to the 106 Korean military personnel seconded to the Zimbabwean national army to train the brigade at Inyanga. Amid laughter from the crowd, he said: "The brigade will be trained to quench fire." And to the accompaniment of more laughter, a member of the crowd shouted: "In which case we shall call it the fire brigade." The Prime Minister said he was suspicious of people who did not wish to join ZANU (PF), including those who refused to attend ZANU (PF) meetings. He said: "I cannot understand the intentions of people who refuse to join the party that was responsible for the independence and freedom of Zimbabwe. BRITISH TEACHERS--A new group of British teachers began arriving in Zimbabwe last week as part of the Government's bid to ease the country's teacher shortage. About 50 arrived last week, with 130 more due this week. The first group has already been dispatched to schools in Salisbury, Bulawayo, Gatooma, Fort Victoria, Que Que and Plumtree. The teachers were recruited individually over the last few months by a Ministry of Education and Culture team in Britain. They are being employed by the ministry on a non-contract basis, just as if they had been employed locally. The Deputy Minister of Education, Senator Culverwell, said yesterday the overseas recruitment efforts would continue. More teachers could be expected from Britain, Canada and Australia. "The arrival of these teachers is welcome, but our problems are certainly not solved. We still have 14 500 unqualified teachers in Zimbabwe," Senator Culverwell said. "We're now building 35 new secondary schools, with teacher accommodation, in various parts of the country that should be completed by the end of the year. We plan to put one foreign teacher into each of them." [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Aug 81 p 1]

OAU TO SEEK EXPULSION OF SOUTH AFRICA FROM UN

AB271648 Paris AFP in English 1628 GMT 27 Aug 81

[Text] London, Aug 27 (AFP)--Members of the Organization of African Unity will seek the total expulsion of South Africa from the United Nations for its policy towards Namibia and military incursion in Angola, Kenyan Foreign Minister Robert Ouko said here today.

Mr Ouko made his remarks while here at the head of an OAU delegation touring the five countries of the Western contact group on Namibia--Britain, France, West Germany, the United States and Canada--in hopes of speeding the African territory accession to independence.

The Kenyan, also president of the OAU Minister's Council, told a news conference here that the contact group had better step up its pressure on Pretoria to accept United Nations decisions on Namibia or the situation in Western [as received] Africa would become explosive.

He said expulsion of South Africa from the world body was justified because it is continuing to break all these U.N. principles including non-aggression against another state and respect for national integrity.

Mr Ouko, who had lengthy talks today with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, said London was still against the imposition of economic sanctions on South Africa. He said he respected the position, but no price will be too big for Africa to pay for the freedom of Namibia.

The OAU delegation, composed of Mr Ouko, the foreign minister of Zimbabwe, Niger'a, Rwanda and the Algerian ambassador to Ethiopia, has been to Bonn, Paris and London and will leave today for Ottawa and then Washington.

NORTHERN CORRIDOR SYSTEM ACCORD IS TO BE SIGNED

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 14 Aug 81 p 19

/Text/

ACCORDS meant to improve links between member states of the Northern Corridor System (NCS) were expected to be ratified by delegation heads in Mombasa, late Wednesday night.

The NCS states which include Zaire, Uganda, Burundi, Rwanda, Sudan, and Kenya have been holding a conference since last week.

Recommendations include the improvement of rail transport from Mombasa via Kampala to Bujumbura. Delegates have also resolved to give priority to the improvement of roads links between Mombasa to Bujumbura.

The conference also recommended the building of a rail system from Kampala to Bujumbura.

The Mbaraki wharf at Kilindini was endorsed for financing through the European Economic Community in preference of the European Investment Bank.

The conference also suggested to member states to define transportation programmes needing EEC aid.

A Ministry of Transport and Communications senior official Mr. P. S. Kihara, who has been chairing the meeting told the delegates that most of the resolutions reached were encouraging and would solve many problems. It is understood that the resolutions would be endorsed by transport ministers of the respective members states.

Earlier the conference resolved to have common border check-points for joint use by custom officials of bordering nations. They observed that such a move would reduce inter-state smuggling.

The construction of the joint check points would be financed by the EEC and would speed up delivery of transit goods.

On problems of coffee transportation and marketing, the delegates said this aspect was unique to Uganda. They suggested to the Ugandan delegation to look for a solution together with the coffee marketing boards of the neighbouring countries.

RUSSIANS WELCOME IN ANGOLA--Nairobi, 4 Sep (AFP)--The current chairman of the OAU, Daniel Arap Moi, today expressed concern about South Africa's intervention in Angola. Angola, he said, is a sovereign state and has the right to call on any friendly country for help in case of need. If the Russians are invited to fight by the side of the freedom fighters (the SWAPO guerrillas) in order to win independence for Namibia and create a better atmosphere for the Namibian people, they will be welcome, he continued. In a broadcast to the nation over Kenyan Radio on his return to Nairobi after a 4-day visit to France, during which he addressed the UN Conference on less developed countries, Mr Moi stated that Namibia must be free before anything else. The Kenyan head of state also called on the South Africans to uproot apartheid, which he said is a disease, and to facilitate the independence of the Namibian people. COMMENTS ON DACKO'S FALL--Cotonou, 2 Sep (AFP)--In a commentary headlined "In Politics, Appetite Has Its Limits," the government-owned Benin Press Agency has written on the political events in the CAR. It says that Mr David Dacko went the way he came: at gunpoint. According to the Benin Press Agency, his withdrawal was expected several months ago, following the presidential elections in March, which he narrowly won and which brought this unpopular man to power. He was imposed by force by a policy which itself failed. Since that time, the agency continues, Mr David Dacko had no other way out than to hand over power to the most organized force in the country--as is the case in Africa now--which is the army. The Benin Press Agency concludes by saying that by quietly handing over power to General Kolingba, Mr Dacko proved that he understood. He has therefore saved his country from an unnecessary bloodbath. [Text] [AB022112 Paris AFP in French 1439 GMT 2 Sep 81]

CLOUD HANGS OVER NATION'S FUTURE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 9

[Article by Francis Mdlongwa]

[Text]

AS Botswana this month celebrates its 15th independence anniversary, many Batswana will take comfort in the many outstanding achievements, though a cloud hangs over the country's future as the unresolved problem of Namibia takes a new turn.

It has been a hard, long 15 years for the land-locked, desert country of about 820 000. For, at independence from Britain in September 1966, there was virtually nothing one would have called an infrastructure for development.

But with the pragmatic and wise counsel of the lat father-leader, Sir Seretse Khama, Botswana successfully weathered the storms on the way. This despite the fact that it lay between regimes of South Africa and Ian Smith's Rhodesia.

Much of the credit for the country's development must go to Sir Seretse and his dedicated men who carefully steered Botswana through the crucial times of the post-independence era, especially during the protracted fight for Zimbabwe.

Much has been achieved ove the past 15 years, including:

- The opening of diamond and other mines.
- The establishment of the Botswana defence force.
- The creation of the country's first university.
- The launching of a radio station, the country's first newspaper and agency.
- The daunting task of maintaining Rhodesia's thousands of refugees.

Now, as Botswana enters its 16th year of "uhuru", the record of success seems clouded with uncertainties as the liberation war in Namibia and South Africa intensifies.

It is this that mostly worries Dr Quett Masire, the new leader, who is fully aware that however carefully one treads the path of southern African politics, the war in neighbouring countries will eventually involve his land.

Already there are about 1 000 refugees in the country, most of them having fled the oppressive policies of South Africa, and a few from Namibia and Angola.

Now it may be just refugees, but as the liberation struggle escalates it may become increasingly difficult for Botswana to continue maintaining its moderate stance and not allowing guerillas to use the country as a springboard for attacks against the Pretoria regime.

Even if this were not to happen, Pretoria may still launch its "hot pursuit" raids into Botswana.

Gaborone is anxiously watching South Africa's military raids into Angola, and fears it's only a matter of time before the war spills across its borders.

But even the problem of refugees alone poses difficulties. Recently some of them were alleged to be getting themselves involved in crime, a situation which has led the Botswana minister of information, Mr Daniel Kwelagobe, to declare that Gaborone may have to review its policy of giving them sanctuary.

A top government official commented in Gaborone last week: "Some of these so-called refugees seem to be taking our hospitality too far. We never had any serious crimes such as murder in this country until they came.

"But this is not to say that they are involved, for it could be that some weapons were left in private hands when Zimbabwe became independent."

A Voice in the Wilderness Aims for the World

But whatever happens, one thing is clear. Botswana must brace itself for more victims of apartheid who will continue to flood the country. As the struggle intensifies, so will the refugee numbers increase.

This thorny issue aside, President Masire must prepare for harder times as he tries to balance the country's huge foreign reserves and prosperity for a few on one hand against more jobs for the people and a more equitable system of income distribution.

This will mean decentralising the country's industries and developing the rural areas to slow down the influx to towns.

During my visit to Botswana last week there were no signs to suggest that Dr Masire's newly-found power was being threatened by the three existing opposition parties.

He is firmly in control of affairs and, if anything, his position can only become progressively stronger as Botswana approaches its sixth general election in 1984.

What is not clear are the intentions of Brigadier Ian Khama, eldest son of Sir Seretse. As Botswana's second-in-command of the defence forces, he seems to wield considerable influence.

A local Botswana journalist commented last week: "There are some people, perhaps mostly the Bamangwato (Sir Seretse's tribe), who still feel that Dr Masire is only a caretaker president, and that Brigadier Ian Khama is the natural leader."

SO few countries in the Third World are endowed with efficient mass communications media which reach out to the people, and even less so the vast 582 000 km² that make up Botswana with its scattered population of 820 000.

However, the country's Press came of age recently with the establishment of the Botswana Press Agency (BOPA), a move that set Botswana on the road to self-sufficiency in the news media.

It was a great step forward for a country that had to rely mostly on South African newspapers, which circulate in Gaborone, for information about other nations and itself.

Fifteen years after independence, Botswana still had one newspaper — a four-page tabloid, that scantily reached the estimated 35 percent of the country's literates.

The Daily News, published by the Government daily in both English and Setswana, has a combined circulation of 9 000 and is given free.

Radio Botswana, the major means of communication, has still to improve its reception for the Batswana living in the remote Kalahari desert and similar places.

There is a monthly magazine — Kutlwano (understanding) — which is also published by the Government.

But with the establishment of BOPA in February the situation will change dramatically. The agency will not only report on local news for the Batswana, but will give the outside world the "other side" of the story about the country, as seen by local journalists.

Mr Paul Rantao, the young Motswana former editor of the state-run Daily News, and now one of the three key people overseeing the operations of BOPA, says the agency will, like Ziana, act as a clearing house for all local and foreign news.

The agency, which already subscribes to the British wire service, Reuter, will seek closer links with African news organisations, including Ziana, in line with the creation of the Pan-African News Agency (PANA).

The other brains behind BOPA are Mrs Melda Mathe, director of information and Botswana's former High Commissioner to Brussels, and a Malawian, Mr Al Osman, training officer in the department of information and broadcasting since 1976. He is now chief officer for BOPA.

"These two people were the driving forces behind the successes that we have made. They worked hard and their efforts are now paying off," says Mr Rantao, a journalism graduate of the University of Nairobi, who also holds a degree from America.

Now BOPA's principal officer, he says he expects the agency to be fully operational by 1982, although it is faced with a shortage of skilled journalists.

The agency, however, expects a UNESCO expert soon who will advise on various technical aspects and firmly put BOPA on the international news map.

PRESIDENT ON NEED FOR UNITY

EA282159 Nairobi Domestic Service in Swahili 0859 GMT 28 Aug 81

[Speech by President Daniel Moi at Mombasa Agricultural Show 28 August--live]

[Excerpts] I want to add that when I resolved to ban all tribal organizations I did not do so lightly. I had in mind the unity of all the citizens of Kenya. Our unity is our shield, without seeking tribalism. That is to say that such groups as Gema, Akamba Union, Kalenjun Union, Abaluhya Association and Een Mijikenda and all others, I meant all of these when I asserted that I did not want to hear of tribal groups. Nor can any leader separate himself, claiming to be the protagonist of this or that tribe. If you are the leader of a district, then it will be through the ruling party, Kanu. There is no other way. You can be the Kanu spokesman in your district.

You can only be a district spokesman if you are a leader of substance in the district. So I address you leaders by saying that there are many problems in this world today. Let us not seek many paths to leadership. Leadership is available and the citizens are the only judges of whether the leaders are doing right or wrong.

At this moment, leaders, I speak the truth even if the truth is unpalatable. [Applause] Say the truth and it will uplift you. If you want to be a troublemaker or a loudmouth then you will not get very far because the people desire progress. Therefore I tell all leaders to have unity uppermost in their minds and that we lead the people knowing that Kenya is one and the people are united.

What I have just said is of paramount importance and must be taken accordingly, as I said 2 or 3 years ago. Regardless of our stand or ethnicity we are all part of Kenya. It has also become important to realize that Kenya is also a part of the world.

Therefore we are all members of one world community which can continue to exist by agreeing to have one aim and by cooperating in a voluntary spirit.

PRESIDENT MEETS WITH CHADIAN MINISTER

EA271622 Nairobi Domestic Service in English 1400 GMT 27 Aug 81

[Text] The current chairman of the OAU, his excellency President Daniel Arap Moi, today at State House, Nairobi, received and held talks with the special envoy of President Goukouni Oueddei of Chad. The envoy, Mr (Facho Balan), who is the Chadian minister for works, briefed President Moi of his country's stand on the last June Nairobi OAU resolution on Chad which spelled out the immediate need for a lasting peaceful solution to the Chadian internal problem.

The chadian envoy said that Chad had accepted the OAU resolution and pleaded for immediate implementation of the conditions which, he said, would bring about the reconstruction of his country's economy. President Moi praised the current administration in Chad for accepting the OAU resolution and appealed to African states to assist Chad in her fervent desire to realize peace and stability which will bring eventual happiness to the people of the area.

The president pointed out that among the issues covered in the resolution were the drafting of an OAU pan-African peace-keeping force to replace foreign troops currently in the territory, the need for the international community to assist Chad in the reconstruction of essential services and an immediate step toward holding national and democratic elections for the formation of a representative government. President Moi said the OAU secretariat was in the process of writing letters to various African states requesting them to send troops to Chad to form the pan-African peace-keeping force. The pan-African peace-keeping force will also be charged with the responsibility of training a national military force for Chad, the president said.

The meeting was also attended by ministers of state in the president's office, Mr G. G. Kariuki and Mr Nicholas Biwott, an assistant minister for foreign affairs, Mr Ezekiel Mweu, the permanent secretary for foreign affairs, Mr Joe Muchemi and other government officials.

AID AGREEMENTS WITH FRANCE--Antananarivo, 27 Aug (AFP)--Rakotovao Razakaboana, Malagasy finance and planning minister, and Claude Lechiguero, chief of mission of the French Aid and Cooperation Fund (FAC), signed three loan agreements yesterday. The three agreements amount to 540 million Malagasy francs (FR 10.8 million). This FAC aid will contribute to the development of cotton production in Madagascar, through the improvement of rural feeder roads, the establishment of a professional training center and a pilot sawmill for the exploitation of pine wood as well as the improvement of public health by providing drugs. These new loan agreements which follow the meeting of the French-Malagasy joint commission in Antananarivo last October, bring to 895 million Malagasy francs (FR 17.9 million) the total amount of the FAC nonrepayable commitments in Madagascar for 1981. MEANS PROPOSED TO ESCAPE IMPERIALIST ECONOMIC DOMINATION

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 28 Aug 81 p 6

[Article by D.S. Bruno: "Prices of Raw Materials: Weapons in the Economic War"]

[Excerpts] While Reagan is busy theatrically flinging around the role of the United States as defender of Western civilization, and multiplies the appeals to a crusade against communism, imperialism is launching its genuine "nuclear weapons": total all-around economic war against the small nations and especially the micro-powers that are part of the Third World.

Only this can be the true explanation for the scandalous drops registered in the prices of such products as oil, coffee, molasses and sisal on the international market, besides the veiled threats and the very concrete projects that U.S. imperialism is carrying out in the Middle East, such as, for instance, assistance to the Zionists, or in Africa with the work of the Pretoria racists.

Indeed, the Pentagon's scurrilous operations should not prevent us from noticing a much more dangerous activity that truly constitutes the most important goal of imperialism: economic domination of the weaker countries, beginning with the underdeveloped nations.

However, already developed countries such as, for instance, France, Japan or even Great Britain are also included in this goal. Reagan's pressure on Mitterrand to control certain elements of his government is certainly not accidental.

Washington's aggressiveness since Reagan took over the White House can only be carried out if it rests on the foundation of effective economic domination, so that submission by force can be complemented by the formation of docile governments that will accept this force. It is not possible for Reagan to directly threaten Mozambique with weapons, because, among other things, the OAU--despite the various options to development it has chosen--would not accept such a stance and would openly condemn it. However, if a number of governments were financially strapped and dependent on U.S. good will to survive, the OAU's position vis-a-vis military bestiality would be more tolerant.

And how is U.S. economic domination carried out? Through the direct domination of such puppet governments as Chile, and of Nazi or extreme-right allies directly supported by the U.S., like South Africa and Israel.

However, the guarantee for the worldwide expansion of imperialism, which presupposes the dominant position of one of its elements (in this case, the United States, as the strongest one) is the centralization of power and the control of financial capital at first, followed by the export of imperialism under the guise of investments. We are now in this second phase, indeed, at its highest point (perhaps already in decadence).

The exportation of these monetary funds is accompanied by the wholesale export of manufactured articles, especially those made by light industry.

We must not be taken in by the fact that an investment is not made directly by the United States, or that certain products do not bear the mark "Made in U.S.A." When a country has reached the imperialistic stage of the United States, its main sources of earnings are derived from companies that no longer have a national character. They can be likened to the tentacles of a monster, whose head cannot be seen but from where commands are issued, and to which the benefits gatherd by the suckers will be returned. At this time, the strategy of economic violence is activating one of its processes: a drop in the prices of basic raw materials, in which are included all the results of human activity that have not been industrially processed.

Given the fact that the only (or almost only) goods the financially weaker countries can exchange are raw materials, since they lack the ability to process them themselves, these are subject to the decisions and prices established by the United States: after all, Americans are the biggest purchasers, either through U.S. companies or through Western or Japanese companies they directly control. And if agricultural or mining products are not very highly valued, industrial products are the most difficult to acquire or are sold through astronomically high loans which increase the degree of dependence of the dominated countries, to the point of sometimes paralyzing a certain nation to which imperialist support is cut off.

How can one find a way out of this impasse?

The most complete and efficient way is to progressively abandon the capitalist field and evade its economic strategy. The second solution is a search for alliances with the weaker links of the capitalist system which, at times, find themselves in opposition to the centers of domination (this is happening now with France and, to a certain extent, with Japan, the Scandinavian countries and others--this spectrum varies with day-to-day situations within imperialism), attempting to obtain from them the technological support needed by underdeveloped countries to attain a modicum of industrialization. Were this solution to be chosen exclusively, it would never lead to a complete escape from imperialist domination. A third solution, therefore, is the establishment of regional blocs with intertwining alliances on the basis of mutual interests, geo-political conditions and sectors of production of raw materials (for instance, the oil-producing countries), that would find the tools for a common struggle.

This last case is what lets us notice better that partial solutions not based on the definition of the problem in terms of a class struggle are like snakes that bite their own tails and devoure themselves. In the struggle to upgrade their raw material, the oil-producing countries imposed the price of their product, raising its value to the point of initially restricting the control exercised by the Western multinationals. But this did not last long and soon, the profits of the great economic powers rose astronomically. If, on the one hand, this aggravated the crisis within the capitalist countries, it also took a heavy toll from Third World countries and the working classes. Today, when the levels of consumption are remaining constant and profits must be maintained, producing countries must lower the price of their raw material if they wish to sell it without a loss. And who will suffer the most from this crisis in the last analysis? Certainly not the feudal lords of the Arab emirates and not the reigning bourgeoisie of Venezuela and of some African countries, which have their riches ensured in good U.S. and European banks.

CONSENSUS ON ELECTION IN TWO YEARS APPEARS TO BE EMERGING

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Aug 81 pp 1-2

/Editorial/

/Text/

A new consensus seems to be emerging that an internationally-supervised election is on the cards for SWA within the next 18 months to two years.

Figures speculating on this include the West German Ambassador to the UN, Baron Rudi von Wechmar, the Director of the Africa Institute, Dr Erich Leistner, and even the SA Foreign Minister, Mr Pik Botha.

Certainly an unlikely lot.

We wish they were right, but somehow we have the feeling that they are wrong.

True, Mr Botha did say that an election was only possible provided that all went well and agreements were honoured.

He also pointed out that there were still numerous obstacles.

The biggest obstacle of course, in our view, is that an election is impossible unless both Swapo and the DTA can be convinced simultaneously that they will win. Indeed, winning is precisely what suits them to understand as being a free and fair election and on this score they will bargain ad infinitum.

Besides, they are fully aware that they can exploit delays endlessly.

Swapo, for its part, knows only too well that the OAU, Eastern bloc and UN will not force it into an unenviable position; they have far too much to lose in the long term by doing so.

Equally, the DTA is well aware that the SA Government is reluctant to hand over SWA to Swapo on a platter.

In the middle are the Reagan and Thatcher governments, trying to set up the rules and a time schedule for a fair election.

Their motives are honourable: to allow democracy to prevail, to ensure stability in Southern Africa and if possible keep the Reds out.

The problem is that these ends cannot necessarily be reconciled with the all-or-nothing desires of SWA's two major political groups.

The real issue therefore is not about cricket, it is about winners and losers, about survival and death.

And this is purely one dimension of the obstacles mentioned by Mr Botha.

BLACK, BROWN REACTION TO THRUST INTO ANGOLA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Lehmann Sedi: "What the Black and Brown Man Feels About the Thrust Into Angola"]

[Text]

OFFICIAL reaction to follow-up operations in Angola by the South African Security Forces has been heard from all over the world.

But what does the Black and the Coloured man on the street feel about the issue and all it's implications?

Yesterday the Windhoek Advertiser undertook a survey and found that there are widely conflicting views from members of the public.

The majority of the people the Advertiser spoke to feel that the operations could have serious consequences, while others were totally against the fact that SA had crossed Angola's border.

A certain percentage had no comment at all, while there was even an accusation from one that the media had misled the public on the whole issue.

● "We can definitely expect..." one young man said, using a word that cannot be printed.

"Everybody is proud of what is his and will always be ready to defend what is dear to him."

● "This was a calculated act of aggression" was the terse comment from another adult.

● Yet another very young man commented "It is a horrible thing when a sovereign country is invaded by another country and that the invading country should have the audacity to dictate terms on which they are fighting the Angolan Army."

● A 24-year-old Coloured woman expressed her disappointment at what had happened and added "But I am helpless. There is nothing that I can change."

There were some people who were totally ignorant of any so-called "invasion" and who asked where the newspaper had obtained it's information.

● "If South Africa protects the Namibian people, they should be condemned for invading Angola. If Angola retaliates, this may result in a fullscale war," was the angry comment from yet another.

● "No killing can be justified," was the comment from a middle-aged man, adding that no killing could be justified either by Swapo or South Africa.

"I have family in Angola and both guilty and innocent are going to die. This is why I condemn their invasion."

● A elderly taxi-driver asked why South Africa resorted to this act.

"There is still a possibility of peaceful change and for this reason I cannot understand why.

Resolution 435 still stands and South Africa should rather agree to it."

● Another comment came from a youth who said "South Africa has proved beyond all doubt that she is not a peace-loving country".

● "It was inevitable. But I don't think that it will develop into a conventional war.

● "I am not aware of whether it was an invasion or hot pursuit," another said, and refused to comment.

● A 32-year-old man said "The South African invasion was forewarned. The public was told that the raids could escalate, but the pro-South African press misled the reading public.

"Now the reading public is faced with the harsh reality of war."

MINISTERS' COUNCIL STUDIES PROVISION FOR NON-ETHNIC GROUP

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 20 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by David Pieters: "12th Group Hoax To Be Dismantled"/

/Text/

THE MINISTERS' Council is now taking another look at Proclamation AG 8 of 1980 with a view to its revision so that the non-ethnic Twelfth Population Group can finally be given legal substance.

This emerged last night at a meeting of the Namibian Educational Forum.

Consistent public pressure during recent weeks has led to the discovery of a "technical flaw" in the Proclamation concerning the legal status of the Twelfth Population Group and it is one of the aspects likely to be changed in the foreseeable future.

At the meeting last night, Secretary for Finance, Dr Johan Jones corrected the guest speaker Dr Jan Spies, Editor of Die Republikein, on the question of a person's freedom of choice to be registered as a member of the controversial Twelfth Population Group.

The Windhoek Advertiser made it publicly known two weeks ago that no person resident in SWA can acquire reclassification of their ethnicity at will, after certain Whites had been refused registration from their ethnic group classification into the 12th group by the Department of Civic Affairs and Manpower in terms of AG 8.

Dr Jones confessed last night that two weeks ago when he answered questions regarding the provisions for reclassification in terms of AG 8 as a guest speaker of the Namibian Educational Forum, he was still under the misapprehension that people in SWA could exercise a free choise in the matter.

"It is a technical fault in the law, as a result of what happened here that night," Dr Jones informed Dr Spies referring to the previous meeting of the Forum, that the matter is now being investigated by the Ministers' Council."

A CHANGE

Dr Jones said that the content of AG 8 relating to the so-called 12th population group which is not mentioned by name in the proclamation but is defined indirectly as a residual category, "is one of the aspects in which there might come a change in AG 8 within the foreseeable future."

Dr Jones explained that he had consulted with the Central Government's legal staff and had discovered that what was originally intended by AG 8 with reference to the 12th group, was in fact not promulgated because of a "technical mistake" in the process of writing the law.

AG 8 had also originally been conceived by the person who wrote it as a law which could be changed monthly or even weekly during the first few years after its promulgation, since all the implications of the said proclamation could not have been predicted.

CONFUSED

"In terms of the original concept of the proclamation, the present legal position is totally confused," Dr Jones said.

He referred to the fact that AG 8 was designed as a constitution while at the same time being a constitution during a transitional period of government.

He cautioned that there were groups in SWA who were not yet incorporated in the present constitutional system and sudden changes in AG 8 would also undermine certain groups' security expected from a constitution be it an interim one.

Both Dr Spies as well Dr Jones agreed that there were certain aspects of AG 8 which should apparently be changed. They did not specify.

Dr Kenneth Abrahams, who is on the executive of the Forum, was responsible for evoking the impromptu exchange between the guest speaker and Dr Jones who attended last night as a member of audience.

Dr Spies delivered an address last night titled "Ethnicity: Politics or Culture?" and during question time, was at one stage strongly challenged by Dr Abrahams who said "ethnicity is being forced down our throats."

It was in response to this challenge that Dr Spies came to realise that AG 8 as it stood did not make any provision for reclassification at will.

"I am very pleased to hear from DTA sources that certain parts of AG 8 will be changed," said Dr Abrahams.

He continued: "I would like to challenge the Government to create the 12th group and then to see what happens. I can assure you that in 12 months most Namibians will reclassify themselves if given the legal right to do so."

EDITOR IS SENTENCED FOR VIOLATING SECRETS ACT

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

WINDHOEK: A Johannesburg newspaper sub-editor, Winston James Beaumont, 23, was on Friday granted bail of R5 000 in the Windhoek Regional Court after earlier being sentenced to three years imprisonment for contravening the Official Secrets Act.

The Magistrate, Mr A Bouwer, granted bail on condition that Beaumont, a sub-editor for the Star Newspaper, reports twice weekly to John Vorster Square Police Station in Johannesburg and surrender his passport to the State.

The State Prosecutor, Mr J J Strydom, had requested bail of R5 000 on the grounds that he had information that Beaumont had intended fleeing the country if found guilty.

He said a person who had to remain unidentified for security reasons had overheard Beaumont say he would go to Britain or Botswana, where he had relatives.

The informant had also heard Beaumont say that he would contact a British military attache, who had a job for him.

In his judgment, Mr Bouwer said the Court could come to no other conclusion than that Beaumont had made extracts for personal use of call signals and radio frequencies from secret defence documents.

The extracts had been compactly folded and placed in a personal file, probably to make detection more difficult, Mr Bouwer said.

Evidence before the Court was that extracts of the documents were found in Beaumont's luggage last year, the day after he had completed a tour of military duty in the signal corps at the Gobabis Military Camp in eastern SWA.

Beaumont was employed in the radio room and for a brief spell operated the camp's telephone exchange.

Mr Bouwer said the officer in charge of the signal corps at the time had not yet achieved full officer status but that did not detract from his competency in terms of SADF standing orders to classify documents.

The officer had compiled a set of signal instructions for use during the first three months of last year. The signal instructions, which contained call signals and radio frequencies, were classified secret.

"The accused's own evidence made it clear that the extracts (found in his luggage) were made from Signal Instruction 1 of 1980," Mr Bouwer said.

"As such, the document compiled by him (Beaumont) itself became a secret document, because it contained classified information."

Mr Bouwer rejected an explanation by Beaumont that he had made notes of radio equipment and call signals to hand to a superior officer for a planned military operation and that the note sheets later became mixed up with his personal correspondence without Beaumont's knowledge.

STRANGE

It is strange that the accused, according to his own evidence, worked on a correspondence course almost day and night, yet did not come across the (two note sheets) in his folder," the Magistrate said.

One of the note sheets was soiled which gave the appearance that it had been handled often. Both sheets had been carefully folded.

"It appears unlikely that documents so meticulously folded can find their way into the accused's personal file the way he said they did," Mr Bouwer said.

"The accused struck the Court as an intelligent man and it is strange that he was so evasive when asked whether the provisions of the Official Secrets Act had been drawn to his attention in 1979."

One of the documents, a neater and more complete version of the other, had a name roughly encircled in pencil.

"Why was it necessary to circle the name if (or not) was intended to be a neater copy for handing to the superior officer?" the Magistrate asked.

The only inference to be drawn from the evidence was that Beaumont had not made notes for a senior officer, but for himself.

OBVIOUS LIES

"The improbabilities, contradictions and obvious lies in the accused's evidence, render the accused's evidence unacceptable," Mr Bouwer said.

He found Beaumont guilty as charged.

After a brief adjournment, Beaumont admitted he had received a suspended sentence in 1979 after being convicted of a similar offence. The sentence of three years had been suspended for five years. — Sapa

NEGLECTED GERMAN COMMUNITY MAY BREAK WITH DTA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text]

Obviously the SA Government doesn't care a hoot (or isn't prepared to interfere), but whatever, SWA's constitutional powers are still in its hands and it can do something.

Some will say that the RP acting on behalf of the DTA has done much to attain equal status for German. We contest that. Our contention is that the RP and the DTA have done something, but by and large are dragging their feet.

The consequences could of course still become serious for the RP and the DTA.

The other area that is extremely touchy in IG-DTA relations is the pace of change in SWA.

Once the new dispensation was mooted and shortly after accepted by most Germans, the German community became extremely enthusiastic about it. Perhaps because they felt culturally suppressed for so long. The Germans however are now getting impatient because the goods are not being delivered fast enough; hence the grwoing uneasiness with both the DTA and the SA Government.

The demands by delegates at the IG congress to break away from the DTA on this score were both considerable and significant and cannot be ignored.

Indeed, these strains can be expected to continue, and will probably intensify.

The DTA in turn cannot afford to alienate itself from the German rank and file and will certainly have to review the matter very seriously.

The Germans may not be strong in numbers when the entire DTA is considered, but they are strong in spirit and resources.

The IG has given the DTA a chance for another year; lets hope that the DTA in turn will come up to scratch and not seek scapegoats along the way.

Unfortunately, that is too often the strategy.

OFFICIAL SA SILENCE ON ANGOLA RAID IS LAMENTED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Aug 81 pp 1-2

/Editorial/

/Text/

Never let it be said that SWA Territory Force Chief, General Charles Lloyd, never warned the public about the latest developments: exactly a fortnight ago he was reported in this newspaper as having said that the Security Forces in SWA were preparing for an intensification of the military conflict in the war zone.

Not only did he tell that to the local press; he also told it to a large number of visiting correspondents.

Going by General Lloyd's statement a fortnight ago, the latest reported drive into Angola has three purposes:

- Hot pursuit;
- The smashing of Swapo bases;
- And the destruction of the Sam 3 and Sam 6 radar system.

The great danger of the conflict is that it is no longer one between SA and Swapo; it is fast developing into a battle between North and South, East and West.

This newspaper thus again endorses the view that it is imperative that the Reagan initiative on SWA succeeds in the near future, in spite of the doubts that we have expressed about its likely success.

Having pointed out General Lloyd's warning, we are nevertheless disappointed that the SA Government has played such a low profile on the matter during the past 24 hours.

We would have hoped to have at least heard something from the PM Mr Piet Botha during his key address to the House of Assembly yesterday afternoon, and failing that, to have received a statement from either the Minister of Defence or Minister of Foreign Affairs.

To say that this would have been of help to Swapo or the MPLA is nonsense; news of the SADF's alleged drive into Angola constitutes banner headlines throughout the world.

If anything, that sort of silence enhances SA's image as the polecat of the world and certainly the aggressor in this instance.

We would have thought that the propaganda battering that SA is presently taking over the Cape squatters is more than enough!

PROFESSOR PROJECTS TRANSKEI-LIKE INDEPENDENT SWA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 2 Sep 81 p 3

/Text/

JOHANNESBURG: SWA may be headed for a Transkei-style independence, Professor Wolfgang Thomas, head of the Department of Economics at the University of Transkei, who has written publications on SWA said yesterday.

Addressing the conference of the SA Institute of International Affairs in Johannesburg, Professor Thomas said it was reasonable to expect the DTA Government to push hard for Transkei-style independence.

"This would not receive international recognition except from South Africa and other independent homelands such as Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and, shortly, Ciskei.

"It would also mean the continuation of the present war against Swapo and would mean the deterioration of relationships with Botswana," he added.

Professor Thomas said such a government would eventually seek the test of an open election.

Economic prospects for such a government were gloomy. Without internatoinal recognition, it would remain dependent on South African aid and could expect nothing from Western countries.

"But should this interim government evolve into internationally-recognised independence under a moderate government, the improvement of foreign relations would be far-reaching," he said.

As a Transkei-type country, SWA had the advantages of a better infrastructure and more skilled labour as well as a more diversified economic structure.

On the other hand it had the disadvantages of a "war of liberation" on its northern border.

He said it was also subject to international pressure, while the majority of Whites had not accepted non-racialism which had been accepted in the other homelands.

He said the potential made SWA superior to other homelands and should help the country move to genuine non-racialism.

"If such progress is fast enough, the support given by the Western countries to Resolution 435 may actually soften and war activities in the north may also decelerate.

"Most important of all, however, it may be easier all over the country to mobilise political support for a genuinely multi-racial and politically-moderate reform government," he said. -- Sapa

BRIEFS

ELECTION BY 1982--The internal parties of SWA should prepare themselves for an election under international supervision within the near future--possibly even before the end of 1982. This was the opinion expressed by Dr Erich Leistner, Director of the Africa Institute, when he delivered a lecture at the congress of the Interessengemeinschaft Deutschsprachiger Sudwester in Windhoek last week. At this stage, he said, South Africa was doing everything in its power to defeat SWAPO before such an election and to promote important socio-economic and political development in the Territory. If SWAPO did emerge as the victor of such an international election, it would have to be accepted and future relations between SWA and SA would depend on whether SA's interests were being threatened. Although the result of the 1978 elections had made people feel optimistic about the strength of the democratic parties, Dr Leistner pointed out that Robert Mugabe's victory in Zimbabwe last year should drive home the possibility of a SWAPO victory. Referring to a colleague's opinion (Mr Andre du Pisani), he said that SWAPO's chances to win an international election were better in fact than the DTA's because: SWAPO is clearly identified with emotional aims such as colonisation and independence. Traditionally SWAPO enjoys greater support from the largest ethnic group, being the Owambos and SWAPO has greater support because of the neocolonial stigma attached to the DTA. /Text/ /Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Aug 81 p 3/

OVER-REACTION EXPECTED--Windhoek--SWA was used to foreign over-reaction when strikes against terrorists were undertaken, a member of the Constitutional and Security Committee of the Territory's ruling Ministers' Council, Dr Ben Africa, said in Windhoek this week. The response to the step taken by the Security Forces in Angola came as no surprise, Dr Africa said in an interview with the SWABC. "In the light of the support offered SWAPO by African states, nobody can blame the Security Forces for their action," he said. /Text/ /Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Aug 81 p 2/

'DIVIDE AND RULE' SITUATION--The Mbanderu Council of Chief Nguvauva II is to approach the South African Prime Minister to discuss what it calls "the wilful assault of the rights of its people. In a statement released to the press, the Council states that to date all attempts by the Council to discuss the issue with the Administrator General have been in vain, with no worthwhile results being achieved. "The South African Government, via the Office of the AG is maliciously forcing the Mbanderus to resort under the Herero authorities--creating a situation of divide and rule." The Council states that while South Africa cries out against a biased United Nations, it is guilty of the same offence. "This cat and mouse game between the AG and the Herero authority has now made it imperative for the Mbanderu Council to send a delegation to the South Africa Prime Minister." Depending on the talks with the SA Prime Minister, the delegation of the Mbanderus will also probably see representatives of the US and Germany in Cape Town or Pretoria. /Text/ /Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 25 Aug 81 p 3/

INFORMATION BLOCK--Windhoekers were up in arms yesterday afternoon over the dearth of information on the latest military developments. Said one leading journalist: "Why don't the authorities here play it straight?" The journalist said that she took exception to the fact that Southwesters were always last to hear about things that affected them most. "Being devious as the military authorities were in 1975 makes people fearful and insecure," she said. Another leading Windhoeker who phoned in to the Advertiser said that the block on information was bad for morale. Some journalists were uptight because they couldn't understand why the Defence PR department in Windhoek was given inferior status. "The SADF is not prepared to comment on every allegation made by the Angolans," a spokesman said this afternoon. "It is known that operations are continuously being mounted against SWAPO in follow-up operations. Full stop." /Text/ /Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Aug 81 p 3/

SEYCHELLOIS GIVE WARM GREETING TO INDIAN PREMIER

Victoria NATION in English 10 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Article by Rene Morel]

[Text]

THE FEW showers that fell yesterday morning could not dampen the enthusiasm of the Seychellois people as they gave the Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, and her delegation a warm and hearty reception during her four-hour official visit to Seychelles.

Stepping off the special Air India plane, Mrs. Gandhi was greeted by President Albert René to a salute of Young Pioneers. Two of the young militants stepped on to the red carpet to tie a red scarf around Mrs. Gandhi's neck and present her with flowers before the two leaders walked to the dais, where they stood to attention as the Police band played Fier Seychellois (the Seychelles national anthem) and the Indian national anthem.

Before being presented to members of the SPPF Central Executive Committee, ministers and foreign diplomats, the Indian Prime Minister inspected a guard of honour mounted by the Seychelles People's Defence Forces while scores of Indian nationals and residents were filling the security area to greet her.

Along the route from the airport to State House, hundreds of people including many schoolchildren lined the roadside to welcome Mrs. Gandhi. They cheered and waved the Seychellois and Indian national flags as the motorcade sped towards Victoria. Photos of the Indian Prime Minister and the Seychellois leader were displayed all along the route.

Later at State House, President René told his Indian guest that she was very popular in Seychelles, a fact that was proven again by cheering crowds as the motorcade drove along the Sans Souci road from State House to the National Youth Service Village at Port Launay — a venue that has become a regular call for important guests in Seychelles.

Once again the young students at the Village gave their best to welcome a national leader. Apart from providing a youthful atmosphere, they also played soothing music while lunch was being served.

On the way back to the airport, the motorcade chose the Montagne Posée route, allowing Mrs. Gandhi to be seen by more people and also letting her see a greater part of the island.

Later, at the airport's VIP lounge, she said she was enchanted at being able to visit Seychelles for a second time — the first visit was a shorter one in 1976. She said she felt as though she was in a big garden and would be delighted to return.

President René has already extended another invitation to Mrs. Gandhi, hoping next time she will have more time to relax among the country's attractions.

Mrs. Gandhi's plane left at 3.15 p.m. for Nairobi, where she is heading her country's delegation to the United Nations conference on new and renewable energy resources.

'Cooperation Is the Key'

THE Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, said that the voice of Third World countries would be much stronger and more effective if the developing countries explored more possible avenues of cooperation among themselves, so that each country would become more self-reliant economically.

"It is a difficult world we live in," Mrs. Gandhi said yesterday morning during the meeting between her delegation and that of President René at State House." That is why friendship and understanding are so important and critical."

Mrs. Gandhi said Seychelles and India were doing all they could to strengthen the friendship.

The Indian leader decribed Indo-Seychellois relations as being very friendly and said she wished to see them develop into stronger and closer cooperation.

She described the opportunity of meeting President René and his colleagues and having talks with them as a useful one.

The meeting of the two leaders at State House also demonstrated that South-South cooperation is alive. An agreement worth R. 17.75 million — the result of President René's visit to India last year — was signed by the Principal Secretary for Planning and Development, Mr. Robert Grandcourt, and the Indian High Commissioner to Seychelles, Mr. A. Gonzales. The money will be spent on housing.

In this statement of welcome to the Indian guests, President René thanked the Indian government for the help provided to Seychelles, particularly in the housing programme.

President René is also a great believer in cooperation between developing nations and this has already been in evidence in the many visits he has made to neighbouring countries, including India, during the four years of his presidency.

Mr. René said it was a great joy for the Seychellois people to welcome Mrs. Gandhi to their country.

In the airport VIP lounge later, Mrs. Gandhi held a press conference where she answered the following questions:

QUESTION: It was announced today in Washington that President Reagan has given the go-ahead for the manufacture of the neutron bomb, which has the capability of destroying human life while keeping buildings in place. What are your reactions to this in view of the fact that Dr. Waldheim declared only hours before that tension in the world is at the moment at its highest since the Cuban crisis?

MRS. GANDHI: Tension is indeed at its highest and I think the more we are going for sophisticated armaments, the greater will be the tension. India has always stood for disarmament, especially for nuclear disarmament, because we feel that the world today has the knowledge and capacity to create a better life for all the millions of its inhabitants. Unfortunately, even now the strength is going more into instruments of destruction rather than construction and for the higher evolution of man.

QUESTION: Mrs. Gandhi, how does the Indian government view the continued militarisation of the Indian Ocean by extra-regional powers? What are your hopes in this respect and how do you intend to have India's wishes implemented?

MRS. GANDHI: India has expressed its viewpoint very clearly and firmly that it would like the ocean to be a zone of peace and, as you know, all the littoral countries agree on this matter. But there is not much we can do apart from protesting.

QUESTION: From tomorrow onwards you will be attending the United Nations conference on alternative sources of energy being held in Nairobi. Your personal participation implies that you attach a lot of importance to this conference. What are you hoping the Nairobi conference will achieve in the interest of India and other Third World countries?

MRS. GANDHI: Well all these conferences can do is to focus attention on an important problem. The question of energy today is crucial to all of us. We can't entirely give up the old sources of energy dependent on fossil fuels, but I think we can relieve the pressure by developing the renewable sources.

We have initiated many experiments in India, some of them successful but most of them are still not very widespread. We feel they will not only save money but will also help to prevent pollution and be more readily available to rural areas, thereby helping local development.

AUSTRALIAN IMPORTS SEEN REDUCING DEPENDENCY ON SOUTH AFRICA

Victoria NATION in English 11 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

AUSTRALIAN food, building materials and household appliances could help to reduce Seychelles' dependence on South Africa, and the first consignment of Australian rice shipped on an express service could arrive here before the end of the year.

This is the view of Minister of State for Agriculture, Mr. Karl St. Ange, who has just returned from a fact-finding mission to Australia.

He and members of his delegation, including Mr. David Thomas, Principal Secretary in the President's Office, Mr. Ernest Desnousse, General Manager of Seycom and Mr. Maxime Favon, ex-Chairman of Works Enterprises Ltd., asked about prices of the items and other services of interest to Seychelles.

At present not many goods are imported from Australia and the few that are bought by Seychellois traders have to go through Singapore, which makes their prices higher on reaching Port Victoria.

After talks with Australian shipping lines, Minister St. Ange said an express shipping service could allow Seychelles to benefit from lower prices for Australian goods.

He also said traders could benefit from the express service by importing goods that Seycom and Wel are not buying from Australia.

Minister St. Ange also said that a delegation from Qantas — the Australian national airline — is expected next month to open talks on a possible air service between the two countries. The 10,000 Seychellois living in Australia would be able to pay visits to their families more easily with such a service, he said. SAP

GOVERNMENT TIGHTENS PRICE CONTROLS ON IMPORTS

/Text/

ALL IMPORTED goods, with only a few exceptions, will be brought under Government price control in a new set of control of goods regulations to be published in today's Official Gazette. The regulations also set mark-up or profit limits for all classes of commodities, and explain how these will be calculated. This, however, does not automatically mean that fixed prices will be set for all goods in Seychelles.

All goods imported into Seychelles are declared to be imported controlled goods, say the new Control of Goods (Price Control) Regulations, 1981.

Under the legislation, the Principal Secretary for Finance may declare any goods to be under price control and fix a maximum price for the sale of any controlled goods. He may also prescribe standards of quality for goods, including minimum standards, and prohibit the sale of below-standard goods. The Principal Secretary will also have the power to regulate delivery charges of controlled goods to buyers.

Under the regulations, any one who sells or even agrees to sell controlled goods at a higher price than the controlled one may be imprisoned for two years and fined up to R. 20,000. The same sentence awaits anyone who commits any other offence under the regulations.

A large number of statutory instruments concerning price control accompany the new regulations, which replace the Control of Goods (Price Control) Regulations, 1977.

One of the instruments is an Order setting maximum mark-ups, or profit margins for all classes of goods, whether locally produced or imported, under nine sections.

These cover food and live animals reared for food; beverages and tobacco; crude, inedible materials; mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials; animal and vegetable oils; fats and waxes; chemicals and related products; manufactured goods; machinery and transport equipment; and unclassified commodities.

No less than ten of the statutory instruments control the prices of a host of new commodities or revise already controlled prices under the new set of price control regulations.

The items, the maximum prices of which have been printed in the statutory instruments, include bread rolls and loaves ranging from 50 grams to 275 grams; broken, long grain parboiled and table rice; coconuts, pounac and coconut oil; locally-produced vegetables, fruits, tubers and spices (84 different items); pork, graton, pork sausages, turtle meat, chicken and chicken and sea-bird eggs; raw and white sugar; local tea; local beer, Guinness and lemonades; cleaning materials and soap, toilet paper and local brooms; cement; and refined petroleum products such as kerosene, petrol, gasoil and aviation spirit.

An extensive list of all these items, 164 in all, is published as a supplement to today's Nation.

ANC: REAGAN IN 'UNHOLY ALLIANCE' WITH THATCHER

London SECHABA in English Jun 81 p 1

/Official organ of the African National Congress South Africa/

/Editorial: "The New Danger"/

/Text/

June is a month which is remembered by all freedom loving South Africans because it symbolises resistance and struggle. The Freedom Charter was adopted on June26, 1955 and on June 16, 1976 the youth in Soweto. revolted against apartheid. The ANC declared 1981: 'The Year of the Youth This was a correct decision considering what the deprivations of our youth from the cradle to the grave. This year is also the 20th anniversary of Umkhonto we Sizwe -- the spear and shield of our nation — an organisation in which the youth play an important role.

But this year these commemorations are taking place at a difficult time when Reagan, who never got any popular mandate for his policies of war, aggression and dismantling of social gains in his country has entered into an unholy alliance with Margaret Thatcher. This honeymoon seem to be leading to a disaster. Never in the history of US-British relations has there been two heads of state whose ideas are so similar, whose political loyalties and outlooks so identical and whose ideological passions and military theories do not differ at all. This has serious implications on our struggle.

The two are acting like cowboys. They are filling Europe with medium range nuclear weapons; they are causing havoc in the Middle East and elsewhere. Now they want to run our lives. Even for this they have no popular mandate. They are resuscitating Savimbi and his UNITA; giving a kiss of life to the Turnhalle clique. As if this is not enough General Haig and Reagan received and entertained Pik Botha, the racist Foreign Minister. They held secret discussions. This happened immediately after the all-white elections. And just before the racists "celebrated" their 20th anniversary of their racist republic. Perhaps this is an aspect of the "celebrations". We are told now that there is a new "solution" to the Namibian question: the "American framework" which proposes to exclude the presence of United Nations troops during the pre-independence elections but "to include constitutional safeguards for the white minority".

These tricks are not new. What is surprising is the arrogance and carelessness with which the lives of our people in Namibia and South Africa are treated in the corridors of power in New York and London. Yesterday we were faced with the problems posed by the contact group of 5 imperialist countries. Now it seems Reagan feels they are either too "mild" or not "brave" enough. This "bravery" of Reagan and "toughness" of the Iron Lady has serious dangers for our struggle.

But we know where their weakness lies. They cannot satisfy the needs, aspirations and demands of their people let alone our people. The Botha-Malan clique itself has failed. The workers in South Africa are up in arms. They have taken up the grievances of the youth because they know that the problems facing the youth are their problems. They know that they cannot send their children to school because they are not qualified and they are not qualified because they went to Bantu Education schools. This is the basis of the worker-student alliance in our struggle. These last 5 years have seen this alliance strengthen and deepen to include other social forces. They are being united around and by the working class. They are supported by the freedom and peace loving people all over the world. Recently the French socialist reiterated their resolve to support our struggle and to isolate racist South Africa.

This should be a warning to the Reagan-Thatcher offensive which is forming a conspiracy with the Botha-Malan clique. Our people united behind the ANC and supported by the international progressive forces will defeat them.

'SOWETAN' COMMENTS ON U.S. CONGRESSMEN'S VISIT

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 12 Aug 81 p 6

/Editorial: "Right on! Even if it's Rhetoric"/

/Text/

"IT WAS the stories of the Government's dependence upon an all-persuasive police power which in some ways shocked us more than some of the poverty and economic deprivation witnessed.

"We witnessed the desperation and human tragedy which we had heard so much about, but were so wanting to disbelieve. We saw the human cost of apartheid . . . Everywhere we found great apprehension about the increasing chances for violent upheaval."

This is not the voice of a black radical. It is not that of Bishop Tutu, Dr Motlana or even of SOWETAN.

This was said by American Congressmen, who may not be Reaganites in the pure form, but happen to belong to the persuasive swing to conservatism in the West.

This is part of the group of voices that has been giving our Government the green-light, calling them their brothers-in-arms. This is indeed the voice in general of those voices from the right in the West that have, we believe, hardened people like Mr Pik Botha and Mr P W Botha.

We are glad they had the courage to say it as we, who have suffered bannings, detentions and closures of the avenues of free expression, have been saying all these years.

We are glad our stand has been vindicated by Americans who will perhaps make all these emotive statements only to be submerged into the American Dream as soon as they get back home. For we feel this is for the record, and has been said by people other than ourselves, the so-called radicals.

It makes us livid indignation to see the blasé attitude our men in Parliament will show about such senseless evil measures like detention without trial. It makes us screamingly mad to think that some people would be so bland about people being bull-dozed into misery for no other reason than to sustain a palpably disastrous ideology.

There is no cause for us to be jubilant, because this is political rhetoric. We would like to see the action after all the tears by these American Congressmen. We would love to hear how they present their case as soon as they hit the smoke-filled board-rooms of Washington, New York or whatever.

We would be delighted to hear at least that their report is not going to be one of those moribund documents studied by politicians and perhaps academicians and then thrust deep into a dusty folder. We would like to hear and see them attack the Administration in Washington and spell it out in terms as dramatic as those spelt out above.

Even then, the sky is not likely to fall. Our Government, if anything, will become even more rigid. But the record would have been set straight.

HEATH'S NEGATIVE STATEMENTS CONTRASTED TO U.S. STAND

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Sep 81 p 6

[Editorial: "A Contrast"]

[Text]

IT IS INTERESTING to note that at the same time as former British Prime Minister Ted Heath was telling South Africa that unless apartheid is dismantled, the West cannot stand by South Africa if it is attacked by the Soviet Union, the American Government was taking a far different line.

It was, in fact, standing by South Africa in the United Nations Security Council against a resolution strongly condemning South Africa's thrust into Angola and demanding the immediate withdrawal of its troops.

The US vetoed the resolution, while Britain abstained and France voted for it.

The US ambassador, Mr Lichtenstein, said his delegation deplored the South African incursion "just as we deplore any other escalation of violence from any quarter".

There was little doubt that South Africa's resistance to granting the people of South West Africa self-determination was a basis for tension and instability in the region, but he added:

"At the same time it is clear that the presence of foreign combat forces in Angola, particularly the large Cuban force, and the provision of Soviet-originated arms to Swapo and the presence of Soviet military advisers, fuel the explosive atmosphere of confrontation and violence which daily plague the people of Angola, Namibia and indeed the entire region."

As a result, the US had to vote against the resolution which "places blame solely on South Africa for the escalation of violence".

In a major policy speech last week, Dr Chester Crocker, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, said the US would seek closer, "more constructive" ties with South Africa and would take no sides in its racial conflict.

"It is not our task to choose between Black and White ... We cannot and will not permit our hand to be forced to align ourselves with one side or another."

The US would also play a proper role in fostering the region's security and in countering the expansion of Soviet influence.

Dr Crocker emphatically ruled out economic pressure, saying that South Africa was an "integral and important element of the global economic system and the US would not support the severance of trade links".

The US still finds apartheid "abhorrent". It is still pressing for a South West African settlement based on the UN package, with safeguards for minorities.

But it clearly sees South Africa as an important ally in containing Soviet expansionism in Africa — and it is not going to play a passive, or anti-South African role, as envisaged by Mr Heath.

In any event, Mr Heath is not in office in Britain, so his views do not count for anything.

Furthermore, his was not a "winds of change" speech like Mr Harold Macmillan's was years ago.

Mr Heath wants equal rights for all races in South Africa in a central government, saying: " No formula for a constitution will successfully defuse the growing forces of unrest if it does not provide for a universal franchise at the national level.

"The franchise may be qualified or not; the State may be federal, confederal or unitary; Blacks may live apart from Whites; but the election of the central government must be by universal franchise."

Mr Pik Botha, our Foreign Minister, summed up matters succinctly when he said such a formula was the most certain to lead to confrontation.

Not because it was in conflict with Government policy, but because it clashed with the realities of South Africa's multinational situation.

Fortunately, we do not have to rely on Mr Heath to sort out our complex problems for us.

Fortunately, too, his country cannot sell us out as Lord Carrington did the Whites of Rhodesia.

We shall have to find our own solutions because no one else can do so for us.

But what Mr Heath should know is that one man, one vote majority-rule is out.

The way of reform lies in other directions still being worked out by the President's Council and by the Government.

Another aspect of Mr Heath's speech which interested us was his emphasis on the "profound importance" to South Africa of the emergence of Black rule in Angola and Mozambique, and even more so in Zimbabwe.

"Zimbabwe is inevitably going to undercut the economic dependence of the region as a whole on South Africa and therefore the growing leverage of Pretoria over her neighbours."

Since Zimbabwe is struggling economically, with its rail system in chaos, we cannot see Mr Heath's prediction coming about in ages — if at all.

Besides that, Zimbabwe is heading for a one-party State.

Mr Heath should not read us any lessons about Zimbabwe, for if anything shows that Whites have little future under Marxist majority rule in a country they once called their own it is what is happening now in Zimbabwe.

We have to avoid a Zimbabwe situation — not by fighting it out to the death as the Smith Government did, but in finding our solutions, and making our changes, timeously.

The trouble with Mr Heath — and people like him — is that they know everything there is to know about Africa, and Southern Africa in particular, without living here and without firsthand knowledge of our problems.

We can do without their facile attempts to tell us what to do.

BOTHA ADDRESSES TRANSVAAL NP CAUCUS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Sep 81 p 3

/Article by Keith Abendroth/

/Text/

THE Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, yesterday specially flew to Pretoria to address the Transvaal Provincial Council caucus of the National Party and city councillors — and is believed to have "laid it on the line" to them on White-Black relationships in urban areas.

Growing fears in the NP electorate of being "swamped" in White areas by Blacks — fears that have found expression in party ranks recently and are threatening to build into a controversy — are known to be causing concern in the NP hierarchy.

Last week Mr Botha addressed a similar gathering in Cape Town and is believed to have concentrated on fears expressed by Whites of being "crowded out" by Blacks.

The meeting in Pretoria comes particularly, after a growing move among extreme Right-wing elements in the Transvaal capital's City Council to try to force the council to reinstate apartheid in parks in the city's White areas.

Last week Mr Botha told city councillors at the Cape Town meeting that there were serious shortages in urban areas of eating and recreational facilities for Black workers.

He called on private enterprise to help solve the problem and said that members of Parliament should make it their duty to see that such facilities were created in their constituencies.

At the same time, Mr Botha emphasised that there were certain facilities Whites regarded as absolutely "their own" and warned of the danger of friction if Whites started to react to "penetration" by Blacks.

He made it clear, it is understood, that the Whites must grant or concede to the other race groups that which they themselves (the Whites) wanted or regarded as their right.

But, he emphasised, there were certain things that the Whites regarded as solely their own and they had the right to do so.

At the same time Whites must not regard as "penetration" by respectable non-Whites certain facilities which could not be duplicated.

He said that the mere presence of respectable non-Whites in White areas was not offensive. For instance, the presence of Blacks and Coloureds at Cape Town's Nico Malan Theatre had not caused problems.

BOTHA SPEECH DURING CENSURE DEBATE

'Extract' From Speech

Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 14 Aug 81 pp 1-7

/Extract from the speech of the Prime Minister, Mr P.W. Botha, during the debate on the Censure Motion moved in the House of Assembly on August 3, 1981, by the Leader of the Opposition, Dr F. van Zyl Slabbert/

/Text/

THE possibility of misunderstanding and conflict is implicit in the Republic of South Africa as in the broader spectrum of Southern Africa. It is a possibility found in almost every civilized country today where the forces of conflict and collision are encouraged internally and externally by revolutionary forces. It forms part of a large-scale effort to overthrow the Western World.

No government, therefore, can afford to ignore this potential danger. Any policy which is to succeed cannot ignore or wish away the multi-nationalism of the Republic of South Africa and the existence of minority groups.

There are schools of thought which wish to ignore these basic facts and advocate for South Africa a new dispensation according to their own norms:

First, there is the communist system — government by the proletariat. If it were applied to South Africa, it would create untold misery with bloodshed and destruction of civilised standards of living.

Second, there is the liberal school of thought which advocates an open community system in which almost only the individual will receive recognition. This school emphasises a South African unitary community with only lip-service to the protection of minorities. This serves merely as a precursor to the extreme radicals, whose half-baked theories prepare the way for communism.

It is no use building up clichés round words such as civil rights, change and human rights, and hurling them about, clichés which are sometimes the subject of speculative articles in newspapers, particularly on Sundays. The Government is responsible for ensuring orderly government so that these "pearls of wisdom" may also be tolerated.

Third, there is a radical school of thought which theorises in the name of conservatism that the existence and aspirations of other groups can be rationalised away by the exclusive government of only one specific nation. This direction also entails the greatest danger to peace, justice and stability. What is more, it is un-Afrikaans, because the Afrikaner nation, which it purports to serve, is not such an intolerant nation.

MULTI-NATIONALISM

Oppossed to these schools of thought, the National Party and the Government advocate a policy which takes into account the basic principle of multi-nationalism and the existence of minority groups, with consequences which have to be carried into effect, a multi-nationalism which has its substance in the cultural and spiritual characteristics of the various peoples.

There are in the second place civilised value systems and standards which have to be preserved for the sake of the entire Republic of South Africa, and also out of loyalty to our sense of calling I wish to mention only a few of them--religious freedom, the impartiality of our judiciary and the right of private ownership of land and property, as well as respect for our native soil.

Is there a country which does more to preserve these things, in spite of very difficult circumstances?

There is, furthermore, the preservation of family life, and the life of the community, which includes mother tongue education, one's own community schools and residential areas from which in turn flows one's own cultural life. These things as far as we are concerned, are not negotiable.

If the various population groups of South Africa do not grant one another these things, there can be no righteousness which can serve as a guideline for our country.

The Leader of the Opposition has referred to discriminatory measures. The Government has consistently gone out of its way to alleviate and improve things which can be changed, such as, inter alia, the changes which we have made in labour for the sake of the economy and the security of all workers.

Third, the State and other patriotic institutions must, in the cultural and economic spheres, consider the right of self-determination of national groups. Because of the multi-national structure of our country and different levels of development, which are real, it is not possible to bring about these things overnight. It must be an ongoing process which takes place in an orderly and evolutionary manner.

During the past 33 years the National Party has done more to implement this than all governments from 1910 to 1948. It was during the regime of the NP that there was a moving away on a large scale from colonial structures and systems. The history of the National Party's various governments is one of constitutional and economic renewal and development, which has in one way or another been to the good of all the people in South Africa. That is why experts place the Republic of South Africa among the first 13 countries in the world for safety of investment funds.

Fourth, the National Party and the Government wish to move away from the Westminster system of a unitary state and of universal franchise, whether in a unitary or federal form, and to promote instead the concept of co-operating democracies. In that way the concept of self-determination is being premoted, while common interests can at the same time be served, as I shall indicate.

LAW AND ORDER

The National Party believes that through its policy potential levels of conflict are gradually being eliminated and replaced by stability and security. The fact that South Africa is a country of hope in a tottering world demonstrates the truth of this statement. Of course, obstacles are constantly being placed in our path. Politics of provocation are being waged against us and the Government is being called upon to preserve law and order.

No pious and civilised person would really like to make use of extreme powers. But we have a duty, a duty towards civilised standards and ways of life in this country, and we intend to discharge that duty. I wish to appeal today to public speakers and to our media, including the television and radio services, to consider the effect of sensational reporting and exorbitant comment. I wish them to consider that the greatest desire of saboteurs and underminers is to receive publicity for their deeds and their actions. In order to ensure orderly government and civilised standards of life, discipline and equilibrium are required from each one of us.

FUTURE COURSE

Against this background the Government is shaping its future course:

- First, by the creation of vertical structures so that the various population groups can co-operate with one another as equals to arrange and promote matters of common interest and resolve conflict situations.
- Second, the Government places a high premium on the decentralisation and devolution of powers in South Africa. We do not dictate to our neighbouring states.
- Third, the Government is prepared to consult and negotiate on further development, but it rejects the idea of a national convention. It is impractical, dangerous, time-consuming, and a waste of energy and money.

We are an independent country and this Parliament has the final say. We are not in the position of South West Africa or of the former Southern Rhodesia. A national convention presupposes that Parliament is not able to deal with the problems of the country.

The Government believes that regular formal and informal discussions with leaders of groups, and by bodies created by Parliament, such as the Cabinet and the President's Council, is a better procedure to adopt.

What are the salient features of this future dispensation? It is a dispensation based on a constitutional strategy which presupposes that people and national groups must co-operate voluntarily. That is why we ordered an expert inquiry into land-consolidation with the 1936 legislation as the point of departure. The 1975 proposals will be discussed with the bodies and governments concerned, and the Government will then bring proposals to Parliament for final decision.

Positive steps have also been taken to initiate activities by the private sector so that it will be possible to leave far more economic growth and development in the hands of the private sector. I am referring here to the establishment of the Small Business Development Corporation, as well as to the Council for the Promotion of Small Businesses.

CONSTELLATION OF STATES

Before and after the Carlton Conference, I advocated co-operation within a constellation of Southern African states, and I wish to refer to the progress made.

- The Southern African Customs Union was established long before the Carlton Conference.
- Second, there is the Rand Monetary Union.
- Third, the South African Regional Commission for the Conservation and Utilization of the Soil.
- Fourth, the Regional Tourism Board for Southern Africa.
- Fifth, the Regional Health Organization of Southern Africa.
- Sixth, the role of the South African Railways in Southern Africa.
- Seventh, the rapidly expanding trade between South Africa and the other States of Southern Africa.
- Eighth, the expert assistance of the SABS and the CSIR to African countries in industry and technology.

I have mentioned these things to prove that we already have the basis and have established the means for realising the concept of a constellation of states in Southern Africa.

Early in 1980 it was decided that an interim secretariat should be established in the Department of Foreign Affairs and Information to make possible and encourage multilateral negotiations on all kinds of co-operative projects. Since then the following multilateral committees have been created:

- First, the Post and Telecommunications Consultative Committee.
- Second, an Agricultural Liaison Committee with three working groups — forestry, nature and game preservation.
- Third, an Education and Training Committee.

The concept "constellation of states" presupposes more than co-operation with our immediate neighbours but, at the same time, it is not an idea which implies a superstate. It is aimed primarily at co-operation in matters of common and economic interest.

CONFEDERAL CO-OPERATION

In the more limited context we envisage confederal co-operation between South Africa and those countries which gain their independence with our co-operation. This development considers the concept of self-determination and autonomous states, and the Government does not presuppose that independent Black states co-operating in this way can be economically colonised. South Africa does not believe in such practices.

A confederation comes about when two or more independent states create interstate structures by treaty to promote co-ordinated actions for the realisation of common goals.

The Government has already held talks with interested governments and it has been decided to hold further discussions. Some governments are reacting postively and others are still studying certain proposals.

In our opinion the following principles will have to apply:

- First, the sovereignty of member states may not be affected.
- Second, equal status for member states must be guaranteed and a member state must have the right to withdraw from certain spheres of co-operation if it wishes to do so.
- Third, the existence of such a confederation does not prevent member states for liaising with one another bilaterally.
- Fourth, a member state is not prevented from withdrawing from the confederation.

BLACKS OUTSIDE NATIONAL STATES

I should like to say something about Black communities outside the national states in the Republic of South Africa. The development of full-fledged local governments in the urban areas with, in some respects, more powers than those of municipal authorities, are being envisaged for Black communities in the Republic of South Africa and this year we are to take legislative steps about these matters.

This will enable them to look after their own interests and deliberate on matters of common interest in local government.

The exercising of political rights beyond the local level and on a regional co-ordinating level will have to be done by means of independent and national states. At present urgent attention is being given to improving the constitutional ties between the relevant states and their citizens so that Blacks outside the states will be able to have effective political participation.

CITIZENSHIP AND NATIONALITY

Just a few words now on citizenship and nationality. With the gaining of independence the citizens of national states lose their South African citizenship and acquire the citizenship of the new independent state. Comprehensive arrangements are, however, made in the independence agreements to anticipate problems about passports which arise from the non-recognition by other countries of such states. Provision is also made to retain certain social and economic advantages in the Republic of South Africa by citizens of the new states.

I do not wish to draw any unnecessary comparisons. Nevertheless it is interesting that EEC countries are now apparently also giving attention to the problems of passports which will possibly be known as passports for the European Community.

INDUSTRIAL DECENTRALISATION

The Government's main economic objectives are to ensure a more balanced spread of economic activity in South Africa and to promote economic growth in or near independent Black states and national states. At present there is an excessive concentration of economic activity in the four big metropolitan areas — Vaal Triangle, Cape Peninsula, Durban-Pinetown area and Port Elizabeth-Uitenhage area. About three-quarters of the employment offered by industry is concentrated in these areas. This is an unsound state of affairs. What is more, the dominance of the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vereeniging (PWV) area means that even areas like East London and certain parts of the Western Cape are lagging behind. Consequently, industrial decentralisation must be improved.

Moreover, only 13 per cent of the total income of Blacks in the national states is self-generated at present. In the case of the independent Black states, the figure is about 18 per cent. In addition, only 28 per cent of the growth in the labour supply in the national and independent states is being absorbed in those areas.

It is important that in our dependent and national Black states we do not repeat the mistakes made elsewhere in Africa. I would like to quote from an article in a recent issue of Africa Insight, a publication of the Africa Institute. The article states:

> "The Western industrial nations, which in 1979 jointly provided 76 per cent of development aid worldwide, as against 18 per cent from OPEC and 6 per cent from the Soviet bloc, find it increasingly difficult, financially and politically, to maintain, let alone raise, this assistance to the so-called Third World.
> "The chairman of the Development Assistance Committee of the OECD, John Lewis, states in his 1980 review: 'The dynamics of African development appear to be headed downhill. What has been lacking has been sufficient implementation and, in particular, sufficient political and bureaucratic energy and a grasp of the composite problem to build the partial answers into effective strategies'."

We all know this is a fact. Africa is dying, in spite of all the financial aid.

We must not repeat those mistakes. We must, first, take into account that there is an economic interdependence of territories and states in Southern Africa. Second, the development resources of states can supplement one another. Third, where possible, there should be a rationalised development process to prevent duplication of action and to use infrastructure.

This is why we advocate:

- First, co-operation between states on a regional basis.
- Second, promotion of free enterprise.
- Third, the involvement of local communities in the process.
- Fourth, limiting the role of government as far as possible to collective services and infrastructure, and creating the right climate for the private sector.

The Government will provide conventional development aid such as technical and financial assistance, customs agreements, co-ordination of development and economic policy, and assistance to the private sector through development agencies. The Southern African Development Bank will, for example, fulfil an important function.

The programme of land consolidation for the national and independent states will continue within the framework of the regional economic development programme and in this connection the co-operation of all parties will be sought to ensure the proper use of land.

The Government feels strongly about industrial development in decentralised areas, although it is realised that existing metropolitan areas must also develop.

INCENTIVES TO INDUSTRY

Industrial development in decentralised areas will be promoted by financial and other incentives and guarantees which may vary in nature and extent from region to region. In this connection the following will be taken into account:

- First, the advantages that large-scale industrial development offers in the decentralisation context.
- Second, the potential for other forms of industrial development that are geared more to local resources, needs and establishment advantages.
- Third, the development needs of the White, Coloured and Asian communities outside metropolitan areas.

There is also another alternative. Possible co-operation projects can be identified and then promoted by concluding bilateral and multilateral agreements, e.g. the joint use of water resources in specific areas.

The special Constellation Committee has also put specific proposals to the Cabinet about increased incentives to place industries and undertake other development at carefully selected deconcentration points, growth points, growth poles, as well as principal towns.

These incentives, on which the Cabinet has not yet taken a decision, on the one hand involve appreciable increases in the level of existing incentives that are at present available to industrialists who establish themselves in decentralisation areas and, on the other hand, certain new forms of incentives.

What is important is that some of the recommendations are aimed at making good the permanent disadvantages experienced by industrialists in the development areas chosen because of their distance from the main markets or resources. Among these are, for example, increases in the rail rebates on goods, further lifting of restrictions on road motor transport, subsidies to equalise the cost of electricity with that in the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vereeniging area, and adequate training facilities to make up for the lack of a pool of trained workers in such areas.

Some of the other recommendations are aimed at meeting the liquidity problems that new industrialists experience temporarily in the development areas.

No final decisions have as yet been taken by the Cabinet in this regard, but I have directed that the necessary negotiations with the authorities in the Republic and the national states be initiated without delay so that the Cabinet can give a final decision in this connection before December 1981.

A while ago a most interesting article was written by a prominent business manager in South Africa, a former president of the Chamber of Mines. I wish to quote him today because I believe it is right to do so. He said —

> "The consensus among major South African finance houses is that while the country may expect to experience varying degrees of political trauma as the old order changes and new dispensations are worked out, the long-term political and economic prospects for the Republic are exciting and the heavy capital investment in long-term mining projects by South African interests is a reflection of this confidence."

In other words, I speak with confidence of the future of our country.

COLOUREDS AND ASIANS

Now I wish to refer more specifically to the position of the Coloured people and the Asians in South Africa. It is an indisputable fact that these communities have enjoyed great progress and development in the socio-economic field over the past decade, more particularly in education, housing, vocations and average growth of income.

Between 1960 and 1980, their teachers increased from 9 600 to 26 000. Housing provided by the State alone — I am not even referring to other housing now — has totalled 24 000 units since 1979. In clerical occupations, their numbers rose from 78 000 to 128 900 between 1973 and 1980. The number of artisans among them increased from 6 000 to about 41 000 and the number of semi-skilled workers from about 32 000 to 385 000. The personal income — at current prices — of Coloured people in the Western Cape rose from R337-million to R1 500-million in 1980.

With regard to their political participation and structures for consultation, however, a vacuum has remained. This requires the urgent attention of us all.

That vacuum is partly attributable to their refusal to use properly and develop the instruments created for them. Partly, too, it was caused by irresponsible people, specially Whites, who kept feelings running high and helped to destroy every effort of the Government.

The Erica Theron Commission was unable to propose a solution, except to say that an attempt should be made to find a structure other than the Westminster system.

SCHLEBUSCH COMMISSION

The Government responded to that and produced proposals which were submitted to the Schlebusch Commission.

After hearing evidence, the commission passed a unanimous resolution of all parties sitting on the commission — the NP, the PFP, the old SAP and the NRP — that:

- The Westminster system of government did not, without adaptation, offer a solution to constitutional problems of the Republic.
- Under the present constitutional dispensation, the so-called one man, one vote system would probably lead to the domination of minorities by majorities and to serious conflict between population groups in the Republic.
- It did not provide a framework within which peaceful co-existence was possible, i.e. Parliament as it was then constituted.

That is why the same Schlebush Commission passed a resolution, albeit not unanimously, to the effect that a President's Council should be established to conduct further investigations.

I do not believe in a common voters' roll. It did not work and it will not work. My party knows that as long as I am the leader I shall not agree to a common voters' roll. All our troubles concerning the relations between Coloured people and Whites in this country have their origins in a common voters' roll.

I do not want to repeat the lengthy debates which have taken place here, but it is a fact that even an esteemed editor of one of the daily newspapers of Cape Town wrote that "the Coloured vote is surreptitiously up for sale during election time."

After all, those troubles date from the days of the common voters' roll. It was a bluff, and we know how, in the municipal field, the Cape Town City Council schemed to ensure that the Coloured people on the common voters' roll were able to get in only one or two representatives, and how they schemed and connived among themselves to render the Coloured people powerless as voters. We know exactly what happened. Why then this sudden display of hyprocrisy? I am tired of this hypocrisy.

Meanwhile, the Government remains committed to the proposals referred to the President's Council along with the evidence.

What did those proposals imply?

- First, the acceptance that South Africans — Whites, Coloureds and Asians — shall be accommodated within one state.
- Second, the creation of an electoral college on a specific basis for the election of a State President with greater executive power than at present.
- Third, the establishment of a President's Council, as a commission of inquiry on a specific basis of election. On this body Coloureds and Asians will also have representation.
- Fourth, a Council of Cabinets in which Whites, Coloureds and Asians would be represented. In other words, there will be consultation on matters of common interest.
- Fifth, three distinct parliamentary councils. On matters of common interest the principle of consultation and co-responsibility has been accepted and, if they should fail or threaten to fail, systems have been built in to prevent this.

The proposal about the parliamentary councils drew very serious criticism from Whites as well as the Coloureds. That was one of the reasons why we decided to have it subjected to further scrutiny.

PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL

I am prepared to give the President's Council a fair chance to complete its activities. and I think that until November or December of this year will be a fair period of time for that purpose.

I said that constitutional change is a process. If the President's Council reaches a decision on matters of this kind. it does not mean to say that the Council is going to dissolve. Part of the proprosals is in fact that there shall be a President's Council in another form.

If the President's Council should come forward with drastic departures from declared government policy. the Cabinet and I shall first have to submit them to our party congresses. after the Cabinet has adopted a standpoint on them. Even if the congresses accept them. a referendum will nevertheless be held because this would ensure stability. which is essential once a decision has been taken. I have no doubt that the congresses of the National Party will follow a sensible lead. I shall have the courage to look them in the face and tell them what my standpoints are.

I am also prepared to ask the President's Council to bring out an interim report. on local government and regional authorities.

I wish to emphasise that the Government is endeavouring to arrive at a proper understanding and a constitutional arrangement with the Coloured and Asian population. but we are not prepared to concede to exorbitant demands which jeopardise effective decision-making and efficient government. I hope that a positive attitude will also be displayed by Coloured leaders. Some of them have talks with me from time to time and in their actions I discern level-headness and common sense. I welcome that. because I should personally like to help the Coloured population in a positive way to obtain a say over their own affairs.

The official Opposition advocates a policy of abdication for White South Africa. I wish to make it clear that we as Whites are not merely colonists who should be tolerated here. White South Africa — Afrikaans and English-speaking White South Africa — is not here with temporary permits from some power or other. We are here as a source of strength for civilised standards. and the sooner political splenetics realise this. the better for them.

'BEELD' Comment

Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 14 Aug 81 p 19

/Selection from the "Comment & Opinion" Section/

/Text/

The best comment on the political position of the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, and his Cabinet, comes from the views of Prog spokesmen on the one hand and those of the Herstigtes on the far right.

Mr Botha's leadership is being seriously questioned in Prog circles and from there it filters through to diplomats and international circles. The message is short and sweet — Mr Botha is a captive of his party's right-wing and has abandoned his reforms.

But what say the far rightists now? The Herstigtes deliver an impassioned plea that far rightists should not buckle under the prog propaganda, since Mr Botha is not moving right — he's a liberalist in wolf's clothing, so to speak!

The Herstigtes know, of course, that a P W Botha moving right would hold great danger for them. The motives for the transparent tactics of Prog circles need no further explanation.

The truth — and neither the far left, nor the far right (nor the visiting Democrat Congressmen) want to admit it, is that the Government is purposefully moving towards a change in the constitutional dispensation in Southern Africa. We are to get a confederation with drastic adaptations in the concept of nationality and political citizenship, to raise to a new level the relationship between the RSA and the former national states which gained independence under our system. The economic muscle of the constellation is to be strenghtened and internal relations in the RSA — those between White, Brown and Asian — are being energetically attended to.

But the fact remains that these processes cannot be set in motion with a magic wand. New constitutions don't come about overnight. The National Convention that culminated in Union in 1910 left the question of Coloured representation "for future generations". Those generations have from 1910 to the present time brought about nothing concrete. Is Mr Botha, in a scant two years, to do so? Or Mr Alwyn Schlebusch's President's Council in three months? Only a fool would argue that way, but that's the way the Progs and their spokesmen performed.

The Premier rejected the middle-of-the-road label applied to the National Party in the censure motion. The NP is a party that takes a stand and carries it through, he says. But the fact remains that on both sides of the political spectrum it has opposition groupings fighting its stated course tooth and nail. Accusations are becoming ever more shrill, and the reason is clear — the opposition parties know that the NP will not deviate from its intentions.

So the brush has to be brought out to paint on the discredit. The Progs do their "blackwashing" outside Parliament — so much so that their motives as far as the country's salvation is concerned are questionable.

And from the far right the cat has been let out of the bag. The Herstigtes, indeed, fear the Government's unavoidable course, and this, of course, shatters Prog arguments.

The Nationalists find it amusing to watch this osmosis of allies between the Herstigtes and the Progs.

But there is work to be done and the Government is doing it, united behind its leader. For at the highest level there is a responsible realisation that the plan of reform has to keep moving.

REPORTAGE, COMMENT ON LABOR DEVELOPMENTS

Police Document Against SAAWU

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 24 Aug 81 p 12

/Article by Steven Friedman/

/Text/

IN A brief, almost-unnoticed, reply to a question in Parliament last week, the Minister of Police, Mr Louis le Grange, may have seriously damaged the Government's claim that it is allowing free trade unionism.

In his reply to questions posed by Mr Ray Swart, Official Opposition spokesman on police matters, Mr Le Grange defended the actions of an East London security police officer who had compiled and distributed a document spelling out a plan to "break the power" of the country's growing unregistered trade unions — which are perfectly legal organisations.

The officer last year distributed a startling document which spelled out a strategy to destroy or severely weaken the country's biggest unregistered union, the SA Allied Workers Union, and unregistered unions in general.

The document, which has been in the Mail's possession since late last year, suggests, among other measures, that conservative unions affiliated to Tucsa should be officially encouraged to compete with Saawu in East London.

It also suggests that employers should be encouraged to work out a common strategy against Saawu and that lists of unemployed workers should be distributed to companies to enable them to avoid negotiating with the union.

Mr Swart asked Mr Le Grange last week whether compiling and distributing the document "falls within the duties of officers of the SA Police".

Mr Le Grange replied that it did not. But in this particular case, the officer concerned had acted "in good faith and towards the maintenance of law and order as provided in section 5 of the Police Act".

He added that no steps were planned against the officer concerned.

Mr le Grange seems to be saying that in certain circumstances it is legitimate for policemen to seek to "break" legal organisations — in this case unregistered unions.

The story behind the document is an intriguing one, which says much about the police intervention in labour relations.

Saawu appeared on the scene in East London last year and, within a short time, had become the country's biggest unregistered union — in other words, a union which refuses to register with the Government and to enter its official negotiating system. These unions are, however, not illegal.

In its East London stronghold alone, it now has over 20 000 members.

Its emergence last year coincided with a rash of strikes which many employers and the Government blamed on the union — a charge which it denies.

Most employers were unhappy about Saawu's arrival on the scene, but even its opponents conceded it had recruited a "flabbergasting" number of members.

If employers were unhappy about the union, the authorities were even more unhappy. Firstly, Saawu wouldn't join the controlled official system.

Secondly, it openly sought a role in community affairs and has recently been campaigning against the forthcoming "independence" of Ciskei — most Saawu members live in Mdantsane township — formally part of Ciskei.

The union complained repeatedly that officialdom was trying to break it.

These complaints were given added weight last year when Mr Fanie Botha, the Minister of Manpower, flew to East London and urged employers in a closed meeting to "hold out against the union" and not to recognise it.

He said legislation would be introduced this year to enable employers to "hold out" against unregistered unions.

Saawu leaders were later detained several times by Ciskeian and SA police.

At about the same time, the document surfaced. It was unsigned and did not appear below a letterhead. Sources who passed the document on to the "Mail" said it was being handed to employers by an East London security police officer who had also sent a copy to Mr Botha's department.

Indeed, these sources went on to say that the officer concerned (whose name is known to the "Mail"), was increasingly acting as "unofficial labour adviser" to East London employers, and was active in trying to get employer organisations together to endorse a common anti-Saawu front.

The source of the document could not then be confirmed and, although reports on it did appear at the time, the police were not mentioned in them.

Since then, the document has been published in a social science journal which claimed it originated from the police and Government departments.

This month, in response to a question by Mr Swart, Mr Le Grange confirmed it had been compiled and distributed by a security police officer. He said the officer had acted on his own initiative.

Mr Le Grange's defence of the officer was the first concrete evidence of official approval for its contents. The document thus takes on new importance.

It said that a police raid on Saawu offices last August had established that the union was active "in virtually every big industrial or business undertaking in East London".

It had built up substantial support in a wide range of factories and unregistered unions "controlled 90% of the trade union interest in the area".

But the guts of the document is contained in a section headed: "What is seen as a possible solution to break the power of Saawu/unregistered trade unions and to normalise labour unrest?"

Under the heading "long-term" solutions, the author concedes that unregistered unions are operating "just" within the law.

But it suggests legislation to force unions to represent workers in one industry only, rather than to recruit all workers, as Saawu does.

An alternative, it adds, would be to force unions to register.

Since the document was drawn up, legislation has been introduced — and passed — which extends Government control over unregistered unions.

The author also notes that the more conservative unions affiliated to Tucsa are not very active in the area. They must "in one or other manner be motivated and activated to show more interest and to become more active as far as recruiting and organising work is concerned".

He also spells out "short-term" solutions: Companies must be encouraged to keep detailed "reserve" lists of the unemployed, to be used if there is a dispute with their workers.

Indeed, the document suggests that a central list of the unemployed be compiled and made available to companies who faced disputes.

This would presumably enable them to fire workers who went on strike and replace them quickly. It would also serve as an inducement to employers not to negotiate with the union — even if no strike had occurred.

Another "short-term" solution proposed was to bring East London employer organisations "round one table" to discuss a uniform response to Saawu.

This, the document added, "has already been put into operation".

The document is clearly aimed at discouraging employers from negotiating with the union and at making life as difficult as possible for it.

Until last week, it could be regarded as the work of one man whose activities did not necessarily reflect official policy.

But, by implying support for his activities, Mr Le Grange has seriously undermined Mr Botha's statement recently that the Government's aim is to make registration attractive to unregistered unions, not to force them to register.

Last week, Mr Botha denied that "union busting" activities in East London were a response to a request by his department.

Mr Swart asked him whether "he or officials in his department made any request to the Minister of Police or the Security Police to communicate with businessmen in East London on the activities of SAAWU?"

No, said Mr Botha. But, as a member of the same Cabinet as Mr Le Grange, and as the Minister who urged employers to "hold out" against the union, Mr Botha is inevitably going to be drawn into the controversy.

Significantly, since the document's publication, a small but growing number of East London employers have ignored both Mr Botha's — and the author of the document's — advice.

Four companies have formally recognised the union. Two more negotiate with it, but not via a formal agreement. More agreements are said to be on the way.

Employers who have taken this step say Saawu is not an ogre and that recognising it has contributed to peace in their factories.

This seems to both call into question the accuracy of the official claims underlying the document and to indicate that "union busting" tactics are becoming less and less successful.

How the officer who drew up the document is taking all this remains to be seen. But somebody in East London is still campaigning against Saawu.

Last week, thousands of anti-Saawu pamphlets were distributed in the city, mainly at factories in which Saawu is recognised or is about to be recognised.

The pamphlets warned workers against Saawu and urged them not to join it.

They were signed by the "Free Democratic Trade Union Council" — an organisation which is almost certainly fictitious. Certainly, no unionist or employer known to the "Mail" has ever heard of it.

As Saawu continues to grow, and employers move to recognise it, somebody is obviously still determined to break the union.

SAAWU Leader Gqweta

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 10 Aug 81 p 9

/Article by Steven Friedman/

/Excerpts/ WITHIN hours of being released from six weeks' detention last week, trade unionist Mr Thozamile Gqweta was back at work — signing a recognition agreement with an East London company.

That may be an indication of Mr Gqweta's imperturbability — after all six weeks' detention is unlikely to have been pleasant. It is certainly a sign that some employers view him differently to the way the authorities do

But it may also illustrate that Mr Gqweta, president of the SA Allied Workers Union, is getting used to being detained. He has been detained four times in eighteen months — and not once has he been convicted of an offence.

Twice he has been charged with offences arising out of strikes — once by Ciskeian, once by SA authorities. He appeared in court repeatedly but the charges were eventually dropped in both cases without evidence being led.

The authorities apparently have nothing with which to charge Mr Gqweta.

This has raised questions about whether they have anything with which to charge the eight other unionists in detention, particularly as three of the union leaders originally held have been released without being charged.

And one of the detainees, Saawu vice-president Mr Sisa Njikalana, is being held under Section 10 of the Internal Security Act — a clause not intended for people suspected of having committed an offence.

Who is this man who the authorities detain so regularly?

A former furniture salesman, Mr Gqweta established Saawu in East London and played a large part in building it into a mass-based union, with 20 000 members in East London alone.

He and his union reject government registration and Mr Gqweta himself campaigned against forthcoming Ciskei independence before his last detention — many of Saawu's members live in Mdantsane, which is formally part of Ciskei.

But there is little doubt Mr Gqweta enjoys considerable support among East London workers, and that many believe he is the kind of unionist to whom the authorities should be talking — outside the confines of a prison cell.

Certainly those employers who have decided to talk to him believe he is an articulate and "reasonable" leader who genuinely represents his constituents.

And he commands great respect in key sections of the union movement.

An insight into this is provided by a letter to the Mail by Mr David Lewis of the General Workers Union and Mr Jan Theron of the Food and Canning Workers' Union, both of which co-operate with Saawu.

They describe Mr Gqweta as "an honest, articulate and proud spokesman of his people". They add: "All of these qualities are anathema to the authorities and, in the final analysis, they account for his predicament".

"The union, with Mr Gqweta as its major spokesman, has fought for independent democratic unions and, to this end, has refused to seek registration under the unacceptable conditions offered by the authorities.

"Moreover Saawu has steadfastly refused to isolate itself from the wider community," they add.

This, they say, has led the authorities to react in two ways — Manpower Minister Mr Fanie Botha, "in an unprecedented intervention, personally requested East London employers to refuse to deal with the union" and "the State has responded by repeatedly detaining union leaders in East London".

The two believe a primary cause of official antagonism to Mr Gqweta "is his outspoken opposition to the forthcoming 'independence' of Ciskei".

"Whilst workers are employed in East London, the vast majority live in the huge black township of Mdantsane which, although only some 20km from East London, is formally part of Ciskei".

It had thus encountered "massive opposition" from the Ciskeian authorities "who are increasingly threatened by the substantial popular opposition to their decision to opt for independence a la Pretoria".

Mr Gqweta had done "no more than express this widespread opposition" and his "reward" had been successive detections, they conclude.

In the past eighteen months, much of the debate on the future of black unionism has centred around attempts to control its growth through legislation.

The harsher edges of the legislation have been dulled — but there are fears that the authorities are now trying to control unions not only through legislation but through security police action.

This is concerning employer bodies as well as unionists. The FCI called last week for the authorities to adopt a "neutral" attitude to labour disputes and to leave these to employers and worker representatives.

And a letter sent to Mr Fanie Botha by the Urban Training Project, a union education group with links to the Council of Unions of SA, makes it clear that unionists believe police action has a direct bearing on labour relations.

The UTP brands detentions and bannings of union leaders as "a denial of freedom of association" and say security police action has "severely damaged the process of relationship building between unions and companies".

It rejects claims by Mr Botha to have no responsibility for actions taking by another department as "an evasion of responsibilities," arguing that security police action has "direct consequences for the development of an equitable system of industrial relations".

It calls on him to "take a stand against security police action in industrial relations" and to seek the release from detention and lifting of banning orders for "all people and particularly union leaders".

In other words, Mr Botha bears a responsibility for ending detentions because they render meaningless his claims to be moving into an era of reform.

The authorities may not like Mr Gqweta's views on registration or on how the country should be run. But as long as they use security laws against men like him, scepticism about their intentions will be heard again.

Independent Trade Unions Meeting

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 10 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Riaan de Villiers]

[Text]

INDEPENDENT trade unions, representing the vast majority of organised black workers, are to defy restrictions — contained in Government labour legislation now before Parliament — on financial aid to workers who strike illegally.

And they will support one another in defying any "abuse" of official powers of investigation the legislation seeks to extend to unregistered unions.

These were among several major decisions taken at the historic summit of leaders and representatives of virtually all independent trade unions — registered and unregistered — in Cape Town at the weekend.

In another far-reaching move, the meeting unanimously rejected the present industrial council system — cornerstone of the official collective bargaining system.

Resist

Unionists also voted to "resist and reject" the present official union registration system insofar as it was "designed to control, and interfere in, internal union affairs".

The meeting stopped short of a decision that all unions would pull out of industrial councils.

It recommended that unions which were not yet council members should not enter them, and requested others to refer the decision to their memberships for endorsement.

Similarly, no decision was attempted on whether registered independent unions should de-register or not.

However, if these and other resolutions are implemented, they are likely to have a major influence on labour relations.

They may also lead to a clash with the authorities if legislative provisions the unions have voted to defy are passed by Parliament.

Divisions

The meeting was attended by well over 100 delegates of unions and co-ordinating bodies, including the Federation of South African Trade Unions (Fosatu), the Council of Unions of SA (Cusa), the SA Allied Workers' Union (Saawu), the General Workers' Union, the Food and Canning Workers' Union and the African Food and Canning Workers' Union.

Some 29 unions were represented, either directly or indirectly.

Observers believe the meeting — unprecedented in scale — may lead to greater unity in the fast-growing independent union movement, which has been marked by severe divisions up to now.

The meeting was held mainly to formulate a united response to the Government's controversial Labour Relations Amendment Bill, which was tabled in Parliament last week.

However, resolutions were passed on several other issues.

A delegation is to be sent to Dr Lennox Sebe, Chief Minister of the Ciskei, to discuss his "anti-union stance" and the security of workers living in the Ciskei after "so-called Ciskeian independence".

Bannings

The meeting noted the "severe difficulties" created for workers by the homeland authorities and particularly the present situation in the Ciskei, where union members and officials were subjected to "severe harassment and constant detention".

Unions voted to continue to resist bannings and detentions "in any way possible" and warned the continuation of these steps would "worsen the already deteriorating industrial relations situation".

Solidarity committees are to be set up in each region to discuss and initiate "solidarity action" arising out of the meeting.

And a similiar top-level meeting is to be held in November.

Motivating their decision to defy the proposed ban on financial aid to illegal strikers, the unions said it was an internationally recognised right of workers to withhold their labour.

Strikes were frequent at present because of low wages, inadequate bargaining procedures and "completely unworkable" official dispute procedures".

"Workers therefore have no alternative to strike action outside the law," they said.

Strike pay

It was the duty and function of unions to stand by their members and this included the provision of strike pay.

They added: "The prohibition on financial support for strikers will not be obeyed."

In their lengthy resolution on labour legislation, the unions said they accepted that trade unions were public organisations and they therefore did not object to providing information about their constitutions andfinances and the extent of their worker representation.

"However, we refuse to subject ourselves to control by anybody other than our own members," the unions said.

BAWU Criticism Labor Policy

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

/Article by Z.B. Molefe/

/Text/

THE existing labour system in South Africa is a product of an exclusive white Government entrenched by white workers, the Black Allied Workers Union (Bawu) said in a statement yesterday.

Bawu was reacting to a Johannesburg afternoon newspaper report which, it said, created the impression that the union would preserve its racial status.

Union secretary, Mr Samuel Nhlapo, said: "Bawu does not see how whites can be regarded as champions of the black workers.

"We also fear unions initiated or guided by whites shall be a projection and perpetuation of white domination and supremacy over black workers under the guise of enlightened 'white leadership'."

Bawu welcomes co-operation with any good-willed and well-intentioned organisation or individuals "but forcefully rejects domination," the statement went on.

It continued: "We also welcome material assistance, with no strings attached. Our stand is based on the principle of self-determination.

"The best we expect from whites is for them to evangelise their lot into accepting a black worker as a human being deserving all the respect due to him."

It was remarkable the so-called non-racial trade unions always had a place for whites at the top and not within their ranks, said the statement — "a simple case of paternalism. As a matter of fact the 100 Dollar question is in whose interests are they serving?"

Bawu also argued that by saying it was racial implies that it was open to those of a particular race or ethnic groups: "This, of course, is inaccurate nonsense as Bawu has active coloured members in its ranks."

Bawu also re-affirmed its stand that labour laws are discriminatory, oppressive and unacceptable to black workers be changed.

PFP Spokesman Boraine's Comment

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 28 Aug 81 p 4

/Text/

IT WAS of the utmost importance that South Africa project as widely as possible the new deal which was taking place in labour relations, Dr Alex Boraine, the Opposition chief labour spokesman, said.

Dr Boraine (PFP Pinelands) said on the Manpower vote in committee: "I believe we have some good news in this department and we must make it known through every available channel."

He was pleased the Government had accepted the recommendation of the commission of inquiry into labour legislation that the submission of annual reports to the International Labour Organisation be resumed.

He wondered if the Minister of Manpower, (Mr Fanie Botha) would comment on how he rated South Africa's chances of getting back into the ILO.

Attaches

"Does he feel we are doing enough by appointing labour attaches in Brussels and Washington?" This had to be seen against the background of labour organisations in many parts of the world being used as levers against South Africa.

Dr Boraine said he was disappointed with some of the decisions the Government had taken although he welcomed the fifth report of the commission and the Government's responding White Paper which indicated further advances in labour reform.

The Government had been a little shortsighted in some responses to the commission's recommendations. He also regretted the delay in action in several important areas and said there was a danger of the Government going in circles with one commission's recommendations being referred to yet another commission.

An example was the exclusion of farm labourers and domestic workers from the scope of the Labour Relations Act.

He regretted that the commission's recommendation regarding peaceful picketing was turned down.

Established

"This is a well-established custom in international industrial action and if it were allowed, it could build discipline within the workforce if they are given the opportunity to use peaceful picketing to alert both workers and the public to the particular conflict they are involved in," he said.

He was particularly disappointed at the government's decision that an employer's unreasonable refusal to recognise a registered trade union which proved itself to be representative by secret ballot, would not constitute grounds for a complaint of unfair labour practice.

Loaded

Workers would regard this as loaded in favour of employers, he said. When an employer set his face against incontrovertible evidence that a union was representative, it should, without doubt, constitute an unfair labour practice and the industrial court should come into play, Dr Boraine said.

Dr Boraine wanted the six basic elements of fair employment practice: The right to work, to associate, to bargain collectively, to withhold labour, to protection and to development, to be written into labour legislation as a labour code. — Sapa.

REPORTAGE, COMMENT ON BLACK HOUSING ISSUES

Koornhof on 99-Year Leasehold

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Aug 81 p 2

/Text/ The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, this week approved introduction of the 99-year leasehold scheme in Pretoria's Mamelodi, Atteridgeville and Saulsville townships.

Further information can be obtained from the Mamelodi township manager, Mr P. Nel, or the Director of Community Service for the Central Transvaal Administration Board, Mr J.A. van Eeden.--Sapa

'RAND DAILY MAIL' Comment

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 20 Aug 81 p 8

/Editorial: "Half a Step"/

/Text/

IF IT is true, as Nationalists are saying, that the Grosskopf commission will recommend that the 99-year leasehold scheme for urban blacks be replaced by freehold title, it is welcome news indeed.

By itself, the 99-year lease is a perfectly respectable legal device; but unless it commands public confidence, it must fail. And black people, so often deprived by this Government of legal rights — not to speak of property held under freehold title — have little reason to trust property rights that differ (for no explicable reasons) from those enjoyed by whites. The result has been failure: no more than about 1 000 houses have been so leased.

A recommendation to scrap the scheme as a failure is at least half a step in the right direction — not that we have much faith in the Government's readiness to take the other half-step and implement the recommendation. But at least it points in the right direction.

Soweto Housing Problems

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 7 Aug 81 p 13

/Article by Anne Sacks/

/Text/

HOUSES in Soweto have been built at the less-than-sluggish rate of about 1 000 a year ever since the Government's West Rand Administration Board (Wrab) took over the administration of the township in 1973.

Today, there is a backlog of some 35 000 units, and demand for housing increases every year by 5 000 units.

When Wrab took over, it was bequeathed up to 70 000 houses in Greater Soweto by the Johannesburg City Council. There are now 103 000 houses in Soweto, a figure arrived at mainly by adding in the number of houses in Dobsonville and Diepmeadow, formerly administered by the Resettlement Board and the Roodepoort City Council.

Since 1973, 7 770 houses have been built from Department of Community Development funds, including at least three housing schemes initiated by the Johannesburg City Council.

Wrab's new chief is Mr John Knoetze, who took office at a time when Government policy toward the provision of houses for blacks is changing.

But since Mr Knoetze's takeover, hardly any impact has been made on the chronic housing shortage.

Stark

In the past 18 months, a mere 704 houses were built from Wrab's housing fund, and nearly completed are 48 houses built from Department of Community Development funds. During that period, R7,7-million was spent on establishing an infrastructure for the provision of services such as water, electricity and sewerage.

The small number of houses built by Wrab and the Government stands in stark contrast to the energetic building programme pursued by the Johannesburg City Council, which built up to 2 000 homes a year — or 35 a day — and up to 5 000 a year when the programme was in top gear.

But in the next three years, Wrab promises to build up to 15 000 houses and a few hundred flats.

Wrab applied for R264-million for housing for 1981-1986 and R42-million for 1981, which includes R17,9-million for the establishing of an infrastructure for the provision of services.

The Government did not delay in making the money available, he says, "but we could have done with very much more, about R20-million more".

Why then, could private enterprise not make up the shortfall?

Because, Mr Knoetze says, serviced land has stood in the way of a greater involvement by the private sector.

The Government has monopolised the building of an infrastructure, and it would be uneconomic to hand serviced stands over to the private sector to develop.

But this is changing, and it is likely private enterprise's considerable resources will be brought in in two phases.

Recovery

Phase one is the handing over of serviced stands to the private sector to develop, with provision in the form of an endowment for the recovery of Government funds.

Phase two, he says, is to allocate raw land to private enterprise to develop when sufficient land becomes available.

Mr Knoetze not only inherited a planning and infrastructure problem, but also the bitter legacy left after the 1976 unrest in the township.

The disturbances effectively put a stop to increasing service tariffs. The township was already falling into arrears, and soon accumulated funds and profits from liquor were exhausted in the running of township services. The subsidy of R30 a month on houses was also eating into funds.

An economic recession followed events in Soweto in '76, and Government funds dried up.

Soweto fell into neglect and it could not have been avoided, Mr Knoetze maintains.

But now he believes Soweto is on the brink of a brave new world.

Ask Mr Knoetze what is to be done and he'll sketch a rather remarkable picture of the Soweto of the future.

He believes Soweto has one million "legal" residents and will have two million by the year 2 000, and that 85% are in an economic position to afford to buy a house because of excellent job opportunities on the Reef.

He accepts the Bureau of Market Research's finding that the average income per household is R390 per month.

He believes too little is being paid for rent, that Government subsidies should be scrapped, and that residents are spending unrealistic amounts on "non-essential luxuries".

"People have over-committed themselves to hire purchase," he says.

He also believes the underprivileged are the responsibility of Government, and Soweto's "rich" should make substantial contributions to helping the poor.

The Soweto of 1984, according to Mr Knoetze, will have all available land developed, the provision of services completed, 25 000 to 30 000 operating telephones, and a shorter waiting list for houses.

Freeways and bypasses will be completed and parks and social amenities improved. Community councils will be economically viable local authorities, probably operating on a regional basis.

The housing backlog will be wiped out by building new flats and houses, and by increasing the density by 50% by re-developing existing houses, altering single quarters to family accommodation, providing better single quarters, and demolishing houses where necessary.

All this will probably be achieved by involving private enterprise, an idea Mr Knoetze is heavily promoting as a member of the Viljoen Commission of Inquiry into ways of involving the private sector in providing houses for blacks, and which will report to the Government in a few weeks.

But the axis of this scheme is the concept of home ownership for all in Soweto, a plan to give residents a vested interest in the status quo.

The Government is committed to selling all houses in Soweto, preferably on a 99-year leasehold basis.

At the moment, Soweto residents can buy their own homes through a 30-year home ownership scheme or through the 99-year leasehold scheme. Neither scheme permits blacks to own the land, ie freehold title.

Deposit

In terms of the home ownership scheme, any registered tenant can buy a house from the board, pay a 10% deposit of not less than R200 for a R10 000 loan and a 20% deposit for a loan over R10 000 on the purchase price, and pay off the balance over 30 years in monthly instalments.

Once the payments are completed, the tenant can occupy the house forever.

In terms of the 99-year leasehold scheme, a person who "qualifies" under certain sections of the Blacks (Urban Areas) Consolidated Act of 1945 is entitled to purchase a house outright and pay for a leasehold title to the land.

The advantage of this scheme is that the holder of the title can sell the house, or rent it, or give it away, or leave to his or her children. The title can also be used as security when borrowing money. Administration board officials have no right of entry and inspection.

Approximately 13 500 homes have already been sold under the 30-year home ownership scheme, another 1 000 have been registered and 3 000 more will be registered shortly. But only about 1 000 homes, throughout the country, have been registered in terms of 99-year leasehold.

Mr Knoetze says the 99-year leasehold scheme is going very well in Soweto.

"With the stroke of a pen, leasehold can be changed to freehold. There will be no need to re-register. Leasehold is a step in the right direction," he says.

Why then is Wrab continuing to sell houses under the home-ownership scheme rather than 99-year leasehold? Mr Knoetze says this is because of the bottleneck in the provision of serviced stands in new areas and in surveying stands in older areas.

Wrab is investigating ways of doing bulk surveying and is considering doing bulk aerial surveys.

The home ownership scheme is of course cheaper because of the flat 10% deposit, while the leasehold scheme requires a deposit of 20%. It is also closely supervised at every stage by Wrab. The owner can do little with his property without the board's permission.

Detractors of the policy of selling homes to blacks, which is the key to the economic viability of the townships, argue that monthly incomes will drop when members of a overcrowded households move into their own homes. The average resident, they say, will not be able to afford the higher monthly payments.

Many blacks too will not be satisfied with anything less than freehold.

Academics, meanwhile, see the plan as part of a new strategy to create an urban, propertied middle class, and to devolve on more powerful community councils hated aspects of township life such as influx control, evictions and lock-outs for rent-arrears, and rent increases.

The community councils will be the municipal equivalent of homeland governments and bear the label of "collaborators".

And by involving private enterprise in the new building programme, the Government is giving capitalism the opportunity to add its weight to change — in the interests of self-preservation.

East Rand Housing

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 21 Aug 81 p 6

/Article by Mzkayise Edom/

/Text/

THE East Rand Administration Board (Erab) has started with the building of about 1000 new houses in Kwa-Thema, Tsakane and Thokoza.

Mr F E Marx, the chief director of Erab, said yesterday they hoped to complete the houses within the next few weeks.

Last month, Marx announced that Erab would spend R12,9 million for housing in 10 of the 14 townships of the East Rand, during the 1981/2 financial year.

TENDERS

"We hope to complete building new houses in the 10 townships on the East Rand before the end of March next year. We have approached tenders and they will start with the building of the houses in the other seven townships soon."

At the moment, there is a shortage of 21 000 houses in the East Rand with Katlehong and Tembisa topping the list. In Katlehong alone, there are about 12 000 families living in backyard shacks.

PROGRAMME

The housing programme is as follows:

- Vosloorus: R907 920 will be spent on the existing 6 000 houses and 160 new houses will be erected at the end of the year.
- Daveyton: R10 922, will be spent to complete the existing 308 houses.
- Tembisa: R1,9 million will be spent for the building of two new hostels to accommodate more than 6 000 inmates.
- Duduza: R163 000 will be spent on the existing 604 houses and 38 houses will be erected.
- Kwa-Thema R1 million will be spent on the existing 821 houses and the board has started with the building of 400 new houses.
- Bronkhorstspruit: R151 705 will be spent to complete the existing 131 houses.
- Delmas R200 000 will be spent to complete the existing 141 houses.
- Katlehong: R3,6 million will be spent on the existing 2 000 schemes.
- Thokoza: R2,5 million will be spent on the existing 1 000 houses.
- Tsakane: R3,2 million will be spent on the existing 2 580 house scheme.

POST-LIBERATION OBJECTIVE SHOULD BE ONE NATION

London SECHABA in English Jun 81 pp 25-29

/Official organ of the African National Congress South Africa/

/Letter to the editor: "The National Question" by Madoda Tshawe--not further identified/

/Text/

I was particularly thrilled to see an article on the National Question in the November 1980 issue of Sechaba. In this article I would like to touch on some aspects of this question and pose some problems which we encounter in solving it. I am far from suggesting that my ideas are final. On the contrary, this is a contribution to the on-going discussion and should be viewed as such.

This question has been with us since the emergence of the liberation movement in the latter part of the 19th century. Those who have followed the discussion in our journals and newspapers over the last 70 years will understand what I am talking about. In the 1950s Jack Simons, Lionel Forman and others revived the discussion. It was a sensitive question in our movement. Besides that, there were differences of opinion. It is not our task here to analyse these trends and tendencies. But all the same I would like to say one or two things about the significance of the discussion on the national question in our movement in the 50's and the contribution of Lionel Forman to this discussion.

Lionel Forman was very sensitive to the national question, perhaps even impatient. One needs only to read his published, but especially his unpublished works to notice this. His approach is interesting because:

(a) He posed the question before the adoption of the Freedom Charter, to be more precise, early in 1954. After the adoption of the Freedom Charter one notices a shift of emphasis in his formulations, and perhaps even in his concept;

(b) His central theme on this question was the Africans and it is interesting to note that even those who differed with him did not differ on this but on his remarks on the whites, especially the Afrikaner.

It is relevant to remark that Lionel Forman and his contemporaries were preoccupied with the attempt to define a nation, and discussions went beyond that and posed the question whether there was a nation in South Africa or not.

I agree with a lot of what Lionel Forman said, but there are questions on which I definitely disagree with him. I am sure that if he had lived longer he would have changed his ideas—in any case our movement has changed a lot since 1954. He has contributed to this development.

The discussion went beyond the South

African boundaries—he corresponded and exchanged ideas with Professor Potechin, the Director of Africa Institute in Moscow, and an international authority on the national question in South Africa. Lionel Forman was involved in a discussion on this topic in Marxism Today, the theoretical journal of the Communist Party of Great Britain, in 1959 and thereby helped to internationalise the discussion. He was invited by Professor Potechin to an International Congress of Orientalists which was to be held in Leningrad in 1960, but he could not attend because he died in 1959 at the early age of 31.

I am mentioning all this because some of us do not know this background. We are definitely indebted to such people—whatever their shortcomings—that today we look at this problem from a somewhat different angle. By 'different angle' I mean the simple fact that today we no longer analyse the national question only in the light of Stalin's definition. Not that Stalin's definition was wrong. The problem is that those days there was either a definitional approach or mechanical application of social and political arrangements. We have not yet overcome this problem. But one of the greatest dangers in dealing with the national question is the problem of dogmatism; we need creative thinking; let us discuss but we should not make a mistake of hurrying to final conclusions; we need more flexible opinions—more so that the national question is such a difficult problem; a politically emotive question; a question which needs careful handling.

In analysing the national question we attempt to analyse the processes that take place in our country and try to interpret reality in the light of facts and theory.

The ANC has always sought to encourage and develop a unity of ideas in our movement, especially on the national question; a discussion and even polemics on this question is welcome. But if we cannot achieve a unity of ideas, we must achieve, at least, a demarcation of differences. This is also allowed. The clarity of ideas is the essential condition for giving the people confidence in the liberatory movement for winning mass support and giving proper guidance.

Our Stand

It is our firm belief that every people, despite its level of development, despite whether it has formed a nation or not, has a right to determine its destiny, that is the right to self-determination. The right to self-determination in South Africa expresses itself in:

a) The struggle for political liberation and social emancipation from Apartheid;
b) The right to national self-determination of the different cultural-linguistic groups under conditions of complete equality.

We should remember that the oppression of the blacks in South Africa is not the result of racism but of capitalism. The racist laws are capitalist laws. But this does not mean we should underplay racism and national oppression more so that, in South Africa, the colonised differ from the coloniser not only in culture but also in physical type, the physical differences rather than the cultural became the basis for discrimination.

In short national self-determination does not mean territorial secession, separation, fragmentation or formation of small states. It means the right to self determination for a single South African nation within the whole of South Africa. That is the destruction of the present state apparatus and its replacement with a new state apparatus—that state's right to self determination; the right of the Blacks to their own state power with sovereignty over every inch of South Africa. This does not mean that the state will be completely black. But it does mean that the majority of the people, the Africans, will definitely predominantly determine the form the state will assume. The numbers mean a lot and the social position of the Africans in society means more. In other words in South Africa we are not primarily dealing with the problem of changing South Africa's relations with a foreign nation, outside our borders, as was the case in colonial Africa, including Mozambique, Angola, Zimbabwe and Namibia. The national question revolves around the question of internal arrangements within South Africa itself. The destruction of the present state will alter the status of the majority. This entails equalisation of political and legal rights (full franchise); the right to sell one's labour power in any field of activity (abolition of the colour bar) and the right to buy and possess property in any area (abolition of reserves and homelands as well as the abolition of laws which restrict on the grounds of colour). The overthrow of oppression is closely connected with the extension of democracy.

On Nationalism

Progressives in South Africa used to be shy, suspicious or even afraid of the tern 'nationalism' with the result that mostly reactionaries posed themselves as 'nationalists' in order to get popular support. By supporting or even upholding the revolutionary nationalism of the oppressed you are better able to distinguish between revolutionary and reactionary nationalism—the people will see things in their true light. What is important is the 'class position' even on the question of nationalism. The revolutionary national feeling of the oppressed people and the need to put forward a correct policy to gain the confidence of the people and direct the struggle towards the winning of national liberation are compelling practical political questions which need to be taken seriously. Any slight misunderstanding of this question inevitably or automatically leads to un underestimation of the internal strength of the national liberation movement; to a lack of understanding of the profoundly popular and profoundly revolutionary nature of the national liberation movement. The profoundly popular, profoundly revolutionary national feeling of the Africans expresses itself in the fact that the common people cherish their languages and culture—the defence of the national or rather ethnic languages especially when they are under attack, and the demand for full recognition of the African languages have always been an important demand of the people. The demand for full status for the African languages in every sphere is an essential part of any policy of national liberation. We aim at developing ethnic and national cultures and languages so that they can flourish and reach full bloom as a prelude to fusion.

The unity of the Africans does not necessarily mean the disappearance of ethnic languages and cultures of different African peoples. On the contrary, their development means that a possibility will arise when they will merge and a new African language might emerge.

This brings me into conflict with Lionel Forman's thesis which states that:

> '... the likelihood is that a number of different nations will come into being in our country, and that they will flower and prosper before they merge'.

He develops his thesis:

> 'A single African nation in South Africa is likely to develop before a single South African nation does. And similarly it seems likely that Zulu, Basotho and other nations will develop before they merge into a single African nation'.

Surely Lionel Forman is looking at a future South Africa and is dealing with a delicate issue of periodisation of the evolution of the national question in South Africa. But even then a new South Africa will be a product of our actions and thinking today. It is true when Lionel Forman wrote these words in the late 50s the force and power of African nationalism (and for that matter the degree or depth of inter-ethnic relations amongst the Blacks) was not as advanced as it is today. Those days there was no Umkhonto we Sizwe which is playing a vital role in unifying our people. Since the 1960s—despite Apartheid and Bantustans—various ethnic groups have interacted.

Enemy Manoeuvres

African nationalism attaches importance to the recognition and development of oppressed languages and cultures, but it also aims at the achievement of equal and democratic rights.

The ruling class has always sought to preserve aspects of African culture and incorporate them in the oppressive system e.g Zulu dance is meant to entertain tourists who visit mines, so is gum boot dance. It is true that the development of capitalism since the discovery of diamonds and gold meant serious inroads into the traditional forms of organisation of Africans and their culture with the result that the distinct cultures peculiar to specific African ethnic groups seem to be a relic of the past. But this does not mean that we should despise or ignore them. Our task is to develop them.

In short the Boers, though they pretend to revive African tradition (through Bantustans etc) aim at stamping out all national traits and characteristics of the Africans.

The Whites

If in this article I have not said much about the whites, it is not because I do not see their relevance in the struggle now and in the future. To quote Saso: They have to choose either to be part of the problem or part of the solution. Since the Morogoro Conference of 1969 the ANC allowed whites to bemembers of the ANC. In reply to our enemies we say: by allowing whites into our movement the ANC was far from making concessions to white arrcgance or chauvinism. On the contrary the ANC seemed to have foresseen what was going to face and complicate issues in other parts of the continent. By opening the doors to the whites— and it must be said to their credit that in South Africa we have (comparing with other former African colonial countries) a relatively large number of whites who have joined us—the ANC was implementing internationalism of the Africans, the need to prove in practical terms the meaning of internationalism. So that I should not be misunderstood, I am one of those who are convinced that internationalism cannot be reduced to the so-called 'international scene'. When Bram Fischer died his soul was bubbling with internationalism: the identity of interests of people all over the world including the relationship between black and white in South Africa.

Lenin dealt with the question of internationalism on the national question and he was of the opinion that internationalism 'must consist not only in the observance of the formal equality of nations but even in inequaltiy of the oppressor nation, the great nation, that must make up for the inequality which obtains in actual fact'.

What Lenin had in mind was not simply the question of 'pitying the blacks' or 'helping them with gifts' or 'compensating' for the lack of trust, suspicion and daily insults to which the Africans have been subjected all these centuries. What he was saying is simple: after independence we shall have to arrest the development of the whites in the interest of the development of the blacks. This will affect every aspect of social life, education, army, economy etc.

But we shall have to make use of white expertise without losing our principles. I don't want to be misunderstood as suggesting that blacks are incompetent. What I am saying is that it will take an ANC government some time to produce experts who will manage the economy—and in the meantime we shall need some white experts. This will be on our terms and in the interests of the revolution. This is of great significance because you cannot feed the masses with political slogans and when they are starving they will be used against the new government or perhaps start 'complaining': the Boers were better than this new government

Some Solutions

In conclusion I want to state that in South Africa there is no evidence to suggest that there is any national group, African or not, which demands an existence separate and apart from the rest of the other South African national groups; there is no demand for a separate national culture; no demand for separate education—on the contrary, the demand is for universal, uniform education. The move towards Bantustans, 'Bantu Culture' and Bantu education stems from the ruling racists.

It seems to me important, if not vital, to have a homogeneous national movement which will unite the heterogeneous ethnic groups; a combined movement of all classes and groups consisting of the oppressed nation including revolutionaries from the oppressor nation; a movement that will wage a national struggle primarily directed at the overthrow of political and legal discrimination. The ANC is definitely fulfilling this task. The existence of an oppressed nation that does the struggling and therefore has a right to national self-determination—that is a national group or groups that have the right for conditions to be created by which they may become nations.

The encouragement of a people's nationalism, a progressive nationalism, at this stage of our revolution is of great significance, but this presupposes that we must know the demands of our different national groups and desires which ring the strongest chords among the people.

The ruling class seeks to accentuate our differences and we, on the other hand, emphasise the similarities of the oppressed: our common and indivisible oppression, our common interests and our common destiny, even psychologically we are one because we think of ourselves, we act and behave as members of the oppressed nation. But this should not be interpreted as to mean that blacks are homogeneous. Even their attitude as groups or sections within groups is not the same—some see national liberation as a leverage. The black 'petit bourgeoisie' sees only national oppression and the black workers see both class and national oppression. The peasant sees the oppressing national group as coming to take his land, his cattle, his money if he has any, or even his wife and perhaps his children. This means that after independence some sections of the community might have different interests and views, but to raise that question now when there is no such demand would be a dangerous move.

But the most urgent task of today is unity—the welding together of this vast human mass in the flux of a single grievance: the disability put upon them by law; that great mass is becoming mobile, learning to co-operate and moving irresistably forward to demand equality of opportunity and a state of their own creation.

The slogan of the ANC has, throughout the ages, been FREEDOM IN THE LAND OF OUR FOREFATHERS and not AFRICA FOR THE AFRICANS. There was and still is ample reason for this.

But I am convinced that one day we shall refer to each other only as 'South Africans' not as Africans, Coloureds, Indians and Whites. Till that moment there is still a long way to go. But when we become 'South Africans' we shall all obviously be Africans and only then shall the slogan 'Africa for the Africans' make sense in South Africa.

MATANZIMA, MANGOPE EXPRESS RESERVATIONS TO BOTHA

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 25 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

/Excerpt/ The leaders of two of South Africa's independent black states, Transkei and Bophuthatswana, appear to have given the thumbs down to the Government's constellation of states policy in its present form.

In a blunt statement to a crucial summit meeting recently on the constellation concept, Prime Minister George Matanzima of Transkei told the South African Government:

The whole policy would be seen by his people as nothing more than "delaying tactics" unless prompt action was taken to clear the bottlenecks in project aid which had brought development in his territory to a virtual standstill.

The current proposals for regional economic co-operation will contribute nothing of what is needed most by Transkei--development inside the country.

The meeting held in Cape Town on July 20 and attended by top South Africa, Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda officials--was chaired by the Prime Minister, Mr P.W. Botha.

President Lucas Mangope of Bophutuatswana who headed the delegation to the summit from his territory, is also understood to have allied himself with the opposition to the constellation in its present form.

Both leaders are insistent that development inside their individual states and meaningful land consolidation had to precede regional economic co-operation across national boundaries as envisaged by Pretoria.

Confusion over the constellation policy was increased by South African authorities sending out two memoranda for the summit meeting.

The first stated that land consolidation would adhere strictly to the 1936 Land Act. The second, which was sent out a few days before the meeting, took a different line. It stated that Pretoria was prepared to consider further proposals for consolidation if they proved essential for development.

In his statement of policy to the meeting, Prime Minister Matanzima detailed his dissatisfaction at the way development aid was managed by South Africa and the long delays in getting projects in Transkei off the ground.

He accused two top-level South African advisers of having more power in his country than he himself. The officials had "played a great part in either influencing or manipulating the development stagnation" in Transkei since last year.

They had put "administration ahead of development," Prime Minister Matanzima told the meeting. "The last straw was the inefficiency with which the 1981/82 budget was prepared." A deficit of R40-m became apparent within three months of its preparation, he added.

He asked for the officials to be recalled and said the situation in Transkei was of a crisis nature. Almost all capital aid projects for Transkei were still pending and there would be little to show the people of Transkei on the fifth anniversary of the territory in October.

TRANSKEI POPULATION GROWTH CONTINUES TO DECLINE

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 27 Aug 81 p 9

/Article by Patrick Laurence/

/Excerpt/

UMTATA. — Illegal "immigration" to South Africa contributed to a sharp decline in Transkei's population growth rate between 1970 and 1980, Professor Wolfgang Thomas, of the University of Transkei, said yesterday.

Prof Thomas was commenting in an interview on the squatter crisis and the conflict of will it has precipitated between South Africa and Transkei over which should accept responsibility for black squatters in South Africa.

In the decade 1970-1980 Transkei's resident population grew by 1,7% instead of the anticipated 2,7% appropriate to a "Third World" country like Transkei, Prof Thomas said.

One of the reasons for the decline was the "illegal" exodus of Transkeians to South Africa, which had led to the rise of settlements like Crossroads in the 1970s, he added.

Prof Thomas, who recently delivered a detailed paper on Transkei's economy to the Economic Society of South Africa, made it clear that emigration from Transkei was rooted in unemployment.

According to the "most conservative" estimates, Transkei, with a de facto population of about 2 700 000 and a labour force of about 900 000, has at least 120 000 unemployed.

The estimate is based on the assumption that 200 000 Transkei peasants are able to earn a living from the land.

The pressure on people to leave Transkei and enter South Africa unlawfully was compounded by the fall in the number of migrant labourers recruited for contract work in South Africa, Prof Thomas said.

Growing

"Available statistics on migrant employment suggest a recruitment peak of about 425 000 men in 1978 followed by a decline to about 345 000 in 1979 and 1980."

The number of unemployed in Transkei was growing by 700 000 a year.

Even Transkei matriculants found it difficult to get paid work and the Public Service Commission was receiving about 50 applications a day.

AZAPO REBUTS 'SOWETAN' EDITORIAL ON AID TO SQUATTERS

'SOWETAN' Comment

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 17 Aug 81 p 6

/Editorial: "Our Aid?"/

/Excerpt/

UNHAPPY as we maybe about the attitudes we have adopted, it is understandable that we often think and react in terms of colour, even when the needs of simple humanity call out with urgency.

But it is a bit of a shame on blacks that whenever our people are overwhelmed by miserable conditions, whites come out with the help. It is all very well for us to be cynical and say that some, or even most, of these liberals are nursing badly battered consciences.

The simple truth is they are serving people out there in Nyanga and Kliptown who are cold, hungry and bewildered.

What we are saying is the time is ripe for our black organisations, from the woman's league, Azapo to Inkatha to get off their polemics and do something for black people. Why should we allow whites to run the risk as in Cape Town to provide for our kin? What is happening to our much vaunted communalism?

We should really be ashamed of ourselves when the need to help our folk presents itself so dramatically, and all we do is bleat out in frustrated anger.

It is all very well for us to launch political attacks from the luxury and safety of our homes and offices while people are in dire need of the bare necessities. The weather in Cape Town has been most unkind and it seems the Government's determined assault on the problems was most unfortunately timed.

Not only that, but the focus has been put on these problems by the well-timed visit of American Congressmen. The country has been exposed to the kind of battering it has become so used to.

It is interesting to see reports of unease even from Afrikaans churches and universities. The whole country has been made to squirm in its guilt because of the extraordinary hard-heartedness of bureaucrats.

Having said that, let us blacks put our anger aside for a while and come out with the help that is so badly needed. This is not the first time that blacks have suffered in our midst without us lifting as much as a finger to help.

Wauchope Rebuttal

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 25 Aug 81 p 8

/Article by George Wauchope, AZAPO secretary/

/Text/

SIR — Black communialism means the coexistence, interdependence, sharing of wealth and poverty and the sharing of joy and grief among the black people.

When one black person or community is in trouble, it is incumbent upon the more fortunate to rally around and give whatever help they can.

Blacks do not have to stand on a mountain and tell the world what they have done. As blacks we give help as a matter of genuine concern, sincerity and because we are directly affected.

It was therefore unfortunate that the SOWETAN came up with a serious attack on the black community as a whole without first verifying the facts. Many black people have been to the resettlement camps and squatter areas to offer help without blowing their trumpets.

Concerning the recent incident of squatters in Crossroads, Nyanga and Kliptown, Azapo was involved through its branches and community development sub-committees. Seeing that SOWETAN is mainly a Reef paper I will highlight some of the things Azapo did in Kliptown.

The secretariate for health organised a mobile clinic which was and still is manned by Dr J Variava and Dr A Asvat. Dr Variava is the former Azapo secretary for health and sport, and Dr Asvat is an executive member of the Lenasia branch.

Our Klipspruit, Dlamini and Chiawelo units have always been involved in Kliptown giving whatever help they could. In fact to date, they are taking turns in taking hot meals every evening, to the affected people.

Azapo has also enlisted the help of other concerned organisations in Soweto and as is customary for blacks, none of these has ever come out to boast for what it has done for the victims.

The fact that August 18 is regarded as compassion day in the black consciousness calender and the fact that Azapo had invited other sister black organisations on Sunday August 16 to a special seminar on resettlement and squatter camps proves how concerned the organisation is with the plight of the victims there.

In fact, Azapo resolved to:

- Rededicate ourselves to fight all laws that destroy the black people and to fight the creators and perpetrators of such laws;
- Directly and practically involve ourselves in helping people in the so-called squatter camps and resettlement areas;
- Set out national plans, strategies and information which will safeguard the involvement of the black masses in any problems that may be caused by "squatting" and resetlement in future.

Although it is not in the nature of Azapo to blow its trumpet for whatever it does, I do feel that it is incumbent upon me to put the record straight in view of the insinuation expressed in the SOWETAN editorial.

Black Consciousness Seminar

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 17 Aug 81 p 3

/Article by Len Kalane/

/Text/

AZAPO HAS termed the coming "independence" of the Ciskei "another sell-out action by the notorious bantustan leaders".

Chief Lennox Sebe "and those of his mentality" were drawing the wrath of the black nation to themselves, Azapo president Khehla Mthembu told a seminar yesterday.

PEOPLE'S WRATH

"Stooges Muzorewa and Chirau had their share of the people's wrath," he said.

The seminar, which was also attended by people from other black consciousness movements, focused on Government-created institutions, with special emphasis on the forthcoming South African Indian Council elections and the Ciskeian "independence" in December. It also looked into resettlement and squatter problems, and ways of helping people at places like Nyanga and Kliptown.

DISCREPANCY

Speaking on "independent" states, Mthembu said: "The miseries caused by Matanzima, Mangope and Mphephu to their so-called citizens are untold. One need not be a mathematician to see the discrepancy or unproportionality between 13 per cent given to over 24 million people and 87 per cent given to six million.

"We recognise the fact that the entire country of Azania belongs to the black people, hence our vehement rejection of the bantustan policy. The policy of bantustans has arisen by the myth that the black people consist of separate nations."

Mthembu said this imposition of the white government was aimed at:

- Depriving the black people of their inalienable right of citizenship in the country;
- Destroying the unity and solidarity of the black people;
- Fostering the apartheid policy of divide and rule and;
- Facilitating the continued economic exploitation of the black people.

The seminar, heard at Wilgespruit, near Roodepoort, heard that the South African Indian Council was another of those "diabolical" strategies the "settler" Government was trying to create to legalise their "right" to think for everyone, as said by Prime Minister P W Botha in Parliament recently.

MOTLANA DISCUSSES ISSUE OF TALKS WITH GOVERNMENT

Johannesburg FRONTLINE in English Jul-Aug 81 pp 33-34

/Text/

POLITICAL analysts are agreed South Africa is coming under increasing pressure to talk to the authentic black leadership. The days of puppeteering with carefully selected and cultivated community council and homeland leaders are coming to be seen for the waste of time they are.

It is pointless for Pretoria to hold so-called consultations with the "Made in Pretoria" leaders who represent no-one but the interests of the apartheid regime.

South Africa has for years staved off the day when she would have to sit round a table with the authentic black leadership to usher in the new era. She has managed to carry it off, so far, by such devices as flaunting her mineral wealth to deter the western world from interfering too strongly.

She has hoped for miracles to happen - that the west would accept apartheid, and that blacks in South Africa would be talked into it by the puppet leaders and their charade of independence.

But these miracles are not happening. Blacks are further than ever from accepting what the government is trying to push down their throats. All that these efforts have led to is a situation where more and more blacks automatically believe that anything any white man says is against their interests.

For a while, the rulers thought that the new administration in Washington was an answer to their prayers - but now even Reagan is demanding real movement towards the dismantling of the apartheid edifice as a quid pro quo for embracing our latter-day racists.

They are losing hope in miracles, and are beginning to want to talk turkey.

We blacks were rather intrigued, therefore, when during the last election campaign the Prime Minister, Mr. P.W. Botha, stated that he would be willing to meet with the Committee of Ten under certain conditions.

Our immediate response was to declare that the need for such a meeting does not - at this moment arise.

This decision has been criticised by white people. Some take it as renewed evidence that we are "parmantige Bantoes" and others argue that we should grasp every opportunity to make contact with the regime and to enlighten it.

Let no-one make the mistake of thinking we are keen to speak to the ruling party merely for the sake of speaking. We have over the years considered becoming entangled in government-created institutions, but have rejected this because these institutions are created not in our interests, but in direct opposition to them.

Nor will we be "consulted" by the government to serve as tools for its purposes. The government can always make a show of "consulting" a few blacks whose views will be ignored when decisions are made. But it will be reported that decisions were arrived at after due consultation with all groups, and thus we are compromised. We will not be used to give the government respectability.

At a well-attended mass meeting in Soweto in April 1978 it was decided that we blacks would neither accept any invitation to consult with the government nor serve on any government-created body until the government showed its commitment to change by doing one little thing: abolishing the pass laws. The pass laws are the most vicious, unChristian system of human control ever devised by man against man, excluding neither Nazi Germany nor Stalinist Russia. While they exist, we will not begin to think of talking to their perpetrators.

Subsequently, a firmer stance has also been taken by most authentic black organisations regarding the pre-conditions that we would require before we speak to the government. These are:

- that the principal black leaders, who are in jail or exile, would attend any such consultations, and:
- that the agenda for the meeting consists of determining the methods of dismantling apartheid and creating a non-racial democratic society.

Mr. Botha should not be surprised that we set our own pre-conditions. He sees nothing wrong with setting pre-conditions himself. He says that he will speak to the Committee of Ten, but not to the ANC, the PAC or Azapo, and that he will only speak to us if we (according to the newspapers) "renounce violence and extremism". He has made it clear that there are some things which are not negotiable, such as shared power.

Do he and his supporters think that because he is in power and we are not, therefore he can set whatever pre-conditions he likes and we must swallow whatever degrading crumbs he offers us? Let them then think again.

If we are not meeting to talk about how to create a society where we all have equal citizenship, then there is nothing to meet about.

We recognise the realities. We know who holds the power at the present. We are keen to speak to the government, and we are very keen to achieve justice without having to pass through turmoil. But we do not want the government to think we are so keen that we will negotiate with it to our own disadvantage, or that we will accept half-baked reforms which leave us as second-class citizens.

If the government dropped its pre-conditions, and invited blacks to speak to it on a basis where everything was negotiable, then we would still find it difficult - in the light of past experiences - to accept. But we may then develop a different attitude towards the government's bona fides, and we may agree to meet on a basis that is not all that we desire.

But the government should remember that to meet on any terms at all, already involves us in compromise. The only thing which would not involve us in compromise is the total and immediate abolition of apartheid, and the creation in South Africa of the legal equality which the entire world recognises is our right.

We do not see why we should have to meet to negotiate for that right. Nonetheless, we are prepared to meet because the reality is that if that right is not negotiated then it will be achieved through violence.

We recognise white fears and we recognise the need to settle those fears in order to create a just, non-racial society. We are very willing to guarantee the rights of all individuals. We are prepared to do a lot of hard talking to come to terms on such matters as economic policy. But whites should not think that our reasonableness will extend to accepting a system in which they continue to hold special privileges under the law. That would be an insult us.

'SOWETAN' CRITICIZES REFERENDUM IDEA

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 18 Aug 81 p 6

/Editorial: "Back to Ox-Wagon Days!"/

/Text/

ONE OF the more serious anomalies in South African perspectives is the racial error of parallax.

If the leader of the Opposition, Dr Frederick van Zyl Slabbert, who is seen to be one of those most outspoken against the Government, can be reported to see the new legislation for a referendum into the constitution as a leap forward, then the polical divide between black and white is enormous.

We find the Prime Minister's call for this new legislation not only belated but simply tepid after the poor performance he and his government put against the dreaded verkramptes.

Dr Slabbert himself raises minor questions like: how will the voters' roll for blacks be controlled; will only urban blacks be allowed to have a say; what questions will be asked? There are more fundamental questions.

Now that blacks (and we use the word in its generic form to include coloureds and Indians) have shown their disenchantment with the President's Council, what is the aim of the referendum? We also see separate referanda for separate races self-defeating and most unscientific to say the least.

There would be problems about such a referendum across the board even if things were normal here.

Those coloureds and Indians co-opted into the President's Council are a minority voice. Most blacks have boycotted the Council or come out most strongly against it. We do not see how the Government hopes to get even a bare minority to voice their feelings in this abortive exercise.

Because blacks have not been consulted in the Council and because there has been this upswing to the Right within the government - the least we can expect is a massive boycott of such a move.

It does seem to us a waste of time and money that legislation has to be passed for a referendum into a measure which is a dead letter in the eyes of the majority in the first place.

The referendum is perhaps another smoke-screen by a government which has been battered psychologically by the rightwingers.

Further to that we fear many whites, not excluding Dr Slabbert, would like to console themselves that the government can surface from the quagmire of conservatism that uses its emotion more than its head in our very complex situation. We hope these whites would stop making such sympathetic noises and call a spade by its name.

Our government (and those preceding this one) will not ever have the courage to put its lunatic fringe on the right exactly where it belongs - back to the ox-wagon days.

BLACK UNIVERSITY PLAN FACES INCREASING OPPOSITION

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 19 Aug 81 p 2

/Text/

The row over the proposed Vista University for blacks near Pretoria is gathering momentum as a select parliamentary committee studies the Bill to establish the university.

Academics and politicians have not only attacked the Bill as being an "abhorrent attempt to entrench apartheid" but are viewing it as a serious threat to the future of "open" or mixed universities.

They have also seriously questioned the morality of establishing a new university when existing universities are financially crippled and have queried the economics and practicality of such a university.

The Bill has already passed through two readings.

The Department of Education and Training (DET) said the university was being planned against a background of an estimated 180 000 blacks who would matriculate in 2000.

In 1990 a total of 22 340 blacks were expected to get matric exemption and another 44 673 to get a Senior Certificate.

The DET said it was important to note that last year more than 7 420 students at adult education centres were studying for matric.

"In addition the proposed new university will provide opportunities for 33 654 teachers — of whom only 448 are graduates — to improve their academic qualifications."

Last year 19 711 blacks were enrolled at the various universities, of whom 10 687 were enrolled through Unisa.

A significant criticism directed against Vista is that it will offer no correspondence courses.

The enrolment figures are more than double those of five years ago.

In addition 8 263 degrees were awarded to blacks from 1956 to 1979.

Academics and politicians are strongly opposed to the university not only over the "potentially disastrous consequences of further racial polarisation" but because of the ability of the university to meet future black undergraduate needs.

INKATHA, AFRIKANER YOUTH FORM FOUNDATION

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 25 Aug 81 p 11

/Article by Themba Khumalo/

/Text/

Inkatha Youth Brigade leaders and moderate Afrikaner students merged at the weekend to form the South African Youth Foundation at the University of Stellenbosch.

According to Mr Ntwe Mafole, national organiser of the Youth Brigade, the inaugural meeting of the foundation was addressed by the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Koornhof, Mr Gibson Thula, urban representative of the kwaZulu Government, and Dr Oscar Dlomo, general secretary of Inkatha.

Mr Mafole said the meeting was also attended by the former PFP leader, Mr Colin Eglin and other prominent members of Parliament who are attending the Parliamentary session in Cape Town.

He said they formed the foundation as individuals and not as youth brigade leaders.

The main aim of the foundation is to improve relations and co-operation between black and white youths because the future of the country was in the hands of the young, Mr Mafole said.

Mr Mafole said Dr Koornhof and Dr Dlomo emphasised the necessity of unity between blacks and whites, particularly among the youth of this country.

He said Mr Thula spoke about influx control problems experienced by blacks.

Mr Mafole pointed out that merging with white students was consistent with the policy of Inkatha which allowed them to collaborate with people of all races who were prepared to negotiate.

"The motive is not a membership drive of Inkatha but to prove that we as youths, black and white can work together in harmony," Mr Mafole said.

He said some white students who were members of the foundation have been appointed to conduct winter classes at the University of kwaZulu during school holidays.

YEAR'S GUERILLA ATTACKS LISTED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 14 Aug 81 p 3

/Article by Tony Weaver/

/Text/

A NATIONWIDE increase in guerrilla attacks on installations and military and police targets has marked 1981 — and the banned African National Congress has claimed responsibility for most of the incidents.

The diary of sabotage and armed guerrilla attacks this year includes:

● February 7: Blast rocks Field Street, Durban, at about 2.30pm, damaging shops and slightly injuring two passersby. No-one has claimed responsibility for the blast, which cmae soon after a Wit Kommando attack on the house of a local MPC.

● April 14: Explosives destroy 20m of the main rail line between Richards Bay and Vryheid in Natal, partly derailing a laden goods train. Thought to have been the work of Umkhonto we Sizwe (MK), the ANC's military wing.

Limpet mines

● April 21: Serious damage to two main transformers at a Durban power substation by what are thought to have been limpet mine blasts. MK claims responsibility.

● May 6: A section of rail line near Hoedspruit in the Eastern Transvaal is blasted by TNT. MK claims responsibility.

● May 10: A handgrenade thrown by a guerrilla suspect kills a police detective at Cottondale, near Hoedspruit.

○ May 21: Port Elizabeth's rail link to Johannesburg and Cape Town is ripped apart by a bomb blast.

● May 25: As Republic Day celebrations reach their height, a wave of MK sabotage hits the country. An East London police station is attacked with grenades and AK-47 rifles, shortly before a rifle attack on the Ciskeian Commisioner of Police, Brigadier Charles Sebe; portions of rail line blasted between New Canada and Dube in Soweto and on the Umlazi-Durban link; power lines in the Free State are cut; an unexploded pamphlet bomb is defused in Durban.

Fringe group

● May 27: Bomb blast wrecks a Defence Force recruiting office in Durban.

● June 1: Three Progressive Federal Party offices hit by petrol bombs, and an ultra-Leftwing fringe group believed responsible. ANC sources denied responsibility.

● June 6: The Durban Cenotaph is badly damaged in a blast believed to have been the work of the ANC.

● June 11: Portion of track blasted on the Durban-Empangeni line.

● July 3: Powerful limpet mine is found and defused on the Shell petrol storage depot in Alberton.

● July 21: The MK cause "several millions of rands" damage with limpet mine blasts at two Eastern Transvaal power stations and a power plant.

● July 26: Durban showrooms of McCarthy Sigma and McCarthy Leyland wrecked by powerful bombs.

● August 6: Central Square in East London hit by a powerful bomb, shattering windows and causing minor injuries.

● August 8: Constantia shopping centre in Port Elizabeth damaged by a bomb, causing minor injuries to pedestrians.

● August 11: Voortrekkerhoogte military base hit by a rocket attack.

ENLARGED COMMISSION TO STUDY PROBLEM OF URBAN BLACKS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Sep 81 p 4

/Text/

HOUSE of ASSEMBLY. — The Van Der Walt Commission is to be enlarged in order to investigate the situation of the urban Black, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof announced in Parliament yesterday.

Speaking on his vote in the Budget Committee Stage, he said the Cabinet had approved the extension of the Commission to 12 members or more under two vice-chairmen.

Half the enlarged Commission would have the specific task of investigating and reporting on those Blacks living outside the national states.

The other half would continue to concern itself with the national states and consolidation.

"The commission will also be drawn into a closer relationship with the top structure of the Department of Co-operation and Development in order that they can co-ordinate with the two separate parts concerning Blacks inside and outside the national states," he said.

The Cabinet had also approved the recruitment of a "top expert" to serve the department on a contract basis, Dr Koornhof said.

This expert would be a recognised authority in the field of urbanisation and housing and he hoped to be able to announce his name soon.

Dr Koornhof denied Opposition claims that the Government had no plan or strategy to deal with Black urbanisation.

An elaborate programme drawn up by his department recognised that although squatting was not policy, upgrading and clearance of squatter areas was a priority target.

Among the other aspects of the agreed programme were issues such as the desirability of creating site and service schemes and the need to encourage self-build housing schemes.

Ways and means would also be sought to eliminate obstacles in the way of financing private home building by the individual and to activate employers into participating in the provision of homes for workers.

The Cabinet had also received and considered the report of the Viljoen Commission's inquiry into Soweto's housing and the private sector's involvement.

'BORDER ADJUSTMENT' TALKS WITH SWAZILAND ANALYZED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 20 Aug 81 p 9

/Article by Patrick Laurence/

/Text/

SOUTH Africa and Swaziland entered their "border adjustment" talks with diametrically opposed assumptions and objectives, which are almost certain to complicate if not torpedo their negotiations.

The talks focus primarily on the land which lies between Swaziland and the Indian Ocean — which at present falls under KwaZulu — but are understood to extend to those pieces of South Africa's "Swazi homeland" of KaNgwane adjoining the northern border of Swaziland.

As a matter of real politik, South Africa is unlikely to surrender any territory without gaining some political advantage in return, particularly as any decision to cede territory already alotted to KwaZulu is certain to arouse bitter feelings among South Africa's more than 5-million Zulu people.

One obvious objective for Pretoria is to make fulfilment of Swaziland's long-cherished dream of an outlet to the sea conditional on its willingness to become a de facto partner in South Africa's proposed Constellation of Southern Africa States.

KwaZulu's Chief Minister, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, who accuses South Africa of "wheeler-dealing", has no doubt that Pretoria hopes to achieve just that. His information concurs with information obtained by the Rand Daily Mail.

Constellation

The theoretical advantages to Pretoria of drawing Swaziland into the constellation are substantial. They include:

- Eventual elimination of the "terrorist conduit" which passes through Swaziland from Mozambique to South Africa. It is an open secret that several African National Congress (ANC) raiding parties have entered and left South Africa via Swaziland.
- Facilitating construction of the proposed railway through Swaziland from Komatipoort in the Eastern Transvaal to Richards Bay in Natal. It would both diminish South African dependence on Maputo and tighten the economic bonds between South Africa and Swaziland.

But there is another prospective advantage for Pretoria: surrender of the nucleus of the KaNgwane homeland to Swaziland and, with it, responsibility for 300 000 de facto Swazi inhabitants of the "homeland".

There are, however, further hidden hypothetical gains from Pretoria's perspective. While it will lose a small, impoverished "homeland", it will gain Swaziland as an ally and a de facto "Swaziland homeland" with the additional "plus" of international recognition for it.

For Pretoria's more ambitious — or grandiose — strategists, an enlarged Swaziland firmly within the ambit of South African suzerainty could even serve as the prototype for similar changes in relation to Lesotho and even Botswana.

But attempts to bring the grand scheme to fruition will run into serious resistance, not least from Swaziland.

Swaziland will obviously gain greatly in some respects if it came out of the negotiations with both a corridor to the sea and a bigger population and surface area (addition of 300 000 Swazis would increase existing population by nearly 60%).

But, much as Swaziland's rulers may yearn for access to the sea and to reunite the Swazi people in an extended state — there are about 650 000 Swazis in South Africa as against 500 000 in Swaziland — they are also jealous guardians of Swaziland's independence.

Their aim, according to one informed source, is to "make Swaziland the Switzerland of Africa", a small but independent country which will try to reconcile the warring countries of the continent.

Symbolising Swaziland's aspirations is the Heads of State Village being built to accomodate important guests for King Sobhuza II's diamond jubilee celebrations next month.

After the celebrations, the source told the Mail, it is planned to convert the village into a peace conference centre, where the parties to conflict in Africa will be invited to settle their differences through the good offices of Swaziland.

The first priority is to settle intra-black disputes but later it is hoped Swaziland's peace-making role will extend to the ultimate challenge of defusing the dangerous collision between South Africa's white governors and ANC guerrillas and their African supporters.

For Swaziland to fulfil that role its integrity and independence will have to be above suspicion — which means that it is certain to resist any attempt to undermine its sovereignty, even at the cost of shelving its territorial and irredentist ambitions.

Relevant, too, to the issue is Swaziland's self-image in the "border adjustment" talks.

It does not see itself as a supplicant but as a rightful claimant to usurped land which is still occupied by Swazis. That does not suggest it is likely to gratefully pay the price asked by South Africa for any land that may be ceded.

But, over and above considerations of pride, Swaziland will have to move very cautiously in any negotiations. The Organisation of African Unity (OAU), of which Swaziland is a member, long ago declared its opposition to the alteration of colonial boundaries, including those drawn by South Africa's European colonisers.

If Swaziland is to secure OAU approval for any boundary alteration, it would have to consult closely with both the OAU and ANC leaders, as the OAU recognised spokesmen on South Africa. That would certainly act as guarantee against any deal calculated to purely strengthen white-ruled South Africa.

Moreover any trade-off with Swaziland which affects either KwaZulu or KaNgwane is certain to arouse opposition from leaders of both regions.

Chief Buthelezi has already expressed firm opposition to any move to cede KwaZulu territory to Swaziland — and, in any political equation, it must remain a moot point whether the friendship of Swaziland is worth the cost of alienating more than 5-million Zulus.

KaNgwane's Chief Executive Councillor, Mr Enos Mabuza, has made manifest his determination to work for the advancement of KaNgwane as an integral part of South Africa

He declared recently: "I am both a Swazi and a South African. My commitment to the development of KaNgwane is in keeping with my commitment to the well-being of South Africa. To us KaNgwane is a region whose political and economic future is inextricably linked to South Africa."

But Mr Mabuza's opposition to the absorption of KaNgwane by Swaziland may rest on less secure foundations than Chief Buthelezi's resistance to the loss of KwaZulu territory.

Many Swazis still acknowledge King Sobhuza as their monarch. Last year a clear majority of South Africa's 35 Swazi chiefs (22 of whom live in KaNgwane) journeyed to King Sobhuza's palace at Lositha to pay obeisance to him.

At least 12 members of KaNgwane's 36-member Legislative Assembly have to be chiefs, which prima facie means that there is likely to be a potential lobby in favour of amalgamation with Swaziland.

KwaZulu and KaNgwane resistance aside, South Africa could arouse problems of a different kind if it agreed to cede territory to Swaziland.

Surrender

As Chief Buthelezi pointed out in an interview, for Pretoria to surrender land to Swaziland because it is occupied by Swazis would be to invite similar irredentist claims from Lesotho, Botswana and the independent "homelands" of Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda.

The agitation of land demands from the BLS countries of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland will be compounded by renewed land claims from the TBV states of Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda.

While some of Pretoria's advisors might like to see Lesotho absorb the tiny Basotho "homeland" of Qwaqwa in return for greater co-operation from Maseru, Lesotho is almost certain to press its claims to the "conquered territory" with greater determination than ever.

The "conquered territory" is not confined to an undeveloped "homeland" but embraces some of the best white-owned farming land in the Free State. As Pretoria well knows, that is just the kind of "blood and history" issue which the Herstigte Nasionale Party has learnt to exploit to great effect.

Even Swaziland may cash in. Its land claims do not stop conveniently at the borders of KwaZulu and KaNgwane but extend into white-owned territory.

As Mr Mabuza observed at a recent conference: "At the time of the death of Sobhuza I in about 1836, the Swazi Kingdom was more than thrice the size of Swaziland as we know it today."

BUTHELEZI COMMISSION TO PRESENT RECOMMENDATIONS IN OCTOBER

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 20 Aug 81 p 4

/Article by Chris Freimond/

/Text/

RECOMMENDATIONS for a new political dispensation for Natal and KwaZulu will be presented to the KwaZulu Legislative Assembly by the end of October.

This was revealed in Martizburg yesterday by Professor G D Schreiner who heads the controversial Buthelezi Commission investigating the future of the two regions.

Prof Schreiner said the commission was meeting in plenary session on September 21 and hoped to have its final report ready a month later.

And the Chief Minister of KwaZulu, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi — who appointed the commission last November — has promised that further initiatives will follow the report.

The commission's brief was to report on ways to implement "a co-operative approach between Natal and KwaZulu" within the framework of SA. This could include a union of the two areas.

When the commission was announced, Prof Schreiner said people in power could not ignore its findings "except to the peril of SA".

He said Chief Buthelezi's action in appointing the commission was "a clear statement that he was prepared to negotiate".

At a recent meeting with visiting US congressmen, Chief Buthelezi said the commission was "a black initiative and a move away from dependency on whites for proposals about constitutional reform."

Political logjam

It was based on the recognition that a "political logjam" existed in SA. The broad thinking behind the commission was that change could occur in the Natal-KwaZulu region without having to confront political interests elsewhere in SA.

The commission comprises more than 40 members drawn from leaders in the economic, social, cultural, educational and political fields.

Five specialist working groups headed by experts have been examining specific areas. These are: constitutional and political; planning and administration; economics and development; social services and health; and education.

The commission was rejected by the National Party which refused to nominate representatives to serve on it. However the Afrikaanse Handelsinstituut decided to co-operate with the commission without actually being represented on it, Prof Schreiner said yesterday.

KOORNHOF: 'UNCONTROLLED SQUATTING' CANNOT BE ALLOWED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Sep 81 p 4

/Excerpt/

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY. — As long as the Government was in power and for as long as he was Minister of Co-operation and Development, he would treat illegal squatters the way he had treated those at Nyanga, Dr Piet Koornhof said yesterday.

No government could tolerate the flaunting of the law, he said when he spoke on the Co-operation and Development vote in the budget committee stage.

He said his department had processed 922 squatters out of the Cape Peninsula "after assessing each case on its merits".

In the past five days 239 buses and eight other vehicles had been stopped and a total of 8 984 people questioned.

These people were being ferried in from the Transkei in buses as part of an orchestrated and organised campaign to seek embarrassing confrontations with the Government, Dr Koornhof said.

One bus driver had been paid R1 000 as an initial payment towards a R17,50-a-head fare to deliver his passengers to the Holy Cross Church in Nyanga.

Pocket money

"Not only were these people's bus fares paid, but each was given R20 pocket money so they could come and take a stand here against the law and participate in a campaign of civil disobedience," Dr Koornhof said.

Dr Koornhof said Blacks had left the Transkei since August 25 by various routes without going through border posts and had made their way to Queenstown from where a Reverend Hall arranged their transport to Cape Town.

They were forwarded to the Athlone advice office and a bus load was accompanied by Mrs Luckett, wife of the Reverend Sydney Luckett of St Josephine's Church in Wynberg. The same Rev Luckett's intervention had made it impossible for the Transkei and South African Governments to come to an agreement with the squatters, Dr Koornhof said.

He said the two governments had agreed on August 14 that "uncontrolled squatting cannot be allowed and tolerated in the interests of squatters themselves" and that no squatting would be allowed, particularly at Nyanga.

Prescribe

"But in spite of a Black government saying that this is its official viewpoint, the member for Houghton (Mrs Helen Suzman) wants to prescribe to that government what to tell its people.

"There is only one cure for uncontrolled squatting: nip it in the bud," Dr Koornhof said.

"While this Government is in power and for as long as I am Minister I will not treat squatters any differently. As soon as squatting rears its head, I will smother it instantly," he said.

Dr Koornhof said in May a Black journalist had reported to a leader in the United States that there would be an "outburst" in the peninsula to coincide with the start of the Parliamentary session.

"We knew this thing was coming in May," Dr Koornhof said.

Bishop Desmond Tutu, general secretary of the SA Council of Churches had told the council's members on May 18 that a major SACC concern was "the uprooting and dumping of God's children". August was declared "a month of compassion for the cry of resettled communities".

On July 16, when police and officials of his department carried out arrests at Nyanga, the names of the arrested were taken by the Women's Movement for Peace. They had been involved in orchestrated campaigns to assist squatting and arranged for buses to return deported squatters from the Transkei during May.

TRANSVAAL PROVINCIAL COUNCIL DISCUSSES BUDGET

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 4 Sep 81 p 10

/Article by Keith Abendroth/

/Excerpt/

THE gloomiest Provincial Council session in years — and some provincial sources say the most depressing — closed in Pretoria yesterday with the province facing the stark reality of bankruptcy on two fronts — financially and in personnel.

The Administrator, Mr Willem Cruywagen, and his Executive Committee members pulled no punches in outlining the severity of the situation. And Mr Cruywagen in fact won praise from the Progressive Federal Party Opposition for his "square dealing" and honesty.

There were a number of major stirs in the session. But probably the biggest, which is still a talking point, was the threat made by Mr Cruywagen to do everything in his power to sever provincial relationships with any universities at which "unpatriotic" acts took place.

He made his attack specifically on Witwatersrand University but said, too, his threat applied as well to any other university at which the mark might be overstepped.

Provincial action would be to terminate agreements with any offending university on the training of teachers from the province's teachers colleges.

On the finance front, the council heard that many projects were being shelved or curtailed because of inadequate funds — and inadequate staff to carry them out even if the funds were available.

The Budget for the year shows the biggest expected estimated deficit in the province's history — R37 224-million.

Mr Cruywagen warned the Central Government the provinces must receive increased sources of revenue, or "the dyke will burst".

But the situation on the overall staff front is even worse.

A critical shortage in the physical planning section of the Administration, for instance, was said to be causing delays costing township developers many millions of rands — and this at a time of extreme housing shortage.

In this section only half of the 40 posts are at present filled — but seven of the planners on the payroll are away on military service as well, leaving just 17 staff members to do the work which should be handled, conservatively, by a staff of three times that number.

Meanwhile, the teacher shortage continues — and the shortage of nurses has become so serious that at least one hospital, Pretoria's H F Verwoerd, is now being kept limping along only with the aid of student power.

An unprecedented crisis is expected in a month or six weeks' time when students who are now helping man the wards start their examinations.

Dr Servaas Latsky, MEC in charge of road traffic warned that patrolling of the province's roads was l ng hamstrung by a shortage of provincial traffic inspectors.

Of a total of 300 posts for White inspectors 125 were vacant and 33 of the 135 posts for Black inspectors were not filled.

Dr Latsky revealed that the nursing shortage was not only serious at the H F Verwoerd, but that it was also critical in Johannesburg and the Witwatersrand zone as a whole.

Vacant posts for White student nurses in the PWV complex, he said, was now nearly 50 percent and about half the posts for sisters were also vacant.

Mr Fanie Schoeman, MEC in charge of personnel, announced panic-station measures to try to keep the provincial wheels rolling.

These included impassioned appeals to pensioners to return to work and to married women with children to come back and work, even if only in morning posts.

The situation resulted in heavy pressure from the Progressive Federal Party Opposition on the governing party to open more White posts to Blacks, Coloureds and Indians.

But, replied the MEC's, the province was having trouble in finding suitably qualified non-Whites to fill even the posts open to them.

Plans to draw in young mothers include a plan to convert the capital city's old Capitol Theatre, adjoining the provincial headquarters building, into a creche and to provide supervision facilities for children of working mothers there.

On the overall staff front, stark figures showed how serious the situation is. At present the Transvaal has 109 862 people on its payroll. But in virtually all departments employment has dropped in the past year.

Even in the predominantly clerical secretarial division White employment has dropped by nearly 25 percent from 1 572 to 1 197.

In the Technical Departments of Works and Roads there has been massive decreases in staff — nearly 26 percent in White staff alone in the Works Department, the drop being from 2 072 to 1 535.

Roads Department overall decreases were about nine percent, from 18 535 to 16 762.

The Hospitals Department reported a drop of nearly 20 percent in White staff — mainly nurses — alone, from 22 220 to 17 960.

Summing up on hospitals, Dr Latsky said the position was critical and that some hospitals were now having grave difficulties even manning their casualty sections.

BILL INTRODUCED ON ADMISSION OF NONWHITES TO WHITE SCHOOLS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 4 Sep 81 p 3

/Article by Jaap Theron/

/Text/

THE admittance of non-White pupils to White private schools in South Africa is to be controlled by a special amendment Bill tabled in Parliament yesterday by the Minister of Internal Affairs.

The Bill which is in line with the Government's non-negotiable principle of separate schools for each population group where possible, gives the Minister of National Education the right to declare a White private school fit for either Blacks, Coloureds or Indians.

I understand the purpose of this Bill is to bring order to the illegal admittance of pupils of colour to certain private White schools.

It is apparently not the purpose of the Bill to take over control of White private schools but to give the Minister statutory rights to see to it that Black, Coloured and Asian pupils legally get the education which is deemed to be the education for each respective population group.

At present Black, Coloured or Indian pupils who attend White private schools are not bound by laws related to Black, Coloured or Indian education.

This Bill stipulates that a private school which admits Non-White pupils shall not, by reason of the admission of such pupils, become subject to a provision of law relating to the education of Black, Coloured and Indian pupils. The education provided at such a school to such pupils for all purposes shall be deemed to be education entrusted to a Provincial Council.

But the Minister of National Education may declare a specific school which has admitted a Black, Coloured or Indian pupil, as a school for the education of either Black, Coloured or Indian pupils, as the case may be.

SMALL COAL-PRODUCING COMPANIES SEEK SHARE OF EXPORTS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 17 Aug 81 p 13

/Article by John Mulcahy/

/Text/

SMALL coal-producing companies, attracted by high prices available on world markets, may well find they are unable to afford to join the elite band of exporters.

To establish a railway siding facility compatible with the new generation of coal trains requires a substantial capital investment — millions not thousands — and small producers may find this cost prohibitive.

One industry source says the shortage of capital to provide infrastructure for the best use of Railways facilities will put coal exports out of reach of many smaller companies.

To maximise efficiency the SAR has upgraded the trains used for the Richards Bay Coal Terminal, and users of the terminal have had to upgrade their siding facilities three times since the inception of the Richards Bay facility.

With the announcement of new coal export allocations imminent — the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W de Klerk, is expected to present his proposals to the Cabinet within days — many small producers are hoping for a slice of the lucrative export cake.

In the last allocation bigger producers argued with notable success that their contribution to domestic energy requirements — supplies to Escom at low prices — should be rewarded by export permits.

International oil companies used a similar argument, and with a similar measure of success in attaining export allotments.

The small producers now argue that their position in the exploitation of South Africa's coal reserves is essential — they are prepared to develop small deposits which the bigger operators disregard. They have found small overseas markets which are no less important as foreign exchange earners than those of the major customers.

The Independent Coal Producers Association, representing about 20 mines which are not members of the Transvaal Coal Owners Association or the Natal Anthracite Association, submitted its proposals to the Government a year ago, but these were revised after Mr De Klerk announced increased estimates of coal reserves.

It is not yet clear whether the new export ceiling — assuming it will be raised — will be given as a globular figure or if individual producers will be mentioned in the allocation.

It appears unlikely that there will be a wide spread of producers — it would be logistically impractical for the ports to handle 20 or 30 different types of coal.

Small producers have complained that the export scene is a closed shop, open only to those who provided the initial capital for the Richards Bay terminal. After persistent niggling from producers, the Government asked the independents to form a co-ordinated group.

It is believed the first criterion Mr De Klerk will apply when considering the coal export ceiling is the extent of mineable reserves. Estimates of the annual surplus available for export range from 60-million tons to as high as 100-million tons.

With Phase II of Richards Bay at 44-million tons, 2 900 000 tons being shipped through Durban and a small quantity going through Maputo, the export allocation is about 36-million tons a year.

The second criterion is the contribution the producer is making to the domestic market. It appears unlikely that permits will be granted for the export of coal to any producer not supplying the domestic market.

Mr De Klerk will also require an assurance that the producer will be able to meet its export commitments, and here there are some complications.

Some producers may have the potential to increase their reserves to ensure a consistent flow of coal for 30 years, but are unwilling to buy these prospects without an export permit.

Another criterion, and possibly the most important, is the capacity of the Railways to handle the additional traffic.

The SAR wants to close the Durban coal facility, and to accommodate the exports now being channelled through Durban may find it necessary to build another terminal at Richards Bay, to be operated by the SAR independently of the RBCT.

The new terminal would also handle exports by producers without a stake in the RBCT, which is a private company and handles only coal supplied by its shareholders.

The development of Richards Bay, and ultimately the possibility of expanding the facility in Maputo, will be clarified once the new coal export ceiling is established this month.

SENTRACHEM'S SYNTHETIC RUBBER PLANT ON SCHEDULE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 31 Aug 81 p 22

/Article by Daan de Kock/

/Excerpt/

SENTRACHEM'S new R350-million Afprene complex in Newcastle, Natal, is on schedule and will probably be commissioned before the middle of next year.

The new complex, which is going to produce synthetic rubbers from coal, will virtually make South Africa independent of rubber imports. Apart from that it could also save the country as much as R150-million in foreign exchange in 1988.

The managing director of Sentrachem, Dave Marlow, told journalists on a visit to the new plant that it is the only one of its kind in the world and the biggest project so far undertaken by Sentrachem without any outside shareholding.

Three types of synthetic rubbers — solution styrene butadiene (S-SBR), polybutadiene (PBR) and polyisoprene (PIR) will be produced by the plant. The production volumes of these three synthetic rubbers will be 45 000 tons PIR, and 38 000 tons of S-SBR & PBR a year, and 45 000 tons of isoprene.

Basically the new plant consists of four separate units. The first plant will produce one of the major raw materials from coal. Mr Marlow said the plant will consume roughly 200 000 tons of steaming coal and anthracite a month. A second plant will produce isoprene, the basic building block for the production of rubber. A third unit will produce solution styrene butadiene rubber, polybutadiene rubber and polyisoprene rubber. A fourth will prepare the necessary catalyst for the process.

The new complex will consume 50 percent more electricity than East London and will also provide 800 new job opportunities — 50 percent Black and 50 percent White. During the erection of the complex 2 500 job opportunities will be provided and R4-million additional disposable income will be available in Newcastle.

SOEKOR TO ACQUIRE NEW OIL DRILLING RIGS

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 18 Aug 81 p 14

[Article by Bob Davis]

[Text]

Oil production from deep-sea areas will become viable by the mid '80s and South Africa's Oil Exploration Corporation (Soekor) is gearing up to take advantage of this.

Conventional offshore platforms can produce oil in waters up to about 275m and engineers have been experimenting with deep-sea production for a number of years.

According to overseas sources, two new designs have come off the drawing board and should be working by 1984.

Exxon engineers are producing a guyed tower and Conoco designers are at work on a tension-leg platform, both of which would be capable of production off the South African coast in the event of an oil find.

To date, Soekor has been limited in its drilling operations by its two submersible rigs which are capable of drilling in depths of 275m and perhaps slightly deeper but less than 300 m.

The corporation expects delivery on a lease basis of two new drilling rigs capable of working in water depths of up to 500 m however and a spokesman said: "We then plan to drill in certain places we would like to look at."

Delivery of the two rigs is expected late next year and early in 1983 respectively.

"We will then be able to expand our search area," the spokesman said.

Oil industry sources say about 40 percent of the world's undiscovered oil is under the oceans — totalling some 340 000-million barrels.

The problem is that oil production platforms must be much more stable than drilling rigs.

Stability is achieved by standing the platforms on the sea bed, which limits operating depth to a theoretical depth of 275m.

Oil company engineers have the option of floating the production platforms in waters which are deeper than the theoretical limits, finding new ways to build and stabilise them or putting most of the equipment on the floor with only flexible pipes to bring the oil to the surface.

Exxon engineers have overcome the problem by building a guyed tower platform in the Gulf of Mexico where production will take place at a depth of 370m.

The platform will rest on legs but will be stabilised by running cables from the platform to concrete anchors on the sea bed.

Oil company sources are sceptical of the tower being a viability in stormy waters, however, and Conoco engineers in the North Sea have opted for a floating platform.

The first one is to go into operation on the Hutton field in 1983.

It is anchored to the sea floor by flexible tubes.

Vertical tension prevents the platform from swaying sideways to the extent of damaging pipes running from the well on the sea bed.

The first of the floating platforms will operate in only 160m but Conoco engineers are confident it will be able to cope with oil from a well under 800m of water.

Soekor sources were unwilling to say in which areas the new drilling rigs will be used, but said the new production platforms were being watched with great interest because of the stormy conditions of the Cape coast.

BRIEFS

INTELLIGENCE SERVICE AWARDS--South Africa's spies are to be brought in from the cold to receive medals for bravery and distinguished service--but in most cases the public will never know about it. Details of the medals, the first for members of the National Intelligence Service (NIS), were revealed in yesterday's Government Gazette. NIS agents will qualify for seven medals for bravery, distinguished leadership or distinguished or faithful service. The most sought after award for the agents will be the NIS Cross for Valour which recognises "outstanding heroism or valour." "Some of the awards will never come into the open, but you can be sure that it will be a useful item to haul out when the agent gets involved in bragging sessions with his grandchildren," NIS spokesman Mr A. Knoetze said yesterday. Three NIS decorations have also been created to recognise cooperation received by NIS from agents employed by foreign governments. The recipients of these awards would never be made public. A civil decoration, the NIS Civil Decoration, has also been established for "exceptional acts of merit" conducted for NIS by South African citizens. The awards were not unique to South Africa's secret service--even KGB agents received medal awards, he said. /Text/ /Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 8 May 81 p 1/

INFLUX CONTROL ARRESTS--A total of 35 892 Black people were arrested by the South African Police in the first six months of this year for offences relating to reference books and influx control, the Minister of Police, Mr Louis le Grange, said yesterday. Replying to a question by Mrs Helen Suzman (PFP Houghton) he said 29 119 men and 6 773 women were arrested in the main urban areas. Most of the arrests were made in the Johannesburg, Pretoria, East Rand and West Rand areas. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Aug 81 p 4/

CHURCH CRITICISM OF TUTU--Two organisations of hundreds of Black churches claiming to represent nearly five million Black Christians, yesterday repudiated the South African Council of Churches and its Secretary-General, Bishop Desmond Tutu. They also backed letters written by their executives last month to President Reagan, British Premier Margaret Thatcher and the president of Mozambique, Mr Samora Machel, spelling out their objections. A similar letter was sent to South Africa's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Pik Botha, and yesterday a reply from his ministry was read at the conference. The reply said Black church organisations' pleas for equal time on television had been referred to the board of the SA Broadcasting Corporation. The formal resolution totally rejecting the "ecumenical" and "social doctrine" approach of the SACC, the World Council of Churches and the SACC's president, Bishop Tutu, was taken at a meeting of the board of the Southern Africa Theological College for Independent Churches. The college claims to represent more than two million Black Christians. But at the same meeting, the Black Reformed Independent Churches Association, which claims to represent about 900 independent Black churches and more than 2,5-million Black Christians, also backed the resolution through its president, Bishop Elijah Mokoena. Bishop Mokoena, a former political prisoner who served five years' imprisonment for his membership of the African National Congress, said his body also totally rejected the SACC's approach to South Africa's problems. /Excerpts/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Aug 81 p 5/

LICENSING OF SHEBEENS--Cape Town--Shebeens are to be legalised in the Black residential areas, Mr J.H.D. Mills, Director-General of the Department of Cooperation and Development, announced yesterday. Mr Mills said in a statement this kind of drinking place was regarded by black people as an acceptable social phenomenon. He said experts who had investigated this form of liquor trade in black residential areas were of the opinion that this kind of drinking place did in fact satisfy the particular social needs of some of the residents of certain residential areas. His department was thus convinced that the size of the liquor trade in some black residential areas did indeed warrant "the immediate introduction of Black people to the liquor trade." It was therefore not necessary to delay matters until the administration board concerned had been provided with alternative sources of income and the legalisation of shebeens would be effected as far as it was possible to do so. He said the approval of premises for on-consumption as well as off-consumption purposes was therefore acceptable to the department on the clear understanding that the licensee, his family and customers, would not be allowed to use for residential purposes the rooms in which liquor, refreshments and food were served and sold. /Excerpt/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Sep 81 p 2/

INKATHA OFFICER DETENTION--A member of the Inkatha Central Committee, Mr Ntwe Mafole, has been detained by Security Police, the movement's chairman of strategy, publicity and projects committees, Mr Gibson Thula, said yesterday. He said Mr Mafole was detained at his home in Sebokeng on August 9. Mr Mafole, who is also the movement's youth organiser in the Transvaal and who was a member of the delegation that met the ANC leadership in London in December 1979, is being held under Section 22 of the Terrorism Act. Earlier this year he was awarded a three-month training scholarship in London by Inkatha. /Excerpt/ /Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 18 Aug 81 p 2/

WIT KOMMANDO MEMBERS' TRIAL--The sabotage and terrorism trial of two alleged members of the ultra-right Wit Kommando started in the Pretoria Supreme Court yesterday--only to be immediately postponed for 24 hours. The two men charged are Mr Massimo Bollo (36) and Mr Fabio Mariello (45). They will appear on 13 counts, including seven of sabotage. The State has alleged, among other things, that they attacked the offices of Professor J.A. Lombard of the University of Pretoria and Professor F.R. Maritz of the University of South Africa, as well as the house of the Transkei Consul in Port Elizabeth. The men are alleged to have conspired to achieve the aims of the Wit Kommando. These alleged aims are that, as members of the organisation, they were to resist racial integration by destroying or damaging buildings or installations of authorities which practise, advocate or promote racial integration. Explosives and ammunition allegedly in the possession of the men included 3 300 electric detonators, two landmines, 67 handgrenades, 47,2 kg of plastic explosives, six R1 rifles and 4 927 rounds of ammunition. All these were allegedly stolen from the South African Defence Force between June and November last year.--Sapa /Excerpts/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Sep 81 p 11/

ARMS CACHE ARRESTS--Durban--The two White men arrested last week after the discovery of a large cache of arms and ammunition at a house near Durban, are now being held under Section 22 of the Terrorism Act, the Security Police said yesterday. Confirming the report, the police spokesman said the detained men, both ex-Zimbabweans, would appear in court at a later stage. Among the weapons found at the house in Botha's Hill last week were Russian-made Kalashinikov AK-47 assault rifles, M26 grenades, an FN rifle and pistols and 2 500 rounds of ammunition. Police are investigating the possibility that the weapons were being sold illegally.--Sapa /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 4 Sep 81 p 2/

SOWETO DELEGATION TO FRG--A high-powered delegation from the Soweto Council has just returned from a fact-finding tour of West Germany, the results of which are expected to give Soweto a dramatic new facelift. The delegation was led by Mr Nico Malan, executive officer (town clerk) of the council, and Mr David Thebehali, chairman of the council. A council official yesterday said the delegation had a close look at West Germany's scheme for converting small houses into bigger ones, particularly homes which were rebuilt at low cost after they had been destroyed during the last world war. The delegation also negotiated for a loan from the West German Government to complete some of its development projects in Soweto. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Aug 81 p 15/

ARMY DESERTER TO LESOTHO--Cape Town--A spokesman for the Department of Foreign Affairs yesterday said no request had been received from either the Defence of Justice departments regarding action to get Army deserter, Rifleman Martin Gregory Sherrard, back from Lesotho. Rfn Sherrard defected from the Army earlier this week and according to a broadcast by Radio Lesotho has asked for political asylum. He apparently told the Lesotho authorities that he wished to join the African National Congress. A Defence Force spokesman yesterday confirmed the soldier's defection to Lesotho, but said the SADF was not prepared to comment on the activities of a "self-confessed deserter." National servicemen who started their basic training with RFN Sherrard in July this year, told The Citizen he had received treatment for psychological and other problems before he disappeared. /Excerpts/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 28 Aug 81 p 3/

KANGNGWANE COAL PROJECT--Messina (Transvaal) Development Company is hoping for an anthracite export allocation in the next phase of Richards Bay development. A Messina spokesman said it was hoped that representations to the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs would be favourably considered "along with other producers independent of the Transvaal Coal Owners Association." Messina has formed a subsidiary, N'Komati Anthracite (Pty), to exploit anthracite reserves in the homeland of Kangwane. The Mining Corporation will have 40% of the company and Messina 60%. The mine is expected to build up production to 500 000 tons of anthracite a year in the next three years and it is hoped that most will be exported. The cost of the project to production is estimated at R14-million, most of which will be funded by Messina. Assurances have been given by the South African Government that a railway line will be built from the Kangwane area through Swaziland to Richards Bay, and there is the alternative of shipping the coal through Maputo. In either case a permit is required from the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, but shipping through Richards Bay will probably be cheaper, in spite of the greater distance because of the high handling charges at the Mozambique port. /Excerpts/ /Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 11 Aug 81 p 14/

RICHARD'S BAY RAIL LINE--R62-million is to be spent on relaying the railway line between Richard's Bay and Vryheid, the Minister of Transport Affairs, Mr Hendrik Schoeman disclosed yesterday. In a written reply to a question by Mr G.S. Bartlett (NRP Amanzimtoti), Mr Schoeman said the rail was to be lifted and relaid between January 1983 and April 1985. This was to accommodate the higher axle loads of newly designed coal trucks and locomotives to be used when the coal export programme reached the 44 million tons a year mark in January 1986. The existing line cost R189 932 464 to build by the time it was opened to traffic on May 4, 1975. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 28 Aug 81 p 4/

REGULATIONS ON ZIMBABWEAN WORKERS--The number of Black Zimbabweans who will not be able to renew their current contracts to work in South Africa is much larger than originally thought. Only those workers who obtained a five-year "suspension of repatriation" before the recent ruling took effect would be allowed to stay here, a spokesman for the Department of Cooperation and Development said today. In the past these had been granted to workers in registered service with several employers since January 1953 or one employer since January 1958. However, those who met one of these requirements but had failed to apply for suspended repatriation would have to return to Zimbabwe on expiry of their current 18-month contracts. Workers who had forfeited their right to suspended repatriation--because they had been convicted of a criminal offence or had left South Africa for more than six months during their period of service--would also not be able to renew their contracts. "If someone has been here for a long time we may be able to refer his case to a higher authority." But this would be the exception rather than the rule. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE STAR in English 19 Aug 81 p 9/

CLOSING OF TRACKING STATION--July 31 marked the end of the Paardefontein Tracking Station near Hammanskraal in the Northern Transvaal, founded after mutual agreement between the South African and the French governments in January 1964. This protocol agreement allowed the Centre National D'Etudes Spatiales (CNES) to establish a satellite tracking station on a 51,4 hectare site at Paardefontein, the CSIR acting as agent of the South African Government in executing protocol stipulations. In time activities were extended to include launching of huge upper air research balloons. In April 1973 the CSIR became responsible for the management and operation of the station on behalf of CNES and in 1978 it was decided that the operating costs of the station would be shared by the two organisations. In September 1980 it was agreed that tracking operations at Paardefontein would be transferred to the Satellite Remote Sensing Centre at Hartebeeshoek early in the new year. In the past six months the Paardefontein station was kept operating with a reduced staff to support the delayed launching of the Ariane II rocket.

This rocket was successfully launched in June 1981, placing three satellites in geostationary orbit. One of these was Meteosat II, which replaced Meteosat I from which South African meteorologists had been receiving weather images until it ceased functioning about two years ago. /Text/ /Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 14 Aug 81 pp 8-9/

SASOL REFINERY FIRE--A massive fire at a burst pipeline at the Sasol 2 plant near Secunda today burned fiercely for more than three hours as teams of firefighters battled to extinguish it. A spokesman for Sasol said the fire started in a gas distillation tower in a sub-section of the refinery unit. He discounted any hint that saboteurs were responsible for the blaze. Eye-witnesses said the flames could be seen from several hundred metres away. Teams of firefighters managed to localise the blaze which is believed to have been started as the result of an operational accident, according to the spokesman. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE STAR in English 20 Aug 81 p 3/

TRADE WITH FRG--German exports to South Africa increased by 38 percent in the first six months of 1981 against the same period last year. Goods totalling R1 066-million were exported to South Africa of which R890,9 million were in the end product sector with motor vehicle components and electrotechnical equipment making up the bulk. On the other hand, South African exports to Germany show a decline of 0,9 percent amounting to R574,3-million in the first six months of 1981, compared with R579,3-million in the corresponding period in 1980, says a report compiled by the South African-German Chamber of Trade and Industry. However, seen in conjunction with the exchange rate, South Africa showed a small increase in its exports. From the beginning of the year to the end of June, the rand increased in value against the German mark by 2,3 percent, making South African exports that much more expensive. Reductions in exports were recorded mainly in the semi-finished products category such as ferro alloys showing a decline of 77 percent, copper 27,6 percent and nickel 55,5 percent. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Sep 81 p 21/

STATISTICS ON LABOR--The Government refused 224 applications by Blacks to work in the Western Cape during the first six months of this year, the Minister of Manpower, Mr Fanie Botha said yesterday. Replying to a question from Dr Alex Boraine (PFP Pinelands) he said 858 potential Black workers were affected by the refusals. Replying to another question from Dr Boraine, the Minister of Police, Mr Louis le Grange, said 214 Black workers were arrested for striking illegally in 1979 and 294 in 1980. Mr Botha said in reply to another question from Dr Boraine that 45 previously unregistered trade unions had applied for registration since June 1979. A total of 57 registered trade unions had applied since July 1, 1979 for extension of their scope in order to admit members of race groups for which they were not previously registered. Of these applications, 54 were granted while three were ending. There were 78 unions which confined their membership to Whites, 51 who confined their membership to Coloureds and Asians and 17 who confined membership to Blacks. There were 48 racially mixed unions. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Sep 81 p 4/

STEEL PIPE FOR PERU--The South African-built general purpose vessel, Sezela, is carrying a cargo of steel pipes for Equitos, Peru. It is the first time Unico Unicorn Lines has dedicated a vessel for a liner voyage to this destination, which is reached via the Amazon. The Sezela will steam upriver for 12 days to cover the 3 700 km distance from the rivermouth to Equitos. The return trip will take eight days. The steel piping is the first substantial order for South African-made pipe manufactured to API (American Petroleum Industries) specification with 100% SA content to be placed by a Peruvian company. The order, worth R1 600 000, is for 67km of 203 mm schedule 20 API, and was awarded to Van Leeuwen Pipe & Tube (Pty). Van Leeuwen is part of one of the world's largest steel-pipe producers and has secured export orders in recent months in neighbouring African territories, the Indian Ocean islands and the Far East. The company has been concentrating on the South American market for some time, and received its first export order for Ecuador last year. /Excerpt/ /Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 24 Aug 81 p 17/

JULY TRADE FIGURES--South Africa's trade balance swung further into deficit in July with a R210-million imbalance. Compared to a R6,5-million surplus in June and a R487,1-million surplus for July 1980 the latest Customs and Excise release continues to show a rising import bill along with further drops in exports. Falling to R1 520-million last month, compared to R1 860-million in the same period of 1980, exports and reduced export markets are clearly feeling the effect of the continuing recession overseas. While the cost of imports rises as a natural result of the weak rand--which still hovers around the $1,053 mark--the monthly trade deficit looks as if it will feature more strongly in the near future. The import bill rose last month to R1 730-million from June's R1 530-million and is already R36-million up on July 1980. Adding gloom to the trade balance situation South Africa's surplus R3 820-million over the first seven months of 1980 has slumped to R48-million for the same period of 1981. /Text/ /Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Aug 81 p 15/

PRESIDENT NYERERE PRAISES CANADIAN ASSISTANCE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Isaac Mruma/

/Excerpt/ President Nyerere yesterday said Tanzania greatly appreciated Canadian assistance which had no political strings and praised that country for showing sympathy toward the Third World's demand for a New International Economic Order.

He said at a state banquet he hosted in honour of visiting Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau that although Canada aided Tanzania in the railway transport and in the agricultural sectors, and had converted all assistance to grants, it had never attached conditions to its assistance.

"At no time, have we even been given 'friendly warnings' that specific projects or Canadian aid in general might be jeopardised by some policy or attitude of ours which is different from that adopted in Canada. Your aid is not used politically," he told Mr. Trudeau.

The Canadian Prime Minister arrived in Dar es Salaam at noon from Nairobi for a two-day official visit which ends today.

Mwalimu said that some international financial institutions wanted Tanzania to reduce Government expenditure as a condition for support in improving the country's deteriorating terms of trade, something the Government rejected outright.

Cutting down Government expenditure meant reducing the very social services like schools in the country's villages, water supplies and dispensaries which the Government had been striving to provide to the people, he explained.

"It is such things which we refuse to cut when we tell them that we reject their conditions", he said.

The President told Mr. Trudeau: "That is why we so much appreciate the commodity Grant Aid, and the Spare Parts Line of Credit, which Canada is making available to us, and which will add up to eight and three quarter million dollars (about 61.25m/-) over the two years 1980-82.

"This money is a psychological as well as a financial assistance to us, because you have not tried to use it to impose political conditions on Tanzania", he said.

He continued: "This attitude of respect for the sovereignty, and the political sensitivities, of Tanzania seems to us to be a reflection of Canada's whole international approach to Third World countries and the economic problems they face.

"Canada is a developed country, a rich country, and a democratic country with its own distinctive culture and personality. Yet somehow it seems to understand the nationalism of the new countries of Africa, their extreme poverty and the fragility of their democratic institutions.

"It also understands, and shows some sympathy with, the demands of the Third World countries for fundamental changes in the existing international economic and financial order".

Mwalimu said that Canada, which had decided to reach in the near future the UN target of 0.7 per cent of its gross domestic product (GDP) for official development assistance (ODA), was one of the few developed countries which played a positive role in the struggle to reform the present unjust international economic order.

"It was largely owing to your efforts, Mr. Prime Minister, that the recent summit meeting of (seven) industrial countries held in Ottawa gave some serious attention to North-South issues. We have read the communique, and recognise your influence on it", he said.

UNDP OFFICIAL ANNOUNCES DEVELOPMENT AID FUNDING

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

/Excerpt/

THE UN Development Programme (UNDP) will provide Tanzania with a total of 576m/- for development projects between next year and 1986, UNDP Administrator Bradford Morse said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

He told a press conference that the funds (72million dollars) had been targeted under the third development co-operation cycle to extend from 1982-86.

Tanzania's Minister for Planning and Economic Affairs, Professor Kighoma Malima has said on Monday afternoon that a country programme on how to utilise the assistance was being prepared and would be completed by December this year.

The UNDP provided 120m/- (15 million dollars) during the first development cycle between 1972 and 1976 and another 280m/- (35 million dollars) during the second cycle between 1977 and this year.

Among the UNDP supported projects in Tanzania is the exploration of natural gas at Songo Songo Island, off Kilwa in Lindi Region; rice cultivation in Zanzibar and exploration of the Kabanga nickel deposits in West Lake Region.

The UNDP Resident Director in Tanzania Mr. D. Ouattarra, who was present at yesterday's press conference, said phase one of the project was complete and that a consultancy team would arrive in due course to undertake a study on the magnitude of the nickel deposits.

Assistance to the Kabanga project is extended under the UNDP's revolving fund for natural resources exploration.

Mr. Morse explained that the UNDPgoverning council had decided that in future, 80 per cent of all UNDP resources should go to support projects in the poor countries which have a per capita Gross National Product (GNP) of less than 4,000/- (500 dollars) annually.

There are 65 countries under that category but the lions share of the resources would be channelled to the Least Developed Countries (LDCs). There are 31 registered LDCs in the world. Tanzania being one of them.

Asked how the UNDP was contributing towards next month's meeting in Paris to marshall assistance to the LDCs, Mr Morse said the UNDP had collaborated with the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) in undertaking an analysis of the needs of the LDCs.

He said he would also attend and address the Paris meeting.

Tanzania is among the LDCs that will attend the meeting. The Tanzania team to the meeting leaves Dar es Salaam for the French capital next week, according to an official of the Ministry of Planning and Economic Affairs.

Asked on the UNDP role in promoting Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC), Mr. Morse said the body had a catallactic role to play since TCDC depended on the developing countries' own efforts.

He said TCDC, a vital undertaking that would have a great role in future, depended on the sovereign nationals in developing countries than on external forces.

Mr Morse, who arrived in Tanzania last Sunday night for a short tour that ends today, had a working meeting with the staff of the UNDP in Dar es Salaam.

SCOPO REVIEWS SALARIES OF PARASTATAL, PRIVATE SECTOR WORKERS

Circular Lists Wage Increases

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 8 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Freddie Kaizirege/

/Text/

PARASTATAL and private organisations workers earning between 470/- and 480/- per month will now get 700/-, effective July 1 this year, a circular issued here yesterday by the Presidential Standing Committee on Parastatal Organisations (SCOPO) said.

The circular, issued by SCOPO Secretary Wilfred Mwabulambo, said workers earning between 580/- per month (MSU 3) and 4,800/- (MSU 14) would get a 15 per cent increase under the new statutory rates.

It called on all employers to effect the new rates immediately beginning July 1, adding that SCOPO should only be contacted for clarification on specific details.

The circular said employers should seize the opportunity to regulate the wage rates so that several workers were not categorised under the same wage.

It said workers receiving 380/- to 390/- monthly on May 1, 1980 would now get 620/-, while those fetching between 400/- and 420/- would earn 640/-. Workers getting between 430/- and 440/- would now earn 660/-.

Wages between 450/- and 460/- would go up to 680/-, and workers getting 470/- to 480/- per month would now earn 700/-, the circular said.

It directed that wages of workers promoted to avoid overlapping of wages after the previous minimum wage review must be adjusted to maintain the pace.

The circular explained that special allowances paid to experts such as pilots and navigation crew had also been adjusted, but it directed that institutions paying such allowances should liaise with SCOPO on the new rates.

It added, however, that annual increments, overtime payments, house rent and travel allowance would remain intact.

The starting salaries would be raised, the circular said, adding that this would not interfere with the salary scales. A worker under MSU 2 earning 580/- per month for instance, would not be elevated to MSU 3, it explained.

According to the circular, the new scales will be MSU 1A (for workers under 18 years of age in rural areas) — 460/- to 520/- x 10/- and MSU 1B for similar workers above 18 years of age — 530/- to 580/- x 10/-.

Others are MSU 2 — 600/- to 700/- x 20/-; MSU 3 — 740/- to 980/- x 40/-; MSU 4 — 1,085/- to 1,605/- x 65 -; MSU 5 — 1,680/- to 2,240/- x 80/-; MSU 6 — 2,345/- to 2,870/- x 105/- and MSU 7 — 2,990/- to 3,570/- x 120/-.

The circular said MSU 8 had risen to between 3,700/- and 4,440/- x 140/-; and MSU 9 — 4,565/- to 4,865/- x 150/-.

The new rates for MSU 10 upwards, which do not merit increments, are MSU 10 — 4,945/-; MSU 11 — 5,065/-; MSU 12 — 5,175/-; MSU 13 — 5,350/- and MSU 14 — 5,520/-.

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 11 Aug 81 p 3

/Article by Peter Masebu/

/Text/

THE Secretary of the Presidential Standing Committee on Parastatal Organisations (SCOPO), Ndugu Wilfred Mwabulambo, has clarified that the recently announced 15 per cent salary increase for workers earning more than 600/- does not cover workers in private companies.

He said salaries of workers in private organisations are fixed by the Association of Tanzania Employers (ATE), JUWATA and employers who negotiate what to give to the workers earning from 601/- onwards.

Speaking during a radio programme "Sauti ya Mfanyakazi" organised by JUWATA yesterday, the SCOPO secretary said, "it is not true that SCOPO secular ammendment No. 3 to SCOPO secular No. 40 covers the private sector as regards employees who are receiving salaries above 601/-.

However, Ndugu Mwabulambo said, SCOPO does not object to private organisations emulating the scales it fixed. The SCOPO secular ammendment No. 3 issued on August 7 this year gave a salary increase of 15 per cent to parastatal workers earning above 600/-. This followed an increase of 20 per cent for Government workers, announced during the last budget session.

The SCOPO Secretary said following the announcement on August 7, a number of private organisations, including embassies and international organisations, had approached him for clarification.

He said except to the minimum wage which was statutory, private organisations were not bound by directives from SCOPO as regards how much they paid their workers.

Commenting on the response of parastatal organisations on the announced new scales, Ndugu Mwabulambo said "they say the circular is very clear because it solves most of their problems as to how much to give to each of their workers".

Monthly Entry Salaries Announced

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 9 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Presidential Standing Committee on Parastatal Organisations (SCOPO) has announced monthly salary entry points for professionals and non-professionals in the parastatal sectors.

An appendix to the SCOPO circular on parastatal salaries review issued in Dodoma on Friday said the entry points take effect from July 1, this year.

Medical practitioner, dentist (2,555/-), veterinary surgeon (2,450/-), chemist, pharmacist, engineer, architect, quantity surveyor, land surveyor, valuer, estate management, scientific researcher, and industrial researcher/consultant (2,345/-).

Statistician, economist, professional — transport management, science or mathematics teacher, professional — forestry, professional — fisheries, science degree, degree in commerce or business administration, B.A. finance or accountancy (1,840/-).

Teacher (other than science or mathematics) will get 1,760/-) and other degree holder 1,680/- a month.

The appendix said holders of higher institution certificates under the terms of the Musoma Declaration would get three increments above the special entry point provided they did not go above the bar of due entry point.

It added that SCOPO Circular Number 35 was the reference point in this context.

The appendix said holders — those obtaining post-graduate diplomas or degrees would get two increments above their present salaries or their due entry points without exceeding the bar.

Monthly salaries for all two-year diploma holders — 1,345/-: national diploma in materials management (1,345/-), national storekeeping certificate (1,150/-), CPA I and II (2,660/-); CPA — any part (2,160/-) NAD I and II (2,000/-) and NAD any part — (1,410/-).

NABOCE holders (1,150/-), NABE III (1,085/-), NABE (860/-), NABE I (660/-), FTC (1,280/-), trade test I (900/-), trade test II (820/-), trade test III (660/-).

Form Six leavers in science or technical jobs without training (900/-), one-year training (1,085/-), two-year training (1,215/-), three-year training (1,345/-).

POPULATION STATISTICS EXERCISE PLANNED IN FIVE MAIN AREAS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 28 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text]

TANZANIA has been selected, along with some other Third World countries, to experiment the United Nations-backed "get-accurate-population-statistics" exercise, basing on birth registration, it was learnt in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Government sources said five districts — namely Kinondoni, Ilala, Temeke, Bagamoyo and Moshi Rural — were picked as main areas for the exercise.

"The government co-operates with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in this endeavour, which is anticipated to produce vital information for our national economic and development planning", the sources said.

New birth registration forms have been adopted, with extra information sought on the child and parents. The forms, printed in Kiswahili and English, include such information on the child as: sex, type of birth (single/multiple), place of birth and attendant at birth.

Father's full names, age, occupation, nationality, place of birth and education, together with the mother's name and maiden name (her family's name before marriage), age, total children born alive, total number of pregnancies, occupation, nationality, place of birth, education and marital status, will also be sought.

Tanzania, on her part, has issued a ministerial order to support the experiment. The order, made by the Minister for Justice, Ndugu J.C. Manning, under the Births and Deaths Registration Ordinance, Section 22, said in part:

"The provisions of the Birth and Deaths Registration Ordinance relating to compulsory registration of births and deaths shall with effect from July, 1, 1981 extend to all children born alive and to all persons dying within Kinondoni, Ilala, Temeke, Bagamoyo and Moshi Rural Districts".

The order revokes the Births and Deaths Registration (Dar es Salaam Municipality) Order of 1966.

An official at the Ilala District office of the Registrar of Birth and Deaths, said the new forms, titled "Notification of live birth", were already in use.

He explained that in the coming days, births and deaths would be recorded in offices to establish in each of Ilala, Kinondoni and Temeke districts.

/Article by Halima Shariff/

/Text/

THE People's Republic of China and the Tanzanian Government are expected on Saturday to sign a cultural exchange programme for a three-year period starting this year.

Officials from the Ministry of Information and Culture would today discuss with officials of the visiting Chinese Government culture delegation, a draft of the programme from the Chinese team.

The delegation, led by Vice-Minister of the Commission for Culture Relations with Foreign countries, Ndugu Wang Choung-Fang, yesterday handed over the draft programme to the Principal Secretary of the Ministry, Ndugu G. Tibakweitira.

Before handing over the programme, the Chinese leader briefed the Tanzanian team on the cultural development in China while Ndugu Tibakweitira outlined the structure and functions of the Ministry and its role in promoting culture in the country.

Ndugu Tibakweitira, however, said that the two countries had a similar task of "carrying on the development of culture and cementing the good friendly relationship that exists between our two countries".

The six-man Chinese delegation yesterday paid a courtesy call to the Foreign Affairs Ministers, Ndugu Salim Ahmed Salim. The delegation would visit the National Music Council, National Arts Council, and the National Swahili Council.

TANZANIA-BULGARIA JOINT COMMISSION MEETING HELD

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 18 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Anaclet Rwegayura]

[Text]

THE Tanzania-Bulgaria Joint Commission began its fourth annual session here yesterday with both countries urging expanded economic ties and a fresh impetus to bilateral enterprises.

However, Tanzania has suggested flexibility in her economic cooperation with the People's Republic of Bulgaria in order to enable joint ventures to bear fruits without delay.

Hailing the considerable sympathy demonstrated by Bulgaria towards the country's economic turbulence, the Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba, also appealed for the former's understanding in either waiving or adjusting some conditions attached to the projects.

The Minister, who was inaugurating the session, said such adjustment on conditional downpayments in foreign exchange would facilitate project take-off after appraisal.

"We require every flexibility in reaching decision and getting things moving", he said but proposed to the joint comission to orientate its approach towards undertaking a few projects efficiently.

Citing the proposed Kigamboni poultry farm in Dar es Salaam and the Kisarawe brick factory in particular, Ndugu Mramba emphasized that there was need to speed up work on projects whose implementation was already behind schedule.

In a rundown, the Minister outlined the country's economic difficulties and the short and long term measures being adopted for a national economic survival strategy, which, he said, stressed increased agricultural and industrial production coupled with proper management.

In that context, the Tanzania side at the talks is putting emphasis on projects which can contribute to more agricultural production without necessitating much importation of inputs, but augmenting the country's export earning capability.

On joint Ventures, the Minister singled out two main problem areas as the source of delays in the implementation of agreed programmes between the two countries. The first was lack of funds at required time and secondly, shortage of expert personnel.

However, the two countries havé already through cooperation established a tannery at Morogoro and the Kilimanjaro machine tools factory at Máshi while trade between them increased.

BULGARIA TO PROVIDE AID FOR MACHINE TOOLS INDUSTRY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

BULGARIA has pledged to provide all technical and material support to the proposed Moshi-based multi-million shillings machine tools industry scheduled for completion next year.

The pledge was made in Moshi on Monday by a politburo member of the Bulgarian communist party, Ndugu Pencho Kubadinski when he inspected the construction work of the factory some ten kilometres away from Moshi along the Arusha-Moshi highway.

Ndugu Kubadinski said that his country was ready to train both high and middle level technical and engineering personnel who will form the nucleus of the new industry.

During inspection, he advised that construction of the project should be carried out on three-shifts rather than the present two-shifts.

The Minister for Industries Ndugu Basil Mramba, the Kilimanjaro Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Edward Barongo and the Chairman and Managing Director of the National Development Corporation (NDC), Ndugu Anorld Kilewo accompanied the Bulgarian party official during the inspection.

Ndugu Kubadiński said construction would be speeded up and be completed on schedule by December next year.

He said that his country was also prepared to provide more technicians to work on the project to ensure that it was completed on schedule.

Ndugu Mramba told the visiting leader that so far there was no provision in the agreement between Tanzania and Bulgaria which provided setting of a foundary for the industry. He said without a foundry, it would mean dependence on imported components necessary for the manufacturing works.

Ndugu Kubadinski is leading a 16-man Bulgarian delegation to the fourth session of the Tanzania Bulgaria joint commission on economic, scientific and cultural co-operation.

RESULTS OF RWANDA-TANZANIA JOINT COMMISSION MEETING NOTED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Article by Hamidu Bisanga]

[Text]

TANZANIA and Rwanda have agreed to set up a joint textile mill in Rwanda under the two countries' co-operation in the field of industries.

According to a programme of action for 1981/83 released here after the sixth meeting of the Rwanda-Tanzania Joint Commission, which ended over the weekend, Tanzania will send textile experts to Rwanda in October to undertake technical study on the proposed mill.

The experts are to define the magnitude of the project, ownership arrangements, capacity, product mix and the nature of infrastructural development.

It has also been agreed that Tanzania would train the Rwandese in the small-scale industry and handicraft. Initially Rwanda would send two trainees in each field.

On agriculture, it was agreed that Tanzania should look into the possibility of training Rwandese in sugar technology at the Kilombero Sugar Institute, with the Kibaha Sugar Research Centre providing disease-resistant sugar cane species to Rwanda.

The Mang'ula mechanical workshop in Kilombero District would supply spare parts for the Rwanda sugar industry.

Tanzania is also to provide Rwanda with three tobacco experts in virginia and white burley types by this October.

On trade, its was agreed that Tanzania should increase its exports quota to Rwanda, especially of batteries, cigarettes and printed material. Tanzania should also study the possibility of relaxing trade legislation to enable the border populations to trade in essential goods without licence.

Rwanda, on the other hand, has been asked to submit a list of products to be exported to Tanzania, including quinine bark, pyrethrum flowers and powder, banana wine, fruit juices and hides and skins.

Rwanda has also been asked to apply the commodity exchange system which makes it possible to conduct trade without use of hard currency.

On banking arrangements, the two sides agreed to exchange bankers to enable them to acquaint themselves with each other country's banking systems.

On transport and communications, it was agreed that construction of Lusahunga-Bukombe road section should start this financial year, with 184m/- to be raised from the European Economic Community and other sources for financing the Bukombe-Isaka section. The Rusumo-Lusahunga section will be completed by September 1982.

On the proposed Rwanda-Tanzania link, the two sides confirmed their participation in the October meeting in Vienna, Austria, under the auspices of the Kagera Basin Development Organisation to agree on the modality of financing feasibility studies on the project.

On telecommunications, it was agreed that experts from both countries should meet in Kigali next month to up date the study on the microwave link between Ngara and Mount Jari and explore possibilities of establishing high fidelity telephone link between Dar es Salaam and Kigali.

Regarding education, Tanzania will provide Rwanda with six secondary school teachers in addition to the 10 already in Rwanda and two university lecturers for Kiswahili. Rwanda is also to send 10 students to pursue a degree course in Kiswahili at the University of Dar es Salaam.

/Text/

TANZANIA and India yesterday signed an agreement for implementing new and ongoing projects to be undertaken during the 1981/82 under the Indo-Tanzania Joint Commission for Co-operation.

The agreement was signed by Indian External Affairs Minister, Ndugu Narasimha Rao and Tanzania's Minister for Finance, Ndugu Amir Jamal, after the Commission ended discussions on economic and technical co-operation on Friday.

The two sides, agreed that economic co-operation had grown since the last session of the Commission held in December, 1978 in New Delhi, India.

In a joint press statement, the two countries said that some projects had been completed, several were at an advanced stage and a few others were being initiated.

The Commission reviewed new areas of possible co-operation. These include technical secondary schools, Mtwara Sugar Factory, Kilwa Cement Factory, Shinyanga Integrated Textile Mill and the financing of the electrical distribution network of Dodoma city.

The two countries agreed to continue and expand the small scale industry programme and noted the contribution made by Indian experts in assisting Tanzania in prospecting for hydrocarbons in the Songo Songo area.

They agreed that efforts should be made to diversify and increase exports from Tanzania to India.

The next Indo-Tanzania Joint Commission meeting will be held next year in New Delhi on a date to be mutually agreed.

JUMBE RAPS IRREGULAR INSTITUTIONAL SPENDING

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Boniface Byarugaba/

/Excerpt/ Vice-President Aboud Jumbe said yesterday that three government institutions spent 149 million shillings on car hire between 1979 and 1980.

The three are the National Milling Corporation which spent 126 million/-, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs with an expenditure of over 16 million/-, and the Tanzania People's Defence Forces (TPDF), which paid out nearly 7 million/- for hired cars.

Opening a three-day seminar for army leaders of the 30th division of the TPDF at Lugalo barracks in Dar es Salaam, the Vice-President said some of the car hire deals were dubious.

Illustrating some of the shady deals, he said one hired car, for example, was said to have been in use for 24 hours.

Another case had a Deputy Minister listed as a user of a hired car while the purported person had never used a hired vehicle.

He added that elsewhere a registration number recorded as being one of a hired car was in fact that of a motorcycle.

He told the seminar that the special sessions of the Party Central Committee, held since January this year, had learnt that over 300 million/- had been spent outside existing financial regulations.

Ndugu Jumbe, who chaired most of the special sessions in his capacity as Party Vice-Chairman, said the money so spent was "no small amount for Tanzania."

Declaring war against extravagancy and for austerity, he said individuals plucking the fruits of collective labour should be exposed.

He added that it was the collective responsibility of the people to expose such selfish individuals.

He told the seminar to consider and make recommendations on the production of enough food crops, promotion of small but coordinated irrigation schemes, and the mobilisation on the entire national haulage capacity to ferry food and cash crops, and the elimination of middlemen.

On mobilisation of the national transport capacity, Ndugu Jumbe asked the seminar participants to use the "experience gained in ferrying materials from Dar es Salaam to Uganda during the war and rainy days."

Turning to the army, the Vice-President said the TPDF should import only essential requirements and properly handle vehicles, machines and other equipment.

He called on fuel economy, explaining that oil imports this year would probably gobble 60 percent of the country's foreign exchange earnings.

He asked: "Are all the army vehicles seen on the road a must? Are they a sign of the army's contribution to the revival of the economy or just the reverse?

CATA OFFICIAL OUTLINES AUTHORITY'S FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Sethi Kamuhanda/

/Text/

THE Cashewnut Authority of Tanzania (CATA) will plant new cashewnut trees in sixteen villages and strengthen its services to the growers.

These are some of the measures aimed at improving cashewnut production in the country under a 37.3 million shilling four-year programme worked out by CATA, in cooperation with the Ministry of Agriculture, in April this year.

Outlining the programme to Shihata at the end of a two-day CATA board meeting, the Authority's Executive Chairman, Ndugu Saidi Bungara, said a total of 4800 hectares of new cashewnut trees would be cultivated in block farms in four districts.

He said under phase one of the programme, to be implemented later this year, villagers in sixteen villages would be given loans of 2,000/- for every single hectare to be planted with new cashewnut trees. The loans will be provided through the Tanzania Rural Development Bank (TRDB).

The sixteen villages are in Liwale, Newala, Kisarawe and Lindi Districts. Other villages would be selected during the implementation of phase two of the programme scheduled for next year, Ndugu Bungara said.

It is envisaged that each of the selected villages would cultivate about 50 hectares of new cashewnut annually within the next coming three years, he explained.

On measures to improve the country's cashewnut production as a whole, Ndugu Bungara said these would include the strengthening of research activities into cashewnut diseases at Naliendele Agricultural Research Institute in Mtwara, which is involved in cashewnut research activities.

He added that aerial survey of all major cashewnut growing areas in the country would be undertaken to produce a map indicating the exact number of cashewnut trees. The map will be used to prepare a project for expanding the acreage.

Ndugu Bungara also said every cashewnut farmer would be registered with CATA and given special cards to facilitate crop purchases. The new system would ensure genuine transactions during sales.

Under the new system, which takes off in October, farmers will have to produce the cards to the purchasing agent. The cards will then be filled in by more than one person before they are given back to the owners.

ZANZIBAR GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES HIGHER PRODUCER PRICES FOR FOOD CROPS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 13 Aug 81 p 1

/Excerpt/

THE Zanzibar government has announced higher producer prices for food crops and slashed the price of fertilizer in an effort to encourage peasants to contribute more positively towards the Isles' food self-sufficiency.

The Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu Hassan Nassoro Moyo, said in Zanzibar yesterday that in addition to raising producer prices, the government had also streamlined the marketing of the crops.

He said beginning this year, all food crops would be purchased by the Zanzibar Agricultural Corporation.

The Minister said the old system of purchasing the crops was exposing peasants to exploitation. The system left growers at the mercy of middlemen whose producer prices were so low that they discouraged some of the peasants from increasing food production, he added.

According to the new pricelist, a pound of paddy will now fetch 1/20, peas 2/10, sorghum 2/-, maize 1/50 and dried cassava chips 1/-. The Minister did not disclose the old prices saying that they varied yearly.

The government has also decided to allow peasants to hire tractors from the Ministry of Agriculture at low rates in order to enable them expand their farming. Under the new arrangement, peasants will pay 122/- instead of 228/- for ploughing an acre. The remaining cost will be subsidized by the government.

Peasants will also pay 33/60 for a 100-kilogram bag of fertilizers instead of 428/- the actual cost of the item. The remaining cost will be met by the government.

Ndugu Moyo urged peasants throughout the Isles to take advantage of these measures to raise their income and contribute fully to Zanzibar's efforts to achieve self-sufficiency in food.

The Minister also called on Party and government leaders to mobilize the peasants to expand the growing of food crops this season.

REDUCTION OF DEPENDENCE ON CLOVES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

/Editorial/

/Text/

IN early June this year, the Isles' House of Representatives was told of Government plans to increase food production and of diversification away from mono-crop economy.

The Zanzibar Government said it would prepare peasants for each phase of the farming season, timely deliver inputs, and adequately motivate the peasants to grow more food and cash crops.

It was also hinted to the House that the Government would in the very near future raise producer prices and rationalise the marketing of food crops.

Two months later, the Government delivered the goods, increasing the prices of food crops with the intention of encouraging the peasants to cultivate more and better crops.

On Wednesday, the Government not only announced new prices, but it also made public the subsidising of basic agricultural inputs.

For example, the Government will now heavily subsidise fertiliser, to such an extent that the peasants will now buy a 100-kg bag of fertiliser at 33/60 instead of 428/-.

The Government has also lowered tractor hire charges from 228/- to 122/- for tilling an acre in an attempt to ease the burden, both physical and financial, on the peasants and to bring more land under cultivation.

The Government has also ascertained that the peasants will now find it easy to sell their crops. For this, the Zanzibar Agricultural Corporation had been set up.

Not only peasants have been given responsibility to raise the Isles' output of cash and food crops.

The state too has a specific role to play in this regard. For example, the planned irrigated farming of paddy will be handled by the state. The same applies to the growing of cardamom as a cash crop.

The mobilisation of both peasant and state resources is geared at reducing the Isles' near total dependence on cloves as the foreign exchange earner and at minimizing food import bills.

More and more countries, which also happen to be major consumers of cloves, are outstripping the Isles in terms of the production of the spice.

Furthermore, the food import bill is staggering. For example, the Isles spent 200.3 million/- on rice, wheat flour and sugar imports in 1980/81.

It is the awareness of the vulnerability of mono-crop economy and huge food imports that has prompted the Government to take the necessary measures to encourage increased agricultural output.

MINSINGU PHOSPHATE MINE TO START TRIAL RUNS IN JULY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 28 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Mkumbwa Ally/

/Text/ The Minjingu phosphate mine in Hanang District will start trial runs next July, President Nyerere was told yesterday.

The State Mining Corporation (STAMICO) General Manager, Ndugu William Manning, explained that the mines, to supply phosphate concentrate for the Tanga fertiliser company, would start commercial production in December next year.

He told Mwalimu before laying the foundation stone for the project yesterday that the 193.8 million/- mine would produce 165,000 tons of soft phosphate annually at full capacity.

The ceremony was also attended by the Finnish Ambassador to Tanzania, Ndugu Risto Kauppi. Finland has granted 21 per cent of the total foreign cost for the project.

The remaining percentage of the total foreign component would be financed through a suppliers credit from the Finnish Credit Bank, Ndugu Manning explained.

He said a Finnish firm, Kone Corporation, would implement the project on a turn key basis under two agreements signed last year.

Kone would supply equipment and train Tanzanians in phosphate minning, he said.

The general manager said the project would include a concentrating plant to process 100 tons of phosphate concentrates with 20 per cent pure phosphate annually. The plant would also reduce moisture content from 14 to three per cent, he said.

phate concentrates with 30 per cent pure phosphate annually. The plant would also reduce moisture content from 14 to three per cent, he said.

Ndugu Manning explained that the deposits had 2.2 million tonnes of ore which would support a mining life of 10 years.

He added, however, that exploration was underway to establish more deposits around the area.

"There are substantial reserves in the southern zone of Minjingu Hills and in three more pyramids", he said.

Ndugu Manning explained that equipment installation at the mines would start in January next year, and that the last consignment would arrive in the country next July.

Industrial building which started last May would be completed next January, he said.

The general manager added that STAMICO would launch four more projects in the next five years.

They include the Buckreef gold mine, taking off this December, Pugu caoline mining and Songwe-Kiwira coal and gypsum mining scheduled to take off in 1985.

Emphasis on mineral exploration, he said, would be intensified for nickel, uranium, niobium, the apatit, coal and gold.

The ceremony at Minjingu was also attended by Works Minister Sam Sitta and the Minister for Livestock Development, Ndugu Herman Kirigini.

The Finnish ambassador noted that phosphate would be transported by road to Arusha and, therefore, called on the government to improve the 96 kilometre stretch between Minjingu and Arusha.

STAMICO manager Manning explained that the mineral would be hauled by rail to Tanga in special wagons which would return with Arusha-bound fertiliser.

BRIEFS

PLANNED SUGAR PRODUCTION--The Ministry of Agriculture plans to boost sugar production in the country to meet the country's projected demand of 420,000 tonnes by year 1990. The Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu Joseph Mungai, said on Saturday that the revamping of sugar industry in the country would include increasing sugar production in the existing factories, expanding the factories and building new ones. The Minister said this when welcoming President Nyerere to officially open the National Sugar Institute in Morogoro. Ndugu Mungai said the country's sugar demand had been rising every year. During the last ten years the demand had risen from 98,817 tonnes in 1969/70 to 205,000 tonnes this year," he explained. He further explained that the gap between supply and demand had also been widening every year--from 22,179 tonnes in 1969/70 to 85,000 tonnes this year. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Aug 81 p 3/

ROLLING STOCK CONSIGNMENT--The last shipment of Tanzania Railways Corporation's (TRC) 420m/- worth of rolling stock from the United Kingdom was off-loaded from the Celtic Line, ippolitos, in the Dar es Salaam Harbour over the weekend. The ship arrived last Wednesday and off-loading started immediately, a TRC spokesman said. The consignment consists of six restaurant cars, 96 bogies, two break vans and one first class coach, from the British Rail Engineering Metro (Bre-Metro). This constitutes a part of 510 cargo wagons, 10 break vans, ten restaurant cars and 50 passenger coaches ordered from the same company. The TRC spokesman said that the 10 restaurant cars are valued at 27,350,508/-, 15 first class coaches at 33,529,912/- and 25 second class coaches are valued at 54,876,270/-. Two of the restaurant cars arrived in the country last month and they have been in use for the past two weeks, said the spokesman. The rest of the rolling stock had been arriving in the country at varying intervals from July 1980, he added. But he complained that the new coaches that had earlier arrived in the country had already been vandalized by hooligans. He appealed for public help in cracking down on the culprits. /Emma Faraji/ /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Aug 81 p 3/

ZAIRE TRADE AGREEMENT--Tanzania and Zaire have signed a self-perpetuating annual trade agreement under which the two countries will exchange a number of commodities, the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, said yesterday. Briefing newsmen on arrival from Zaire at the Dar es Salaam Airport, Ndugu Mchumu said he had reached agreement with his counterpart and other Zairean trade officials on strengthening "existing trade relations." Under the agreement, Tanzania will sell to Zaire an assortment of industrial goods and commodities and will buy, among other items, cement, fishing boats, copper and zinc for the country's industrial requirements. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 16 Aug 81 p 1/

CEMENT PLANT'S OPENING--The Tanzania Saruji Corporation (TSC) plans to build more cement plants in order to satisfy the country's growing demand for the commodity. This was said in Tanga yesterday by the Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba, when he welcomed President Nyerere to officially open the Tanga cement factory, Shihata reported. The Minister said the plans included the construction of a cement plant at Kilwa where all the necessary raw materials for cement production such as limestone, gypsum and red clay were available. He told Mwalimu that there were also plans to put up small cement plants in the Lake zone and other areas presently facing difficulties with obtaining cement. He added that the Ministry of Industries had asked TSC to prepare a workable strategy for developing small and medium scale plants which would produce burnt bricks and tiles. He said the aim was to make every region self-sufficient in such materials in the coming five years. He said preparations were also underway to build tiles and burned bricks manufacturing units in Mbeya with the help of Bulgaria. Mwalimu later inaugurated the Tanga cement plant. /Excerpt/ /Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 16 Aug 81 p 1/

EEC OFFICIAL'S FAMILIARIZATION TOUR--The EEC Commissioner for Development, Mr E. Pisani arrived in Dar es Salaam last night for talks with President Nyerere and government officials. An official of EEC (European Economic Community) said that the commissioner would meet Mwalimu at his Msasani residence. He would also hold discussions with the Minister of State for Planning and Economic Affairs, Professor Kighoma Malima, the Minister for Finance, Ndugu Amir Jamal and Foreign Affairs Minister Salim Ahmed Salim. He said the commissioner, on a familiarisation tour to Tanzania, would also be briefed on the development of various projects. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 19 Aug 81 p 1/

STRENGTHENING OF POLICE FORCE--The Government has reiterated its resolve to strengthen the police force in order to effectively combat crime. The Principal Secretary of the Ministry of Home Affairs, Ndugu Julius Matiko, said yesterday that the Ministry was doing its best to equip the force with sophisticated weapons and communication gear. Ndugu Matiko said: "We are trying to get the equipment including vehicles for modernising the force; however, we are doing this within the limits of the present situation of the national economy." The Government last year announced a five-year master plan to strengthen the force. Under the plan, 5,000 new policemen would be recruited. The plan also involves buying of 500 vehicles, radio calls sets and walkie-talkies. An average of 350 houses for policemen would be built during the period of five years. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Aug 81 p 3/

NETHERLANDS MAIZE OFFER--The Netherlands Government has donated 8,000 tons of maize to Tanzania. The first consignment arrives in the country on Friday, it was learnt in Dar es Salaam yesterday. The United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) office in the city, handling the purchase and transportation of the consignment, said the maize had been bought from Zimbabwe. A WFP official said the consignment and its transportation costs amounted to 120m/-. He said the second shipment of 5,000 tons would arrive early next month. The maize would be handed over to the National Milling Corporation (NMC) he added. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Aug 81 p 3/

CCM'S COMPLAINT--Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) will probe into allegations that some regional leaders in the country handed over economic projects run by the youth organisation to private businessmen. This was said here on Tuesday by the CCM Deputy Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Alan Heri, following complaints by members of the Youth Council currently meeting here that some regional leaders used their positions to hand over projects operated by the organisation to private people. The complaints were made during the morning session when the council members were discussing projects undertaken by the organisation in an effort to increase its revenue. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Aug 81 p 1/

FAMINE WARNING--The Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya has urged peasants to double their food production efforts in order to abate a possible threat of famine feared early next year. At the same time, Ndugu Msuya has called on leaders to encourage a nationwide irrigation farming campaign and generally to stress on increased food production. Talking to Party and government leaders of Lembeni Division in Mwanga District yesterday, Ndugu Msuya said the nation was going to face an acute shortage of maize sometime in March next year. Last season's harvest of the staple food crop, he said, was poor, adding that the nation would not be having "enough food at around March next year." The Premier, who is on his third day of his Mwanga Parliamentary constituency tour, said because of the poor harvest last season, the National Milling Corporation (NMC) would also experience crop shortfall. Everyone, he said, should utilise his immediate surroundings by reviving all existing cannals and growing potatoes and drought resistant crops like cassava in a bid to raise food stock. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 27 Aug 81 p 1/

PLANNED IMPROVEMENT OF TRDB--The Tanzania Rural Development Bank (TRDB) is to strengthen its lending capacity to villages and improve its administration and operations during a three-year project beginning early next year. The bank's Director of Regional Coordination and Supervision, Ndugu A.T. Molele, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the bank would get an 80m/- loan from the Washington-based International Development Association (IDA) to finance part of the project. Ndugu Molele explained that 49m/- from the loan would be used to strengthen the bank's lending capacity to villages. The other part of the loan, he added, would be for technical assistance, purchase of vehicles for mobile units to be established and other activities during the implementation of the project. The mobile units would be for training village administrators. The loan followed an agreement signed between the Government and IDA in October last year, he said. However, it was not immediately known how much the bank would spend on the project. During the three year period, Ndugu Molele said, the bank would train a minimum of 2,230 village administrators from 750 villages. The training would focus generally on how to manage loans given by the bank. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 28 Aug 81 p 3/

DEVELOPMENT PLAN'S APPROVAL--The Party Central Committee's Standing Committee on Planning has approved the government's development plan for the 1981-86 period. The Secretary of the committee, Professor Kighoma Malima, said after the two-day meeting in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the committee had also agreed on some economic measures regarding implementation of the Five-Year Development Plan. Ndugu Malima did not, however, give details of the discussions held under the chairmanship of the Party Vice-Chairman, Ndugu Aboud Jumbe. The Development plan will now be submitted to the Central Committee for further scrutiny before it is endorsed by the Party's National Executive Council. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 28 Aug 81 p 1/

LOCOMOTIVE WORKSHOP'S CONSTRUCTION--Construction of the 120 million/- locomotive workshop in Morogoro has been completed and the workshop is expected to start operating immediately, it was learnt in Dar es Salaam yesterday. The workshop Resident Engineer, Ndugu E. Netzer, said in a telephone interview from Morogoro that the workshop, which took two and a half years to erect, was ready for use anytime from today. He said the workshop, owned by the Tanzania Railways Corporation (TRC), had a capacity of overhauling 90 locomotives of various sizes annually. It was the only major workshop in the country that would enable the TRC to perform complete overhauling of its locomotives, he explained. The workshop is capable of overhauling locomovites made in England, West Germany, Canada and India, now used by the TRC. Ndugu Hetzer said apart from the main workshop, there was another small one for servicing the locomotives. The resident engineer said all the major overhauling works and repairs of locomotives in the country were being done in Nairobi up to the time when the then East African Community collapsed in 1977. /Text/ /Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 28 Aug 81 p 1/

KAUNDA BACKS TOURE'S PROPOSAL OF SOUTHERN AFRICA FEDERATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Aug 81 p 1

/Article by Roy Malifwati/

/Excerpt/ President Kaunda has supported a suggestion to form a Southern Africa federation of Zambia, Zimbabwe, Angola, Mozambique, Botswana and Tanzania to strengthen African unity.

The suggestion was made by President Sekou Toure of Guinea when he arrived in Livingstone yesterday for a visit to the tourist town.

He said the federation would be a step forward in strengthening African unity if the countries used one currency and eliminated border posts and customs barriers.

The defunct Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland could be re-established under the new independent countries.

Immediately after the Guinean president delivered his speech at the airport, Dr Kaunda walked to the microphone and said he supported the idea.

President Kaunda said if there was a federation of Zambia and Zimbabwe he would be willing to become vice-president and said the federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland was destroyed because power was concentrated in the hands of a minority.

Vice President

There was nothing to stop the two countries from forming a federation if Zimbabwe was willing. He was serious about the proposal and he said the capital would be at the Victoria Falls town of Zimbabwe.

If Mozambique and other neighbouring countries joined the federation, Dr Kaunda said he would be happy to serve as minister of foreign affairs.

ZCTU HIRES ATTORNEYS TO SECURE LABOR LEADERS' RELEASE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Aug 81 p 7

/Text/

ZAMBIA Congress of Trade Unions has engaged lawyers to secure the release from detention of Mr Frederick Chiluba and three other top labour leaders.

This was confirmed in Lusaka yesterday by ZCTU deputy chairman Mr Hurbert Bweupe who said that Mwanawasa and Company of Ndola had agreed to represent Mr Chiluba.

ZCTU general secretary Mr Newstead Zimba, his assistant general secretary Mr Chitalu Sampa and Mineworkers Union of Zambia deputy chairman Mr Timothy Walamba would be represented by Jacques and Partners.

Mr Bweupe could not say whether the lawyers had already filed applications and when proceedings for the release of the detained men would begin but he promised to issue a statement soon.

Last month it was reported that Mr Chiluba, Mr Zimba, Mr Sampa and Mr Walamba had given ZCTU instructions to engage lawyers to fight for their release.

ZCTU acting general secretary (administration) Mr John Sichone said the three labour leaders had indicated their wish to this effect after he had visited three of them.

Mr Sichone said the main reason for consulting the detainees was to get their detention orders so that these could be handed to their lawyers to fight for their release.

The detainees have acknowledged receipt of detention orders furnishing them with reasons for their detentions.

Mr Chiluba is being held in Livingstone, Mr Walamba at Katete while Mr Zimba and Mr Sampa are in Solwezi and Zambezi respectively.

The emergency council of the ZCTU demanded the immediate release of the four men.

At a ZCTU meeting in Ndola after the detention orders were announced, the labour leaders called for an international commission of inquiry into the causes of the strikes and the continued misunderstanding between the labour movement and the Party and its Government.

PRICES, INCOMES COMMISSION TO START WORK SOON

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Aug 81 p 5

/Text/

THE Prices and Incomes Commission will start work soon, leader of a four-man Swedish team of experts Mr Sven Holmstrom said yesterday.

Addressing a news conference at Pamodzi Hotel before leaving for Stockholm, Mr Holmstrom said his team had completed gathering information on the economic life in Zambia from a cross-section of the community during the three weeks it was in the country.

The team had presented a working report to the chairman of the commission Mr Sketchley Sacika. It will prepare a draft for Mr Sacika next month which would be followed by a final report before the end of October.

He said the commission and its consultative council would play a major role in the economic life and development of Zambia.

It would make suggestions after discussing with the relevant groups in the country and coordinate the data before making conclusions for presentation to the commission.

The group has been discussing wages, salaries, prices and subsidies with Government officials.

Mr Holmstrom said Zambians felt that it was important to coordinate discussions.

The commission would negotiate directly and through its council with different groups of people and the Government.

It would present suggestions to the Government on prices and how to allocate Government funds and subsidies.

It was suggested that five qualified people should be employed on permanent basis at the secretariat of the commission.

These well vested with the economic affairs and know the entire broadline of the nation's economic life.

Two working committees have been suggested — the price and production committee and wages and incomes committee. Each of them would find out what investigations were needed and coordinate them.

Mr Holmstrom said the Government was optimistic on the future of the commission. He praised the commission's leadership.

"We consider that if the commission will succeed that will be a step forward in the development of the economy in Zambia."

There would be ad hoc committees to deal with special problems which should be investigated in line with the terms of reference of the commission.

These would work with the help of the Swedish experts who would come to review progress of the commission.

EEC FAMINE DONATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Aug 81 p 7

/Text/ The European Economic Community (EEC) has donated about K420,000 to help the hunger-stricken people of Western Province.

EEC economic advisor Mr Christian Falkowski announced at a news conference in Lusaka yesterday that the units of accounts would be channelled through the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR).

The plight of people in Western Province was worrying the international community and the emergency aid donation from the EEC was evidence of this concern.

The EEC was providing money for emergency cases independent of the money allocated under the Lome II convention.

"This aid is especially geared for immediate aid and the European Economic Community special division in Brussels is dealing with this.

"Zambia received this aid during the Rhodesian war of liberation when the EEC was now giving emergency aid geared to help the Government overcome problems it was facing because of refugees.

The EEC was also giving K42,000 every year to the Makeni Ecumenical Centre in Lusaka to help the centre in technical and vocational training as well as in the agricultural sector.

UNHCR representative in Zambia, Mr Joseph Kawuki, said the donation from the EEC would be used to buy basic necessities for people in Western Province. These include food, drugs, agricultural equipment and others.

Mr Kawuki said the gesture by the EEC was generous and it was being made through the UNHCR.

MUNDIA SAYS PROGRAM TO BOOST AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTIVITY JUSTIFIED

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA is justified in launching the K400 million food operarion programme aimed at boosting agricultural productivity in the country because the world food situation is critical, Prime Minister Mundia said in Lusaka yesterday.

Mr Mundia said the world food output had continued to decline "and the position is even worse today and the future is equally unpredictable".

Speaking at a World Food Day fund-raising dinner at a Lusaka hotel which was sponsored by Dunlop Zambia, Mr Mundia said the Government had made no provisions for organising the activities for the day in the 1981 estimates.

"It is in this light that I am appealing to all lending and parastatal institutions and all business houses to donate generously to this important committee". The World Food Day falls on October 16.

The Prime Minister said production of food was "Zambia's number one priority" and urged Party militants throughout the country to organise similar fund raising activities.

"Shortage of food in the world is not Zambia's concern alone but it is the concern of all nations in the world.

"In this regard the World Food Day activities on October 16 should be a true reflection of our concern about the food situation in the nation and our determination to produce enough not only for ourselves but also for others who are not blessed with the kind of climate and fertile soil that we have in Zambia".

Activities to commemorate the Day should portray concern "over the seriousness of the overall food position in the world which is grave".

In 1979 the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) designated October 16 as World Food Day to remind the international community to focus attention on the importance of food and the need for countries to allocate substantial resources to the development of agriculture.

Mr Mundia said Zambia had a moral duty to feed those unable to feed themselves and it was for this reason that the Party and its Government had launched food operation programme.

FAILURE TO HEED EXPERT ADVICE CAUSES FOREIGN EXCHANGE LOSS

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 30 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/

ZAMBIA lost about K3.7 million in foreign exchange in bringing in the Romanian Aro police cars from Dar es Salaam because the management of the Mechanical Services Department refused expert advice on cheaper transportation.

Documentation on how the 1,000 vehicles were brought in shows that the exercise would have cost only K300,000 in local currency.

Hundreds of people were sent to Tanzania to drive them to Zambia, incurring heavy costs on fuel, personal allowances, maintenance and contingencies — all in foreign exchange.

But after a thorough cost analysis, the MSD had been advised they should transport the vehicles by Tazara which would have done the job at K326.13 a vehicle.

The MSD management turned this down and went ahead to make a "decision by opinion" — disregarding advice by the MSD cost analysts.

Motor Holdings had quoted they would bring in the vehicle at K450 each, as did another local company, Vehicle Delivery Limited. This money would be paid in local currency.

And because the MSD management ignored this, each vehicle cost K4,000 to transport from Dar es Salaam to Lusaka — a foreign exchange bill of K4 million.

The Aros were brought in about two years ago when the MSD was still being run by officers from the defence forces.

A more compelling cost analysis done after the delivery of the first 403 Aro vehicles from Tanzania to Zambia showed that 806 drivers would go to Dar as each vehicle should have two.

As the drivers would have to travel by bus at least 15 buses would be needed, each requiring two drivers accompanied by 30 mechanics.

The crew of bus drivers and mechanics alone would cost the nation K60,000.

The biggest expenditure would be the 872 drivers sent by the MSD.

But, again, because the MSD refused to accept the expert advice stationing 20 mechanics — drivers at Dar port meant they took at least 30 days to clear the vehicles.

HIDE PROCESSING TECHNIQUES CAUSE FOREIGN EXCHANGE LOSSES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 31 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/ Zambia is losing K4.5 million worth of animal hides and skins every year because of lack of technical know-how and proper processing techniques.

According to an article written by a United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) expert in the latest Farming Magazine in Zambia, a quarterly magazine published by the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development, more than 50 percent of hides are wasted or just thrown away and 80 percent of the total skins are just thrown away.

He says that even those hides which were salvaged and made available for leather industry were of very poor quality and this was so due to unawareness of economic potential of hides and skins.

He says this unfortunate situation was mainly because of lack of technical know-how on proper processing of hides and skins and problems of marketing, particularly in rural areas.

"The result is that Zambia has to spend its badly needed foreign exchange on import of leather goods and shoes and was losing a total of K3 million per year on the importation of these goods. On the other hand, very valuable raw materials worth K4.5 million are just wasted or badly utilised," he says.

To remedy the situation and to start a hides and skins improvement scheme, the Government is being assisted by FAO and an improvement project was launched in January this year and visits were made by an expert to all major hides producing areas in the country including tanneries, abattoirs, slaughter houses, cattle market, drying sheds and technical colleges.

The expert observed that extensive field training and demonstration work was the main answer for the improvement of hides and skins industry.

He says Zambia was blessed with a sizeable livestock population of 2.4 million cattle, 0.32 million goats and sheep and 0.19 million pigs.

SPCMU NEEDS GOVERNMENT AID TO PAY ZAMBIA FARMERS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 29 Aug 81 p 1

/Excerpt/

SOUTHERN Province Co-operative Marketing Union (SPCMU) needs K150 million to pay farmers for their produce.

SPCMU general manager, Mr Hassan Ramaswamy said in Choma on Thursday that the union would fail to pay farmers for their produce unless the Government comes to its aid financially.

He was briefing the chairman of the Rural Development Committee of the Central Committee Mr Kapasa Makasa whom he told that the union may not be able to pay out money by next month.

Earlier this month, Prime Minister Mr Nalumino Mundia told a public meeting at Choma that the Government has set aside K40 million to buy the bumper crop expected from farmers in the province this year.

He assured farmers that delayed payments for their crops would end because the Party and its Government have taken measures to ensure payments are made within seven days of delivery.

Mr Ramaswamy however told Mr Makasa that K150 million will be required to buy all the crops from farmers in the province.

He said the union obtained K18 million overdraft from Standard Bank out of which K17 million has already been paid out to buy 1.8 million bags of maize.

Mr Makasa could not say what measures the Party and its Government intended to take to provide the extra funds but appreciated the problem.

NIEC MAKES PROFIT DURING FISCAL YEAR 1981

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Aug 81 p 5

/Text/

NIEC has made a profit of K3,037,000 for the 1981 financial year, according to the company's annual report released in Lusaka yesterday.

This is K1,924,000 more than last year's profit of K1.113,000.

Chairman of the corporation Mr Ignatius Muchangwe says in the report that shortages of foreign exchange had made importing of goods a "hazardous" business and effective negotiations with foreign suppliers had been hampered by the erosion of confidence on Zambia's ability to pay.

Business

He notes that during the 1980/81 financial year, the general economic and business environment showed no signs of improvement.

The national economy achieved only a marginal growth rate of about 0.9 per cent in terms of Gross Domestic Product.

"In comparison to the previous year the availability of foreign exchange became tighter and as a result the attainment of independence by Zimbabwe at the beginning of the year did not produce the anticipated trade boom and the desired improvement in the performance of the economy."

Despite the problems, the operating and financial results of the NIEC group of companies were remarkably good.

The improved profitability was made possible by better control of costs and an improvement in gross margins.

But profits could have been better were it not for the unanticipated large provisions which had to be made and charged against the year's profits.

Classified

It was necessary "to point out in the interest of the public that goods classified as essential commodities were taking an increasing share of the volume of business handled by the NIEC group of companies."

That had an "adverse effect" on the profitability of the group as essential commodities were rigidly price controlled and yielded poor gross margins.

During the year grocery items (mainly essential commodities) represented more than 70 per cent of the group turnover.

Mr Muchangwe notes in the report that the current commercial policy of the Party and its Government was to remove monopolies from parastatals and to subject those companies to open competition with private firms.

DEPRECIATION ERODES ABOUT HALF OF NIEC PROFITS

/Text/ Depreciation and reduction in the value of goods are eroding about 50 percent of the National Import and Export Corporation (NIEC) group's profits annually.

ZIMCO Director for Corporate Planning and Administration Mr Ignatius Muchangwe said this in Lusaka yesterday when he opened a two-day accounting seminar for the group's personnel.

Mr Muchangwe who is also NIEC's chairman said he knew that the group companies worked under severe economic constraints which could be described as uncontrollable.

He said the shrinkage and write-downs alone eroded about 50 percent of the organisation's profits every year.

He added that the pressure on overdrafts could be reduced and some saving in interest made if purchases could be regulated and stocks held at appropriate levels.

"A faster recovery of debts and claims could also contribute a little more to the profits. Surely some saving could be effected on transport costs despite inflationary trends," Mr Muchangwe said.

He stressed the importance of the group introducing efficient controls and instituting close vigilance. NIEC companies should be able to improve on their profits further, he said.

"It is here that we need the skills and initiative of our accountants more than anything else," he said.

He said in order to assist the country in its dire economic problems, the managerial class, of which accountants are part and parcel, will have to evolve new strategies and techniques, both in terms of finance and operations, geared to the changing circumstances.

Mr Muchangwe said until and unless this is achieved, the balance sheet in the accountants annual reports will remain unbalanced.

"It will be a frustrating experience if one were to aspire for something for which one has not prepared oneself," he said.

He said accountants were the main props of an organisation who have to move hand in hand with other disciplines in building up the structure of an organisation.

Mr Muchangwe added that the accountants were the people to whom the operational executives look for information and advice on practically every aspect of the business.

"They are really the custodians of business always striving to protect and promote shareholders' funds by ensuring optimum use of resources," he said.

LOCAL SPARE PARTS OUTPUT TO SAVE FOREIGN EXCHANGE URGED

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 26 Aug 81 p 7

/Text/ Zambia spends about K400 million a year on imports of equipment and spare parts for the mining industry.

This was said in Lusaka by the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr Remmy Chisupa who called on companies to start the local manufacture of some of these spare parts to save the much needed foreign exchange.

Mr Chisupa said Zambia could not afford to go on spending such a huge sum of money at a time when she was facing foreign exchange problems.

The minister invited engineering firms to come forward and start the local manufacture of mining and motor vehicle components as the government and his ministry in particular were ready to assist those willing to go into this venture.

"Surely, after 17 years of independence, we must cut down on the amount of foreign exchange we are spending to bring in this equipment, especially at a time when we are facing foreign exchange shortage."

"I am therefore calling on all engineering companies in the country with the technical know-how and the capacity to undertake the manufacture of spare parts needed on the mines and in the motor trade industry to approach the ministry.

"All engineering companies interested should come and be registered as essential suppliers of spare parts," he said.

Mr Chisupa added that the ministry would give the companies special consideration by giving them all the assistance in an effort to start a viable industry to manufacture spare parts for the mines and the motor trade industry.

The minister also hinted that people in the motor trade industry should brace themselves for tougher days ahead as they would not be allowed to import vehicles whose spare parts were not available in the country.

"Time will soon come when no vehicle will be brought into the country if its components cannot be found or made locally.

"Motor dealers had better begin bracing themselves for this eventuality," he said.

INDECO MILLING MAKES LOSS OVER EIGHT YEAR PERIOD

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Aug 81 p 4

/Article by Lewis Likulunga/

/Text/ INDECO Milling made a loss of K5,121,000 million in eight years, said general manager Mr Harrington Libwe in Ndola yesterday.

He was briefing Mr Elijah Mudenda, chairman of the Finance and Economic Sub-committee of the Central Committee and vice chairman of Zimco, who is on a tour of Indeco enterprises.

A report given to Mr Mudenda attributes the staggering loss to the poor pricing of mealie meal and stockfeeds.

"With the Party and its Government recognising the necessity for economic prices, the current price structure is more realistic and would enable the company to make a profit for the first time in its history in 1981/82," says the report.

But the maize shortage, limited foreign exchange allocation to service the stock-feed material requirements and the buying of general produce could change that, notes the report.

The company hopes the Party and its Government would clear the constraints soon.

Before the price revisions "it was impossible" for any of the eight company maize mills scattered throughout the country to break even if they operated at "full capacity."

On stockfeeds the selling prices were up to material cost only, says the report.

The K5.63 million Namboard debt which National Milling owed had to be serviced and interest amounted to K0.56 million a year.

"With the capitalisation of the Namboard debt and the price revision this position has changed and some of the mills will make profits working at full capacity."

Demand

But in the case of Kabompo and other rural mills it will not be possible to work at full capacity because of lack of demand.

The company hopes that with the stockfeed factory running two shifts and with the sale of fine salt the company will generate K450,000 to import soyabeans by next month, so that stockfeed production could continue on two shifts without a break.

The company's liquidity position during the period remained poor.

The bank overdraft stood at K1 million and the bank was reluctant to increase that limit.

With the intervention of the former prime minister Mr Daniel Lisulo the limit was increased to K1.5 million to enable the company complete the Mongu mill.

"After much persuasion the limit was increased to K2.5 million in December last year and with the price increases coming soon after this the liquidity of the company appeared to be improving."

The shortage of maize and foreign exchange have forced down production levels which in turn affects the liquidity.

"If the maize allocations are made available the company could easily operate within the overdraft facility," says the report.

MINISTER SAYS BUMPER WHEAT HARVEST EXPECTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Aug 81 p 5

/Excerpt/ Zambia is expected to produce 11,818 tonnes of wheat this year--2,137 tonnes more than last year, Minister of Agriculture and Water Development Mr Unia Mwila said yesterday.

The increase is about 22 percent, he said.

Addressing wheat growers at the Old National Assembly, Mr Mwila said that although Zambia had done very well in the field of wheat production, the nation must continue to increase its output.

"For as long as we are far from meeting our national requirements and for as long as the import bill of wheat continues to be hefty, we must continue to explore all possible ways and means of surging ahead with increased wheat production."

He attributed the increasing trend of wheat production to contributions made by private and Government concerns.

Two Government wheat schemes--Mpongwe on the Copperbelt and the Zambia-Canada wheat scheme in Mbala--were making significant contributions to the wheat output and research.

The most important incentive for wheat production was perhaps the establishment of a wheat loan scheme with the Agricultural Finance Company (AFC) in 1975.

The scheme had set aside money for farmers wishing to develop their wheat farms under irrigation.

Duty Exemptions

A second incentive continued to be the Government's pricing policy for wheat. Next year the price would go up from the present K26 per 90kg to K32, representing an increase of 23 percent in a single season.

Other Government incentives include duty exemptions of farming implements and machinery, preferential taxation and foreign exchange allowance.

This was aimed at reducing the nation's foreign exchange needed to import wheat from overseas to meet the local demand.

FERTILIZER BAGS REPORTEDLY WASTED IN NAMBOARD DEPOTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

NEARLY 100,000 bags of fertiliser at Livingstone and Mazabuka Namboard depots have gone to waste, Member of the Central Committee Mr Kapasa Makasa was told in Choma yesterday.

He also learnt that more than 500,000 empty bags of maize had been destroyed.

Southern Province Namboard manager Mr Reuben Kalebuka informed Mr Makasa who was touring depots in the area, that 90,948 bags of fertiliser had gone to waste.

He said it was believed the fertiliser was soaked by rain while coming into the country about five years ago. The empty bags were believed to have been destroyed while at the port of Dar es Salaam.

Mr Makasa, who expressed concern over the matter, said he wondered why Namboard had not claimed from the insurers over the losses.

He warned Namboard and the Southern Province Co-operative Marketing Union (SPCMU) that the Party and its Government would not accept any excuses if any produce was destroyed this year because of poor handling. He directed SPCMU to pay farmers within two weeks.

Mr Makasa asked the union to find means of ensuring that all maize produced was transported to the line of rail before the rains. There should be no excuse for lack of sufficient loading machines, he said.

SPCMU general manager Mr Hassan Ramaswamy said the union was in financial difficulties at the moment and apart from K15 million which it is owed by the Government in grants, the union had a bank overdraft of K18 million.

Out of this figure, SPCMU had already spent K17 million on buying 1.8 million bags of maize from farmers. So far 1.1 million had been delivered to the line of rail.

The union needed about K50 million to pay farmers and unless the Government came to its aid, SPCMU might not be able to pay them on time.

Mr Makasa said the Government would be happy to know the problems facing unions so that they could be solved.

Choma district political secretary Mr Alfred Lumbwe said the top leadership in the nation was partly to blame for some of the heavy losses being suffered.

In a vote of thanks he said often the top leadership made important decisions before the necessary facilities were taken into consideration.

BRIEFS

ENERGY RESEARCH OFFERS--A number of cou 'ries have approached Zambia with offers to assist her in the research for alternative sources of energy, a minister of state has said. Minister of State for Power Transport and Communications, Mr Francis Chembe, said in Lusaka that Zambia has been approached by many countries which want to assist her in the development of other sources of energy following the recent two-week world energy conference held in Nairobi, Kenya. Mr Chembe could not, however, say which countries had approached Zambia as the Government was still considering the offers. He said the Government was using the Nairobi conference on new and renewable sources of energy as an impetus to the country's policy of diversifying energy sources in view of the huge bill being spent on importing fuel. "We recognise that we should not just depend on hydrocarbons as the only source of energy. This is in view of the escalating costs of this commodity. /Text/ /Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 31 Aug 81 p 3/

EXPANSION OF FERTILIZER PLANT--Negotiations for a K31.5 million loan to finance Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia expansion project are now nearing completion, a spokesman for Barclays Bank announced in Lusaka yesterday. A consortium of Barclays, Grindlays, Standard and Zambia National Commercial banks and the Workmen's Compensation Fund Control Board, Zambia National Provident Fund and Zambia State Insurance Corporation, has pledged to provide medium and short-term loans for the proposed expansion of the firm's fertiliser plant at Kafue. Production level at the plant is now around 50,000 tonnes a year. It is envisaged that this figure would be increased to 200,000 tonnes on completion of the project. This would be 80 percent of domestic fertiliser requirements and would mean a considerable saving of Zambia's foreign exchange. A spokesman said Barclays Bank had taken a keen interest in the fertiliser scheme from the beginning through the bank's long-standing commitment to farming in Zambia. /Text/ /Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Aug 81 p 1/

ARMY MOPPING UP OPERATION AT INKOMO DESCRIBED

Evacuation of Area

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 pp 1, 5

/Text/

THE army will start a clearing operation today to destroy unstable ammunition scattered about Inkomo Barracks during the series of explosions at the camp on August 16.

A spokesman for the Ministry of Defence said army engineers would set off controlled detonations at 11 am after which clearing parties will dispose of all the unexploded ammunition in the area.

Before the detonations, all people within a 10 km radius of Inkomo Barracks will be evacuated and no one will be allowed to enter the area from 9 am until 2 pm today.

All roads, tracks and paths into the area will be closed from 9 am and roadblocks, manned by members of the police and army will be set up.

The spokesman warned that army units will be patrolling the restricted zone and any unauthorised person found within the area will be arrested and prosecuted.

He said people occupying buildings within a 25 km radius of Inkomo should, as "an outside precaution" against possible blast effects, open all doors and windows.

A spokesman for the Department of Civil Aviation warned pilots of light aircraft that they should not fly within a radius of 15 nautical miles of Inkomo Barracks at any time between dawn and dusk today.

A THREE - SECOND explosion which caused a pall of smoke 700 metres high marked the beginning of an army campaign to clear the Inkomo Barracks area of unstable ammunition yesterday.

Once the explosion was complete, army experts observed the blast site by helicopter, and army engineers began scouring the area for remaining debris. The clearing operation is expected to last several days.

Police and army spokesmen at the Mount Hampden roadblock said the explosion was detonated underground to clear the bunkers which were damaged in the original explosion on August 16.

The man in charge of the operation, Lieut.-Colonel Dyck, said the operation went very well and that there were no casualties.

Troops normally resident at the barracks had begun moving back into the complex, he said.—Herald Reporter, Ziana.

U.S. FOREIGN POLICY CRITICIZED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 p 4

/Editorial: "Dangerous Game"/

/Text/

WAVES of open concern for the future, fears that the current reckless line in the United States foreign policy may altogether deprive mankind of a worthy future, are spreading all over the world.

The reasons for concern are obvious; the foreign policy of the Reagan Administration is fully at variance with the most vital interests of millions of people throughout the world. For instance, its refusal to join France last Saturday in supporting black African demands for strong Security Council condemnation of South Africa's incursion into Angola.

Last week, in a provocative stance, the American President admitted that he had sanctioned the shooting down of two Libyan planes.

Then come the events in El Salvador. The Americans of course will tell you that they are in El Salvador because of the mythical Soviet "threat", but will not say they are there because they want to back a regime that has brought misery and death to the people of El Salvador.

The death on Sunday of the former Iranian President and Prime Minister, South Africa's continued acts of aggression in Angola and its refusal to implement a United Nations resolution on Namibia cannot be viewed in isolation.

It is all part of the Reagan Administration's policy to extend American control over the world.

U.S. VETO OF UN RESOLUTION CONDEMNING SA HIT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 8

/Editorial: "A Better Lie"/

/Text/

POSSIBLE direct United States involvement in the current war in Angola could mark the first step in the realignment of imperialist forces against progressive mankind.

On Monday the US vetoed a Security Council resolution condemning racist South Africa's invasion of southern Angola and now there is a hue and cry in Western capitals, reinforced by their imperialist Press, about the presence of "Soviet and East German troops" in Angola.

No doubt South Africa's dwindling political fortunes worry the Americans very much and Mr Reagan is thus itching to jump in to try to turn the tide.

So his administration dramatises the presence in Angola of Soviet military advisers whom it says at the same time it knew to be there. And to tell a better lie it says Soviet troops are fighting with SWAPO guerillas.

In all this America seeks an excuse to join South Africa in fighting SWAPO and South African freedom fighters and to try to set up puppet regimes in Angola, Zambia, Zimbabwe and Mozambique which the Americans fear may "go" to the Soviets.

A new bloody theatre of war must be prevented.

GOVERNMENT RESETTLEMENT HAMPERED BY SELFISH BUYERS

Land Prices Inflated

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 31 Aug 81 pp 1, 6

/Text/

THE Government's resettlement exercise is being hampered by individuals buying farms for their own "self-interest", says the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeramayi.

In a policy statement released to the Herald, the minister said he expected farmers and landowners wanting to sell their land to offer it first to the Government.

In terms of the Lancaster House Agreement, he said, the Government had to acquire land to carry out an equitable land redistribution and resettlement programme.

But "ever since this Government embarked on the policy of acquiring land by means of buying farms in the former white farming areas, we have had to compete unnecessarily with individual land and property buyers", the minister said.

Inflate

"Some of the farms we would acquire for this national purpose have been, and are being bought, by individuals for their own self-interest.

"Such a tendency, if it continues unabated, does not only make land hard to come by for us. Worse still, it will artificially inflate the price of land.

"All of us, including the aspiring landlords and the farm sellers, must realise that the purpose for which my ministry is acquiring land is to redistribute it equally.

"Thus, logically, we demand that all those farmers or landowners who decide to sell their land should — and must — make the first offer to the Government through my ministry.

"Where we turn down the offer or fail to agree on the price for what ever reasons, then the seller can offer the piece of land in question to the public."

Dr Sekeramayi said the feeling among the masses was that the land should not be bought, but simply expropriated since it had been "forcibly grabbed by the settler pioneers".

Turning to the squatter problem, the minister said squatters fell into various categories:

- People who moved on to vacant farms during the liberation struggle.
- Farm workers who were abandoned by their employers. These workers "rightly" took on squatting to earn a living.
- Returning refugees who happened "haphazardly" or otherwise to land on somebody's farm because communal areas were overcrowded or there was nowhere else to go.

● People who were employed in urban areas, on farms or even teachers and businessmen who chose their own areas and left their families to take a claim on their "newly acquired land".

● People who left their plots and arable lands on the communal lands to squat on the neighbouring or distant farms "out of sheer envy".

Dr Sekeramayi said: "The first three categories are genuine and deserving illegal occupants.

To remain

"My ministry will allow these people to remain where they are pending resettlement.

"The last two categories have no reason to be where they are, let alone to be squatting. They do not qualify for resettlement either, and so we have consistently said they should go to wherever they came from.

"However, it is by no means coincidental that squatters' targets are abandoned or unoccupied and unused farms.

"Thus whoever leaves his or her farm lying unused is tempting squatters, who usually are very enterprising."

The minister said the solution to the squatter problem lay in:

● An accelerated pace or orderly and planned resettlement.

● The landowners bringing all land into "conspicuous, meaningful and effective production".

'HERALD' Comment

/Editorial: "Land Reform"/

/Text/

THE Government obviously does not want to ride roughshod over anyone in acquiring land, but decisive action is needed NOW to find a lasting solution to the land issue.

The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has already voiced his disquiet at the current scramble for land; on Saturday the Minister without Portfolio, Dr Nkomo, urged the Government to control exorbitant land prices which he said prevented young Zimbabweans engaging in commercial farming.

Now the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sekeramayi, says competition with individual land buyers is affecting the massive resettlement programme.

Yet need the Government be put in such an embarrassing position as to even plead with farm sellers to give it first priority, considering the enormity of the resettlement scheme — and the fact that the rural masses — who still experience high population pressures — supported the liberation struggle because they wanted to regain "their" land.

There appears to be a strong case here for Government to prohibit the sale of land above prices set by its evaluators and to control the size of land an individual can acquire until such a time that equitable land distribution is accomplished. Those with more land should be asked to sell the extra hectares.

Land reform should not wait until the land-hungry rise against a new landed gentry emerging in Zimbabwe.

MUGABE CONTINUES INTERNAL TOUR, DENOUNCES 'ENEMY AMONG US'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

ENKELDOORN.

THOUSANDS yesterday braved the weather to hear the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, during his "meet the people campaign" in the Midlands area.

He told an enthusiastic rally at Sadza, 80 km east of Enkeldoorn, that Zimbabwe was not free because the factories and mines were not yet under Zimbabwean control.

"The enemy is still among us," Mr Mugabe said.

He accused foreign-owned companies of holding secret meetings to plan sabotage against the economy.

"You hear of shortages of so many things so that tomorrow the people may say the Boers were better," he told the rally.

The Prime Minister warned the people to guard against the 5 000 former auxiliary forces of Bishop Abel Muzorewa who, he said, would be planted among the people to commit acts of sabotage.

He urged all Zimbabweans to join the party that had championed the cause of the country and to unite against enemy threats of destabilisation.

The Government was fully aware of the people's problems he said, stressing that during the past year his administration had been preoccupied with cleaning up the civil service.

Substantial progress had been made to Africanise the civil service and remove saboteurs who, he said, had been responsible for delaying the implementation of a number of programmes.

He accused certain leaders who went about buying farms and other property before the people had been resettled.

He stressed that the land distribution exercise would continue as small farms were being purchased.

The Government had worked towards ensuring that every Zimbabwean child had a sound education. "These are the prime ministers and cabinet ministers of the future and their lives have to be promoted more than those of their adult counterparts," he said. — Ziana.

PLANNING MINISTER TO ADDRESS LONDON CONFERENCE

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

DR BERNARD CHIDZERO, the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, has been invited to address a two-day conference entitled Zimbabwe Business Opportunities for the 1980s, being held in London on October 12 and 13.

Organised by African Economic Digest and Advanced Management Research International, the conference is aimed at giving potential investors a complete economic picture of Zimbabwe.

At this stage it is unclear whether Dr Chidzero will be able to attend as he will be at the Commonwealth Conference in Melbourne in early October.

But a ministry spokesman said the minister hoped to fit the London conference into his schedule.

Other speakers from Zimbabwe are Professor Tony Hawkins, head of the University of Zimbabwe's business studies department; Mr Nigel Lea-Cox, general manager of National Railways of Zimbabwe; and Mr Bill Keatinge, assistant general manager of Barclays Bank of Zimbabwe Ltd.

Other guests include Dr Christopher Colclough, fellow of the Institute of Development Studies at Sussex University; Mr Stephen Hunt of the Bank of America; Mr Roger Pick, commercial director of Balfour Beatty, and Mr Gavin Shreeve, of African Economic Digest.

The organisers say the conference will provide a full appraisal of the prospects and problems offered by involvement in Zimbabwe and suggest ways of formulating an effective and competitive marketing or investment strategy.

"Success and profitability of involvement in Zimbabwe is likely to depend on an appreciation of the prospects and problems of a changing political, commercial and economic environment," said the organisers.

"Ill-prepared foreign companies could lose out through an inaccurate assessment of the political risks.

"These problems must be clearly identified and their importance for the economy assessed.

"Obstacles to be negotiated include shortages of skilled manpower, inflationary tendencies, and transportation and communications bottlenecks."

Hence the conference outline — identifying market determinants, reconstruction and development programmes (1981-86), mining, transport, agriculture, project financing.

ILLEGAL FIREARMS HANDED IN DURING CLOSE OF AMNESTY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 3

BULAWAYO

HUNDREDS of illegally held firearms were handed in to police around the country during the final days of the national amnesty, a police spokesman said yesterday.

A total of 2 673 guns, rifles and pistols were handed in during the two-month-long amnesty which ended this week, although that is not considered to be the final figure.

A police spokesman in Salisbury said weapons were still coming in from outlying stations and that it would be a few days yet before the final tally was known.

The breakdown of the figure to date is: Salisbury 874; Mashonaland 678; Matabeleland and Bulawayo 450; Midlands 357; Manicaland 162; and Victoria Province 152.

Figures released by police do not include numbers of grenades or rockets or similar weapons handed in. it relates only to firearms.

The spokesman said: "The large percentage of weapons handed in were received in the last few days of the amnesty, although we do not have any breakdown for that figure.

"We cannot comment at this stage on how the amnesty has been received and whether or not we are pleased with results," he said.

The Government announced the general arms amnesty for the months of July and August to give all those people in illegal possession of weapons a chance to hand them in.

Along with the amnesty went a warning of severe sentences in future for those illegally possessing weapons.

Response to the amnesty was very slow and disappointing during the first month but picked up towards the end.

MAIZE SHELTERS TAKEN BY ARMY, SAYS IRVINE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 4

/Text/

TARPAULINS ordered by the Grain Marketing Board to protect stocks of maize of the recent bumper harvest from the weather as they wait transport from depots have been requisitioned by the Ministry of Defence, it was alleged.

The allegation was made by Mr Bill Irvine (RF, Marlborough) in a supplementary question.

Earlier he was told by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Dr Swithin Mombeshora, that the present stocks of tarpaulins were inadequate but that the situation would be rectified by October.

The deputy minister's answer was to a question tabled in the lower House by Mr Irvine, asking if sufficient tarpaulins were tect the existing large stocks of maize from the wind, rain and sun.

Mr Irvine said it was understood that the GMB had ordered sufficient tarpaulins "in good time, to protect grain stocks from the elements, but said that these had been requisitioned by "another ministry".

He later said that the ministry which had requisitioned the tarpaulins was the Ministry of Defence.

This, he said, had been don with the approval of the Ministry of Agriculture.

Mr Irvine expressed fears for the grain and cotton stocks that were now left uncovered, in view of the fact that the rain season has now commenced.

Some areas of the country had received as much as 40 mm of rain on Tuesday night.

Mr Irvine asked the minister for an undertaking that the tarpaulins would be returned by October so that maize stocks could be covered and also asked him to report back on what damage had been inflicted by the rain.

The deputy minister promised that the ministry would do all it could to solve the problem.

NATION POSSESSES IMMENSE RESERVE OF HUMAN SKILLS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 10 Aug 81 p 11

[Article by Tendai Dumbutshena]

[Text]

ZIMBABWE has more skills at its disposal than has hitherto been realised and could be self-sufficient in its manpower requirements within the next five years.

These are some of the tentative conclusions drawn by those responsible for the comprehensive national manpower survey currently underway. The survey is intended to give the government a clear picture of the human resources at its disposal.

Research officers deployed throughout the country report that there are sufficient black semi-skilled and skilled workers to keep the economy running. This is contrary to the widely-held belief that "white skills" are indispensable to the country's economy.

As one official of the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development put it: "The myth of the indispensability of white skills was propagated by the Smith regime to justify racially determined socio-economic inequalities."

There are at present 9 034 recognised skilled and professional workers in the country.

Labour

Of a total labour force of 250 000, 25% is classified as semi-skilled and officials of the survey believe about half of the latter category can be upgraded to skilled status.

This would give Zimbabwe a skilled manpower force of about 34 000

Mr Cephas Msipa, the Deputy Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, said the figure of 9 034 skilled personnel represents roughly 2% of the entire labour force — hardly sufficient, he says, to run a diverse economy such as Zimbabwe.

But the Minister said it stands to reason that there is a reservoir of "hidden" black semi-skilled and skilled labour force which has helped develop the country and enabled it to survive the steady exodus of skilled white workers.

He pointed out that most of the skilled whites in Zimbabwe are journeymen who perform supervisory functions while the operational work is done by blacks in the semi-skilled category.

Mr Msipa gave an example of a company he visited in Gwelo where out of a total workforce of 850, only two were classified as skilled.

A situation thus exists of skilled work being done by workers in the semi-skilled category who, because of years of discriminatory legislation, were not upgraded.

This is not to say no serious shortages of skills have resulted from the emigration of a significant number of whites. Between 1978-81, Zimbabwe lost 4 000 white skilled workers. This has created a skilled manpower crisis in all engineering fields, the railways, airways, and other specialised fields.

In addition, 80% of apprentices in the country are white. And many of these are looking for greener pastures elsewhere, further exacerbating the shortage crisis and inhibiting the growth of the economy.

As Dr Bernard Chidzero, the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, put it: "It is generally acknowledged that one of the most significant constraints facing the economy and one which could become more critical if remedial measures are not sustained, is the shortage of skilled manpower."

One of the remedial measures the government is taking is that of recruiting skilled manpower from abroad.

By the end of this month a contingent of 204 artisans will arrive from Kenya to help run the country's rail system and more are expected from Pakistan.

The recruitment of expatriates is, however, regarded as a stop-gap measure and the government has laid down stringent conditions for their employment — only to be allowed in cases where there are no suitably qualified Zimbabweans.

They will be employed under local conditions and required to train understudies to take over their jobs.

The Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Fredrick Shava, said the training of local understudies was "an essential prerequisite for the granting of work permits to expatriates".

His Deputy, Mr Msipa, said despite government efforts to minimise the recruitment of expatriates, white employers are still finding excuses to recruit foreign whites.

"They want to stampede the government into opening doors to allow all sorts of people to come in," he said.

The main thrust of the government's external recruitment campaign is to encourage professional and skilled Zimbabweans still abroad to return. Research officers have been sent to countries where there are concentrations of Zimbabweans — mainly Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Organisations known to have sponsored Zimbabweans for advanced studies have been asked to supply the required information. There are 2 000 black Zimbabweans being trained abroad as artisans, 600 of whom are in West Germany.

Encouraged

It is estimated by Ministry officials that there are 3 000 professionally qualified Zimbaweans outside the country in such fields as medicine, teaching, and engineering. All these people are being encouraged to return home and augment the skilled manpower in the country.

Another issue the survey has seriously addressed itself to is training.

Training centres are being established at a number of growth points and existing facilities in Gwelo, Salisbury, Umtali and Bulawayo are being expanded. A R4-million training college will be built next year in the Midlands town of Que Que.

The survey is in its first phase — that of establishing Zimbabwe's professional, skilled, and semi-skilled human resources. The Ministry of Manpower is still receiving completed questionnaires from employers.

Initially, according to Mr Msipa, there was little cooperation from the private sector which was suspicious of the motives behind the survey. But there is now appreciation of the usefulness of the exercise.

Phase two of the survey will concentrate on the unskilled category with an obvious emphasis on training.

Indeed, the wide infrastructure of training institutions which the government is setting up will mostly benefit the unskilled worker.

STRIKING MUNICIPAL WORKERS AGREE TO RESUME WORK

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

MORE than 460 striking municipal workers agreed yesterday to return to work this morning after winning some concessions on their demands for changes in their conditions of service.

The workers, all employed by the cleansing section of the amenities division of the department of works, struck on Monday morning and demanded a five-day week and protective clothing for certain duties.

They agreed to return to work after the chairman of the city council's general purposes committee, Councillor Solomon Tawengwa, promised that he would strongly recommend the improvements in conditions to his committee and the full council.

Both he and Councillor Ken Madora assured the workers that there would be no trouble getting the changes approved but by law the formal process had to be followed.

Councillor Tawengwa said the section chief had agreed to issue gumboots, gloves and hoses as soon as possible to men engaged in such jobs as cleaning public toilets.

The cleansing department's duties cover refuse collection.

The men won a five-day working week, and no longer have to work on Saturdays. But they agreed to continue working a 45-hour week and to extend their five working days to nine hours each.

The new arrangement will not come into effect until Monday next week.

Apologising for not having had a chance to meet the workers' committee before, Councillor Tawengwa said there were about 200 committees representing about 12 000 workers in municipal service and it would be a full-time job to visit them all.

The chairman of the workers' committee, Mr Jameson Madzingira, said he was reasonably pleased with the result of the meeting with municipal officials, the councillors and officers of the Government's department of industrial relations.

A major achievement had been the frank discussions involving the workers' committee, up to now almost ignored, he said.

"This whole thing would never have happened if there had been serious talks in the past.

"This is a dirty, smelly job and when we leave and get on a bus, people often move away because we stink so much. There should be somewhere where we can get clean and leave our overalls."

GOVERNMENT DIALOGUE WITH PRIVATE ENTERPRISE PROMISED

/Text/

THE Government will participate in private enterprise only after it has held a dialogue with the companies themselves, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said yesterday.

Mr Mugabe, this year's winner of the Zimbabwe Institute of Public Relations Communicator of the Year award, told a lunch meeting given by the ZIPR in Salisbury that discussions were taking place between the Government and several companies on State participation.

The Prime Minister also stressed the importance of a rapport between the Government and the public.

"If we have policies, they must be understood by the public," he said.

Mr Mugabe added that since taking office last year his Government had managed to sell to the public its policies of reconciliation, reconstruction and rehabilitation.

"They have understood our commitment to the principle of a non-racial society, despite the negativism of the Republican Front (or is it the Racial Front?) and the reactionaries who continue to support it!"

Zimcord aid

The Prime Minister also disclosed that the Zimcord aid pledged to programme and projects would soon be used in substantial amounts.

"We need public participation in the programmes and projects, but such participation, if it is to be effective and meaningful, must presuppose an effective communication exercise between the Government and the public," Mr Mugabe added.

Describing his "meet the people" drive throughout the country as "most inspiring and educative", Mr Mugabe said he had listened to a lot of grievances, complaints and criticisms from the public, but was also showered with praise for initiating people - orientated programmes.

Presenting the award to the Prime Minister, Mr George Foot, president of the ZIPR, said many "miraculous" adjustments had been made in the new Zimbabwe among all races, with Mr Mugabe's leadership an inspiration.

Mr Foot said the Prime Minister, who also won the 1980 Man of the Year award, struck listeners of the Radio Network Africa as a man who had striven for unity under daunting circumstances, following a protracted war, and who had held the extreme poles of political views together.

Mr Foot singled out one of the Prime Minister's achievements as his address to the nation after his party, ZANU (PF), won the elections last year.

"That address was effective communications of the highest order," he said, "setting and leading Zimbabwe and its peoples on a new and exciting path to peace with the themes of reconciliation, rehabilitation and reconstruction."

The Communicator of the Year award's first presentation was in 1979 and winners do not have to be in the communications profession itself.

An independent panel of judges selects a winner and runner-up from persons nominated and seconded for the award. This year's runner-up was Mr Bob Stumbles, chairman of the National Association of Societies For Care of the Handicapped.

The luncheon was attended by the Minister of Information and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira, and Professor Walter Kamba, the principal-designate and vice-chancellor of the University of Zimbabwe.

INFLATION SLOWED DOWN BY JUNE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 p 5

/Text/

THE cost of living, especially for lower-income families, rose very little between March and June, according to the latest Government statistics.

For lower-income families the cost of living rose 1,35 percent in the second quarter, compared to a 8,55 percent rise in the first three months of the year.

The cost of living for upper-income families rose 3,07 percent in the second quarter, compared to 6,06 percent from December to March.

Figures for the first half of the year show the lower-income cost of living rose 8.55 percent — the equivalent of around 17 percent annual inflation — and upper-income living costs increased by 9.3 percent, 18.6 percent annual inflation.

Higher excise duties on drink and tobacco were the main reasons for the very high rises in the early part of the year with the poor affected most.

Clothing, household stores, transport and food showed the biggest gains in both groups.

The same issue of the Monthly Digest of Statistics showed the number of people employed in almost all sectors increased in the first quarter of this year.

Public administration showed the largest increase — 10 000 (or almost 14 percent) to 80 800, a record surpassing the previous highest of 77 600 in March last year.

The number employed in education rose 8,6 percent to 52 000. The building sector payroll grew 2,4 percent and manufacturing by 2 percent to 167 400.

The number of people in domestic service continued to decline, a trend started in 1975, and now less than 105 000 people work in this sector.

SALVATIONISTS PROTEST WCC SPLIT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Salvation Army in Zimbabwe has called upon the British-based head of the church, General Arnold Brown, to restore the army to full membership of the World Council of Churches.

The church recently pulled out of the WCC in protest against the ecumenical movement's aid to armed liberation movements.

In a statement yesterday the Zimbabwe territorial commander, Colonel David Moyo, said: "Such movements fight for human rights and we see no conflict between such ideals and the gospel of love, charity and the liberation of the total man.

"We ask the general, therefore, to restore the army to full status in the WCC.

"The Salvation Army in Zimbabwe will maintain its 90 years' tradition as part of the universal church of Christ with a strong social conscience, serving the spiritually and physically needy without political bias and regardless of colour, creed or culture."

The statement was issued after a meeting between Colonel Moyo, senior officers and representatives of the rank and file of the church.

More than 75 Salvationists marched on the church's headquarters yesterday morning demanding that the church return to the WCC.

Placards asked what General Brown had to do with Zimbabwe and urged him and the church to support the liberation movements.

The leader of the demonstrators, Corps Sergeant-Major Jonah Matswetu, said members of the army were protesting against the order of the general.

"We believe," he told the group and senior staff officers of the church, "the WCC represents all the churches in the world and we want to live in the world.

"We believe the word of God came to all mankind to save all men . . . and we members of the Salvation Army all feel we should live within the WCC."

He appealed to all members of the church in Zimbabwe, black and white, to associate themselves with the opposition to the WCC pull-out.

Colonel Moyo said he was under orders to accept General Brown's decision, although he had advised very strongly against it.

He had called in his senior officers to discuss what action to take.

HEALTH MINISTRY TO RUN FAMILY PLANNING

Financial Difficulties

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 pp 1, 8

/Text/

THE Family Planning Association which says it has been forced to wind up through financial difficulties, has been taken over by the Ministry of Health, the minister, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, announced yesterday.

All 450 employees of the FPA will keep their jobs, and will be employed by the ministry of health, Dr Ushewokunze said in a statement.

The FPA, he said, had spent $367 550 of its $1 477 220 ministerial grant, and the remainder had been frozen pending a legal action against him over the banning of Depo-Provera, the controversial contraceptive injection.

"If the Family Planning Association is not planning to use Government funds to sue the minister, who then is paying for the lawsuit?" he asked.

"Our advice to the Family Planning Association was to phase out the use of Depo-Provera as a contraceptive. In response to this, the Family Planning Association instituted legal proceedings against the Minister of Health in accordance with its stated policy of fighting all those not in favour of its militaristic solutions.

"Given that the ministry meet over 90 percent of the association's expenses, is the Family Planning Association biting the hand that feeds it?" he asked.

The FPA's work would now fall into line with his ministry's maternal and child health care and expanded programmes of immunisation strategy.

Part of the Government's primary health care programme was to provide a preventive service for mothers and children at risk, he said.

"Child spacing in this is regarded as only one aspect of an integrated health programme aimed at better nutrition, education, sanitation and mental well-being," the minister said.

The FPA has always been seen as a complement to the primary health care programme, not its opponent. The FPA's response to the phasing-out of Depo-Provera made him wonder in whose interest the association worked. But the resignation of Mr Peter Dodds as FPA director should not be seen as the death knell of the association, he said.

Dr Marasha Marasha, a gynaecologist formerly with the Pathfinder family planning association, will be director of the new department of child spacing.

The remaining $1 089 670 of the former FPA grant will be used by the department to continue family planning programmes.

Mr Peter Dodds said last night that the takeover did not "fill me with optimism for the future".

'Policy Reexamination'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 8

/Editorial: "For the People"/

/Text/

CONSIDERING the background, it was almost inevitable that the Government would take over the Family Planning Association. Its work was probably too important for it to remain in the hands of a voluntary organisation.

The work of the FPA was basically appreciated by the Government; despite the so-called Depo-Provera controversy, there can be no doubt that the association filled a great need in a country with one of the highest birth rates in the world.

What the Government objected to, apart from the use of a drug that clearly is not the most reliable form of contraception, was the approach of the FPA to its task.

Obviously, a method of coercion could not be countenanced by a government elected by the people.

In a situation where public funds are involved, it had to be appreciated that the Government could not stand idly by while methods which it did not support wholeheartedly were employed.

Inevitably, there will be criticism of the Government take-over of the association. Yet a collision course had clearly been marked out between the authorities and the association. The bad blood between the director of the FPA, Mr Dodds, and the Minister of Health, Dr Ushewokunze, was only one element of the conflict.

In future perhaps the Government ought to re-examine its entire policy towards voluntary organisations engaged in work as important to its own development plans such as family planning or child spacing.

It is true that the FPA did some marvellous work for the country, but there is a point beyond which any government would be abdicating its responsibility to the people if it did not take action.

Such a point had been reached in the case of the FPA; our sincere hope is that all concerned will appreciate that despite their differences, the work initiated by the FPA will be continued.

CURRENCY LOOPHOLE TO BE PLUGGED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Government will crack down on emigrants trying to use loopholes to by-pass exchange control regulations following the ban on furniture exports, the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, warned yesterday.

Senator Nkala warned that areas still open to exchange control contraventions would be investigated and plugged.

"We keep our ears to the ground and our eyes open to detect areas where people intend working against our economic well-being so that we can plug loopholes," he said in an interview.

Ministry staff were keeping on their toes to investigate other areas of concern since the clamp on emigrant furniture exports.

Senator Nkala said it was not a witch-hunt but that the Government wanted to ensure nothing adversely affected the country's economic progress.

He said it was an ongoing exercise because Government was dealing with human beings. "You try and catch them and they will try other means.

"But if their actions are intended to help the South African economy, we will not hesitate to act.

"Our task is to see that the economy is working well and keep a watchful eye on those leaving the country. Their draining of the economy causes suffering for those who remain here," Senator Nkala said.

He said it was general knowledge that whites were leaving the country in great numbers and trying to take everything with them, "while we want them to stay since reconciliation is taking firm root".

"Since the RF is so vociferous about the issue, then they have the duty to stop these actions that will provoke counter-actions from Government. We don't want to punish or persecute the whites.

"Our obligation is to protect permanent residents of Zimbabwe. We are not prepared to solve the problems of the birds of flight," Senator Nkala said.

NDLOVU: BLACKS NOT YET LIBERATED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 31 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/

BLACK Zimbabweans have been oppressed for so long that they have not been able to liberate themselves in spite of attaining independence, the PF MP for Matabeleland South, Dr Callistus Ndlovu, said yesterday.

Speaking at a report-back meeting at Mawabeni school, about 10 km from Essexvale, Dr Ndlovu urged people to do things for themselves, saying that if people waited for the Government to do things for them there would be no progress at all.

Dr Ndlovu had come to report back to local people the response he had received from the Government on their request for more grazing land.

He said the Government had indicated that it could buy a farm being offered by another Matabeleland South MP, Mr Peter Njini, between Mawabeni and Nswazi.

He said that he was aware that Mawabeni was the most crowded area in the whole of Matabeleland. And it was therefore receiving priority on resettlement.

Dr Ndlovu said though the Government was doing its best to resettle people, the people themselves could help the Government by forming co-operatives and buying farms.

It was only through co-operatives that the Government could come in to help because people would have shown then that they were serious about their lives. He said the Government could not help people as individuals so co-operatives were the only way through which people could be helped.

Answering an elder who had said that people were wary of co-operatives because they did not know what they were like and how they functioned, Dr Ndlovu said the disease among the black people was that people all tended to cling to themselves.

"People still want to work on their own and boast that this and this is mine. They claim that if they work together with others, it will be a drawback.

"This is a disease that has to be routed out of the people. If we get rid of this disease, we will then begin to move forward."

UDI MEDALS 'MAY STILL BE WORN'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 5

/Text/

BULAWAYO.

THE wearing of medals won by servicemen during UDI will not be banned by the Government, an army spokesman said yesterday.

The Government has legislated against the sale or public display of souvenirs or mementoes from UDI years.

The ban came into effect on Tuesday. Many people believed the ban also included the display of service medals by servicemen, awarded during that period.

A spokesman for the army said yesterday such medals were to be considered by the Government as Commonwealth medals, and people to whom they they were awarded would be allowed to display them as normal.

What will change is the order in which the medals are worn. Medals of honour are normally given precedence on the wearer's chest but the priority must now be given to Zimbabwe medals.

The Zimbabwe Independence Medal must be worn in first position and other Zimbabwean army medals, due to be issued soon, must also take precedence over any other.

A spokesman for the Ministry of Home Affairs yesterday clarified the new rulings concerning the sale or display of UDI souvenirs and mementoes.

Jewellery incorporating Rhodesian coins is still legal, as are books about Rhodesia or bearing the name Rhodesia. The legislation does not in any way affect such things as the Livingstone Medal — a commemorative medal struck in connection with Livingstone and Victoria Falls.

"What is now considered illegal is anything which is an obvious souvenir, relic or memento of the UDI period," he said.

"This includes T-shirts with offensive slogans connected with the period, the sale or display of Rhodesian flags and, quite simply, any obvious souvenir. I do not know of any medal or coin this might affect.

"But, for instance, the wearing of a Rhodesian flag as a patch on a pair of jeans is illegal.

"Also illegal is wearing badges or emblems of certain units from that period such as the Selous Scouts, or to wear or display or sell anything advertising army operations like operation Tangent from that period."

CHARTER PLANES HIT BY FUEL CRISIS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 p 5

/Text/

SALISBURY'S air charter companies are struggling to continue operations in the face of a critical shortage of aviation fuel.

Techair, which operates from Charles Prince airport with five light aircraft and six pilots, expects to have to suspend operations soon.

There is no fuel in the pumps and operations are continuing with the fuel in the aircraft.

"That will run out soon and we are not hopeful of getting more supplies," said the manager, Mr John Plant.

"We have been living from hand to mouth for some time and it now looks as though the crunch has come. In response to inquiries we have been told that some recent deliveries have been below specification.

"When aviation fuel arrives in the country it is tested to ensure that it is of high quality. Suddenly some supplies were found to be sub-standard and unsuitable for use in light aircraft."

Mr Charles Paxton, the general manager of United Air Charters, which operates from Salisbury airport, said the shortage was critical.

"All the companies in Salisbury have kept going with fuel in the aircraft tanks and supplies we have received from other centres, such as Bulawayo, Umtali and Victoria Falls.

"But even these are now down to the dregs. I have been told that some supplies have arrived but they are expected to last only a few days."

Mr Paxton said only light aircraft fuel was scarce and that Viscounts and jets used a different fuel which was not in short supply.

Mr Norman Groenewald, the chief pilot of Skyline, said the situation was very bad. "We have just had a small supply sent up from Bulawayo but if we get no more by tomorrow that is the end of our fuel."

A spokesman for the Shell Oil Company said he could not comment. "We only sell the fuel; we don't acquire it."

A spokesman for the Zimbabwe Oil Procurement Consortium referred the query to the Ministry of Trade and Commerce.

TOURIST INDUSTRY PROBLEMS AIRED

Air Industry Help

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 p 5

/Text/

DESPITE rising tourist figures Zimbabwe's hotels are doing little more business than they were last year and want Air Zimbabwe to follow the lead of other African airlines and offer package holidays at reasonable rates.

The chairman of the hotel association, Mr Keith Boshi, said yesterday. "We read with great excitement the Government statistics each month but we never see all these extra tourists."

He believed many visitors from neighbouring countries such as Zambia were just day-trippers, or people who might sleep rough for one night in their cars on a shopping trip.

The figures for the first four months of this year showed figures for bed-nights sold by hotels and the number of visitors did not tally.

Almost 118 000 people visited Zimbabwe in the first four months of this year compared to 47 578 in the same period last year, according to the Central Statistical Office.

But hotel figures, produced by the Zimbabwe Tourist Board and published in Hotel and Catering, are different. The number of bed-nights sold rose from 249 355 to only 263 585, instead of the more than 500 000 that could reasonably have been expected.

An increased number of bed-nights available worsened the situation and the percentage of possible sales dropped from 42 percent to 39 percent.

Mr Boshi said the figures for the Victoria Falls could be taken as a barometer of Zimbabwe's tourist industry as this was the one part of the country that was likely to attract a large number of people in its own right.

Bed occupancy sank from 30 percent last year to 29 percent in the first four months of this year.

He appealed to Air Zimbabwe to put together a package tour. Kenya Airways managed to bring people out from Britain for 10 days in Kenya for around $500, including half-board.

"I don't think Britain is the best place to offer tours, Germany would be a better bet and we should be going for the middle class man looking for a different holiday in the sun."

Drop in South African Traffic

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Sep 81 p 8

/Editorial: "Tourist Target"/

/Text/

WITH a big drop in the once "traditional" South African tourist traffic after the introduction recently of two-day visas, too many beds in Zimbabwe's major tourist spots remain empty and prospects for the foreseeable future look bleak.

Which is why a call made this week by the chairman of the hotel association, Mr Keith Boshi, for Air Zimbabwe to help promote tourism abroad must be taken seriously and followed up with a major tourism promotion campaign in Europe and the Americas, and elsewhere in Africa, backed by an equally big publicity thrust about the peace and stability that prevail in the country.

Zimbabwe perhaps ranks at the top in Africa in the provision of tourist infrastructure, yet it is hotels in the nerve-centres of tourism — Victoria Falls and Kariba — which are mainly in the doldrums but must still keep staff and services running.

The Zimbabwe Tourist Board and Air Zimbabwe, using direct air links between Salisbury and London and Frankfurt, must bring in package tours or in association with their SADCC counterparts promote circuit tours.

But only action, not rhetoric, will earn us the targeted $60 million from tourism by the year 1986.

TOURIST INDUSTRY STATISTICS QUESTIONED BY HOTELIERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Aug 81 pp 1, 13

/Text/ Several experienced hoteliers in Zimbabwe have criticised the tourist statistics provided from Government sources recently.

" believe that the total figures for "visitors" reported in the Press and t to reflect a supposed upsurge of tourists may often include businessmen, d legates and "shoppers" on brief visits from neighbouring countries who do not contribute to the tourist structure.

One spokesman said he had noticed that visitors to Salisbury from other local centres in Zimbabwe had signed a visitors book at the Publicity Bureau and were apparently counted as "tourists."

It is believed that hoteliers are to approach Tourist Board officials on the matter. They are "disturbed" at the method of counting tourists at present and will ask if a more factual method of counting genuine tourists can be established.

Statistics Say Tourism Up

Migration statistics for May, the last month for which figures are available, show that the depressing trend in emigration is continuing, but there are a few bright notes.

Three professional and trade groups, physicians and surgeons, teachers and printers and related workers show a net gain for the month.

Six physicians and surgeons entered the country as immigrants and only one left. A total of 51 teachers, male and female, arrived in Zimbabwe and, for the first time in many months, a smaller number, 18, left the country. Five printers and related workers arrived and only one left.

Skilled

But overall, the country continued to lose badly needed skills during the month with the largest groups of emigrants coming from the clerical and related worker, service worker, sales worker, mechanical engineering and administration and managerial workers categories.

A grand total of 161 clerical and related workers left Zimbabwe in May and only 32 came into the country. 53 service workers left, five arrived, 48 mechanical engineering workers emigrated and only 16 arrived. And 31 sales workers left and 17 came in. Administration and managerial workers suffered a net loss of 11 (41-30).

The trend in the loss of nursing staff continued with 18 leaving and only seven arriving, but the number of physical scientists and related workers remained constant, as did the number of draughtsmen.

A total of 26 engineers left the country in May and 21 arrived, and eight accountants chose to leave and seven to make Zimbabwe home for a net loss of one.

Others

Other professions and trades that showed a net loss include engineering technicians, a loss of two during May; aircraft mechanics, one; motor mechanics, 15; electricians and related workers, three; construction workers, seven; miners and quarrymen, six; agricultural and related workers, nine; and production supervisors and general foremen, 14.

Migration Statistics Depressing

The number of foreign tourists to Zimbabwe is continuing to increase and may exceed the 1980 figure by a significant margin, according to figures released recently by the Central Statistical Office.

The report, which gives the tourist figures for May 1981, indicates that 144 204 visitors entered the country in the first five months of this year compared with a total of 268 418 for all of last year.

Neighbours

The greatest numbers of tourists still come from out nearest neighbours; 36 430 South Africans and 34 751 Zambians between January and May. This compares with total of 74 244 and 62 733 respectively for all of 1980. In the time they stayed here last year the South Africans spent $6 931 500 while the Zambians spent $4 989 900. From January to May this year they spent $3 561 800 and $2 684 000.

Not surprisingly, the Botswanans were the third largest group. The total for the first five months of this year was 11 460, and they wpent a combined sum of $411 200. The number for 1980 was 20 238, and the amount spent by them for the year was $822 600.

To May this year the number of tourists from the rest of Africa was 8 693, who together spent a total of $1 270 800. This compares with 12 543 visitors throughout 1980. These brought a sum of $3 960 200 to the country.

The number of North American tourists between January and May was 4 657, of which 3 526 were United States citizens. The Americans each remained here an average of three days less than their Canadian counterparts, but they spent more than four times as much; $825 700 to the Canadian's $179 400.

Of the 7 060 visitors from North America last year, over 5 500 were from the US, and they alone brought $1 682 700 into the country.

Among Asians the Japanese are the most frequent visitors to Zimbabwe. Last year 1 207 toured the country and spent $256 800; from January to May some 475 arrived here and brought in $84 700.

Asia

The British and the Germans continue to make up the largest numbers of European tourists. To May this year 11 223 UK citizens came here to visit and between them spent a total of $2 748 300. In 1980 there were 17 961 of these tourists who spent over $3 863 000.

The number of Germans to arrive between January and May was 2 142 and they spent $363 300. The 1980 figures were 3 966 tourists and $593 000.

Interestingly, the British on average stayed 23 nights while the Germans remained only nine. Both are well below the 59 night average for the Danes.

GOVERNMENT TO FLOAT NEW LOAN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

THE Government is to float a new $35 million, three-year loan at an interest rate of 7 percent, the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe, announces today.

In a statement the bank said the interest of 7 percent per annum would be against the issue of Local Registered Stock.

The purchase price would be $100 percent with interest payable half-/words illegible/ on March 21 and September 21.

The first payment would be made on March 21 1982. The stock would be redeemed at par on September 21 1984.

The purpose of the loan would be to assist in financing expenditure in connection with economic, social and administrative services together with the repayment of maturing debts.

Subscription lists will be opened at 9 am on Monday September 21 and will be closed when the loan has been fully subscribed or at the latest by noon on the same day.

Holders of 5 percent Local Registered Stock 1981 (3/75) and 5 percent Local Registered Stock 1981 (1/76) which mature on September 11 and September 19 1981 respectively will be offered conversion rights into the new issue.

Holders who exercise their option to convert the whole or any part of their holdings will be granted preferential allotment over new applicants.

Applications, which must be for not less than $100 nominal value of stock or a multiple thereof, should be addressed to the Reserve Bank in Salisbury.

SIX 'PEOPLE'S MARKETS' PLANNED

/Text/

PLANS to set up five markets in the city centre and one just outside have been approved in principle by the Salisbury City Council, and reports that vendors have been harassed by youths are being investigated.

Councillor Solomon Taweagwa told the council last week that people purporting to be municipal policemen were "arresting" unlicensed vendors and turning them over to the Zimbabwe Republic Police.

He said the mayor, Councillor Tiziraí Gwata, had promised to set up people's markets for these vendors and urged the council to continue to turn a blind eye to their activities until such markets were built.

The director of community services, Mr Bev Taylor, assured councillors that no one in his department was harassing the vendors but there were youths, not employed by the council, who acted as if they were municipal police. He would investigate.

Councillor Tawengwa said he would contact the police and see if tickets already issued could be cancelled.

The six new market areas, which would be set up should the necessary capital funds be available, would keep vendors off the streets and ensure hygienic conditions in the city centre where almost no facilities existed for them, councillors felt.

The six sites selected were: the corner of Speke Avenue and Simola Street; the area to the north of Market Square; the corner of Moffat and Bank Streets; the corner of Charter Road and Rezende Street; the corner of Kenneth Kaunda Avenue and Julius Nyerere Way; and the corner of Harare Road North and Remembrance Drive.

An economic stall fee would be charged.

NKALA DEFENDS GOVERNMENT BAN ON EMIGRANT EXPORTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Sep 81 pp 1, 4

/Text/

THE Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, yesterday gave reasons behind a Government decision to prohibit the export of furniture by emigrants.

The minister told the House of Assembly that many emigrants were buying many new and expensive household effects to circumvent restrictions on the export of currency.

The goods affected by his directive are refrigerators, deep-freezers, stoves, washing machines, lounge suites, dining room suites and high-fidelity and stereophonic equipment.

"I believe it is wrong that the scarce foreign exchange resources of Zimbabwe should be used so that these people effectively get their money out of the country," he said.

Senator Nkala said the value of household effects exported by emigrants in the first year of independence was about $47 million compared with $35 million for the previous year which represents an increase of 32 percent.

In addition, the total value of household goods exported in the first four months of this year was $18,8 million reflecting a staggering increase of 118,6 percent over the same period in 1980.

The minister also pointed out that there was a 55,7 percent increase in the number of emigrants in the first four months of 1981 compared with the same period last year.

"Effectively this means that in the first four months of 1980 the average value of goods exported by each person was $3 261 and that for the same period this year had increased to $4 165 — an increase of 28 percent.

"We cannot go on using scarce foreign exchange to provide goods that are going to be exported by emigrants. Our first concern must be for those who stay and who have to put up with shortages in many areas."

The minister faced a barrage of questions from Republican Front members, some of whom felt the Government was taking punitive measures against emigrants.

Mr Chris Andersen (RF, Mount Pleasant) was assured by the minister that the prohibition did not affect those whose applications were already being processed at the time it was announced.

He reiterated an earlier assurance that those in possession of imported furniture should submit specific applications through their banks for "sympathetic exchange control consideration". This also applied to imported antique furniture if satisfactory documentary evidence was produced that it was imported into this country.

Senator Nkala said the foreign exchange content in furniture could be as high as 50 percent, adding that even if there was little of it, shortages should not be created by not imposing restrictions on its export.

Mr P. K. van der Byl (RF, Hartley-Gatooma) asked whether the rapid increase in emigration did not indicate a "severe decline in the economic future of this country" as a result of Senator Nkala's economic policies.

The minister replied: "I have absolutely no obligation to birds of flight. They are always there running to greener pastures.

"If they can go away without anything, let them do it. The South African government will provide for them. They are racists who do not want to see black people and a black government.

"The black man will always be here. They will also find him in South Africa and run away."

Senator Nkala said the Government had done nothing to drive the emigrants away and that he had no sympathy for those who tried to infringe exchange control regulations.

DELIVERY OF SIXTY NEW LOCOMOTIVES SCHEDULED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

/Text/

ZIMBABWE'S severely underpowered railway system will get 60 more locomotives early next year, the Minister of Transport, Mr Josiah Chinamano, said in the Assembly yesterday.

There was no need for the Government to go "cap in hand" to the South African government for help in easing Zimbabwe's transport problems, he added.

Answering a motion on the country's "deteriorating" transport situation, Mr Chinamano said 25 diesel electric locomotives on order from America were due to be delivered in mid-January.

Arrangements were also being made to order another 35 for delivery early next year.

In the meantime the National Railways had already hired nine diesel electric units from Mozambique and another four from Zambia.

Another 22 locomotives were being overhauled and the first would be ready this month, but only by April or May next year would they all be in operation.

He said the country's transport situation stemmed from the lack of locomotives and the shortage of manpower to overhaul and repair others.

The minister produced figures to show that the railways — with fewer locomotives — was now carrying 10 percent more traffic than it was in 1976.

Up to the end of June that year, 13 million tonnes of rail traffic was moved in this country and Botswana, with 204 steam and diesel locomotives available and in working order every day.

Today, he said, "actual movement by the railways is running at a rate of 14,5 million tonnes a year and this performance is being achieved with a daily availability, in working order of 180 steam and diesel locomotives."

Estimates of the demand on the railways was about 16 million tonnes a year, and to handle the excess, something had had to be done.

On the shortage of artisans he said the first 25 short term contract workers from India and Pakistan were due to arrive on Tuesday.

All recruits would have familiarised themselves with the locos within four months, Mr Chinamano said.

Earlier, RF members said artisans recruited from Britain left after working here only for a matter of weeks.

Mr Chinamano said he had raised this matter with the railways last week, and they were "fully aware of the need to look after the new employees", he said.

The minister added that "it is essential that these artisans are recruited at the best possible price".

If their conditions differed from those of local workers, he said, "I would hope that the local workers will be far-sighted enough to accept the position, knowing that the action being taken is vital for the interests of Zimbabwe".

Answering pleas for a transport policy covering all facets of the industry, Mr Chinamano said steps were being taken to commission consultants to review all policies in the transport industry covering road, rail and air.

This however, would take time to complete and the governments's priority now was to handle the traffic that was offered.

Republican Front members asked the Government to swallow its political pride and deal with the South African government when it needed to solve its problems, as did the governments of Mozambique, Botswana, Zambia and Zaire.

Mr Chinamano said the government's policy on South Africa was that although diplomatic ties had been severed, economic ties and trading links remained.

"It is to be hoped that South Africa will accept this position and recognise that their long-term interests, as well as ours, will best be served by co-operating with us in the field of transport to the maximum extent possible," the minister said.

However, he said, officials of the Ministry of Transport and the National Railways of Zimbabwe had "the necessary authority to contact and work in close co-operation with South Africa at both railway and official level, and South Africa knows precisely what we need.

"There is therefore no need for any approach to be made to South Africa on our bended knees," Mr Chinamano said.

Mr Bill Irvine (RF, Marlborough) suggested that the Government ask the South African Railways for locomotives to allow the country to pull out of its difficult situation now.

The Botswana Government, he said, "have a bit more sense" and wanted to see their economy prosper. "What is wrong with us?" Mr Irvine asked.

During the debate, Mr Irvine came [words illegible] from Dr Naomi [name illegible] the Deputy Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, who accused him of being a South African "promoter."

He told her he was not an advocate for the South African government and expostulated strongly when it was suggested he had a South African passport.

He also told the House that "nasty slogans" like "racist pigs" chalked on the side of railway wagons bound for South Africa would not have the right sort of psychological effect on any South Arican railway worker who was unloading or loading Zimbabwean wagons.—Ziana.

COTTON PRICES WILL LEAD TO SHORTAGES

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

/Text/ Zimbabwe's cotton hectarage is decreasing alarmingly and may have dropped as much as 45% since the 1976 season, said an economist with the Commercial Cotton Growers' Association. While exports, which last year earned $60 million, should not be affected over the next twelve months, the CCGA has predicted a shortage in vegetable oils for the coming year.

Although costs have risen in the last year, the price for cotton, which is not a subsidised crop, has remained at 40 cents a kilogram, which compares unfavoroubly with the $120 a tonne given for maize.

Export

There is no problem, said the economist, with the export market, which accounts for 70% of the lint produced. Thanks to the high quality of the Zimbabwe crop and sophisticated marketing methods, prices are consistently in excess of world market value.

The problem is in the local market and the CCGA has obtained the support of the Minister of Agriculture in trying to set realistic prices with the local buyers. The CCGA does not want a subsidy, the economist said, but the right to trade on a free basis and to be allowed to sell at best advantage.

To protect local mills during the sanctions years, regulations were introduced which obliged the Cotton Marketing Board to satisfy local requirements before export and to hold supplies for these mills. The local market pays the export price less the costs of shipping and handling. The steady rise in these costs has increased the deductions to the mills while decreasing the grower's profit margins. Calling the regulations archaic, the economist said he could discern no real reason for them to be still in effect.

He also pointed out the poor price for cotton seed, which provides 50% of all seed used for vegetable oils, margarine and stock feed cakes. For bagged seed the price is $100 a tonne, (also the same as last year) but this includes the price of the bags, which reduces the price to the grower to $35 a tonne.

Seed

Over the last year both handling costs and bag costs have increased by $30 a tonne. Since the CMB is not allowed to pass this increase along by means of mark-up, this means that the price to the grower has dropped by $30 a tonne.

Interestingly, the CCGA has learned that the expressors (those who manufacture oil from seed) were prepared this year to purchase seed outside the country for $160 a tonne.

Expressors

Currently, the expressors are allocated differing percentages of the total available seed based on the past performance. The CCGA wants an end to this system and the seed crop put out to tender. Competition, it maintains, would realign prices at a more acceptable level of around $170 a tonne.

Both the sale of lint on a free basis to the local market and an open tender for seed would mean an overall increase to the grower of 5,75 cents a kg. The CCGA considers that this would rectify the current crisis and that the increase could be absorbed easily by mills and oil manufacturers. The free trade in lint, for example, would add only 6,6 cents to the price of a $13,75 shirt, an increase of 0,48%.

The CCGA economist also noted the effect pricing is having on the peasant sector which grows about 25% of the total crop. Last year, he said, the involvement of peasants increased by 180%, but these growers have become disenchanted and will drop cotton in favour of maize and groundnuts.

BRIEFS

PF SACKS DEFECTOR--Mr Godfrey Manyararah, who was yesterday reported as having resigned from the Patriotic Front's central province executive, had been sacked from the party, a PF spokesman has said. Mr Madzingwa Dengezi, the party's publicity secretary for the province, said in a statement yesterday he wanted to correct the "misleading" impression that might have been created by Mr Manyararah's alleged resignation. Mr Manyararah had been fired from the PF by the central province executive on August 16. Announcing his "resignation," Mr Manyararah urged all politicians to abandon their parties and join ZANU (PF) as it was a popular party that deserved the support of all peace-loving Zimbabweans. However, Mr Dengezi asked: "Why has it taken him 18 months to realise that ZANU (PF) has the popular support?" /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 9/

EARL SELLS RANCH--London--An absentee landlord struck a blow this week against absentee landlords in Zimbabwe. The 30-year-old Earl of Verulam said here that he was selling his 52 000-acre cattle ranch and tobacco plantation, Forrester Estates, near Umvukwes, because it was "better owned by Zimbabweans than absentees." The land was bought by his grandfather, the fifth Earl, in 1927. He had never really settled in the country, neither had his father nor himself. "I shall be visiting Zimbabwe again towards the end of the year, but I have never really lived there," Lord Verulam said. Lord Verulam added that because of exchange control regulations he could not repatriate the proceeds of the sale of the family estate in Zimbabwe. It had compelled him to "reshuffle my pack within the country. It will be the end of quite an era but the money, from the sale will be reinvested in Zimbabwe." /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 3/

COUNCIL PLAN OPPOSED--Chikangwe residents in Karol have protested a move to incorporate the town body into the rural council in the area, reports the Zimbabwe Information Service. More than 900 residents elected an eight-member committee on Sunday to discuss the future of the township with the Karoi rural council. The chairman of the committee, Mr Leon Munyaradzi, said a petition protesting the intended move would be lodged with the ministry of local government and housing. "The meeting showed strongly that we are against the present structure and the administration of our township. The council has only four black councillors, elected during the colonial era, who do not represent the wish wishes of the people," Mr Munyaradzi charged. The council was doing nothing to improve the lives of residents and the township also had the "worst housing in the country." "We have an unfair situation here. Former white areas have four members on the council while we have only four councillors," Mr Munyaradzi said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 3/

DEMOBILIZATION PAY--Bulawayo--The head of the Demobilisation Directorate, Mr John Shoniwa, stressed yesterday that only former combatants serving with the national army or in assembly points are eligible for demobilisation pay. He was speaking as hundreds of former ZIPRA members prepared to leave Bulawayo to register for the demobilisation and claim their $185 a month. ZAPU officials said all ex-combatants were entitled to receive the demobilisation payment--$185 a month for two years--regardless of whether they were employed in civilian jobs. Mr Shoniwa denied this. He said all former fighters in civilian jobs could register for the demobilisation fund but that if they wanted the two-year pay-out they would have to rejoin the army, be integrated and them be demobbed. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 4/

ZCTU SUPPORTS SA UNIONISTS--The Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions has pledged moral and material support for trade unions in South Africa. A statement said: "We of the ZCTU cannot sid idly by and witness acts of systematic and brutal treatment of our people with our hands folded." It added that over 150 trade unionists in South Africa had been arrested, detained and deported to the Bantustans in the past few months. "Any attempt to express their grievances openly is dealt with severely, and the network of secret police and informers makes it difficult for open discussion with employers and fellow workers." The statement referred to the treatment of migrant workers in South Africa and said: "There is no doubt at all that the recent decision to deport Zimbabwean migrant workers is a prelude to what is coming." It said that in the face of new legislation against trade union movements, the stand taken by leaders of trade unions who met recently in Cape Town "can only be praiseworthy." The statement urged all Zimbabwean workers to give every possible support to trade unionists in South Africa and added: "The victory of the South African people over apartheid is the victory of African people over apartheid." /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 31 Aug 81 p 3/

BOOST FOR SUGAR--The Zimbabwe and Swaziland sugar industries are to finance jointly a $1,4 million improvement project for a bulk sugar terminal in Maputo, the Zimbabwe Sugar Association said yesterday. The association's general manager, Mr Geoffrey Thomas, said the move followed a breakdown at the terminal earlier this year which resulted in the blocking of export shipments from Swaziland and Zimbabwe. Sources said Zimbabwean sugar earned $63 million in foreign exchange last year and a record production of 370 000 tonnes is forecast for 1981.--Ziana-Reuter /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1/

MALIANGA'S APPOINTMENT--The constitutional validity of Mr Moton Malianga's appointment as deputy minister is in doubt because of a provision in the Constitution which requires all ministers to be members of the House of Assembly or Senate. Mr Malianga was appointed Deputy Minister of Economic Planning and Development in February and in terms of the Constitution should be a member of one of the two Houses. While two legal sources differed yesterday on their interpretation of the Constitution, both maintained that Mr Malianga should be a member of the Senate or Lower House. One source said the Constitution provided for the appointment of a minister who is not in parliament for four months after which he has to be a member of the legislature. The other maintained that no minister could legitimately hold office for any length of time without being a parliamentarian. The Zimbabwe-Rhodesia Constitution permitted the appointment of ministers not in Parliament for four months but it is not certain whether the present one drawn up at Lancaster House provides for this. Mr Malianga was reluctant to clarify his own position yesterday. He simply said: "My authority derives from the Prime Minister." He would not say whether he was receiving his salary from Treasury. He said this question and others posed to him should be referred to Mr Mugabe. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1/

COAL SALES--Wankie coal sales in August totalled 151 641 tonnes. Coke sales were 13 476 tonnes and breeze sales 74 tonnes. The number of working days in the month was 24.--Ziana /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 5/

GOVERNMENT'S INVESTMENT COMMITTEE--The Government has quietly gone ahead with its plans to establish its Foreign Investment Committee to consider external equity participation in locally registered companies. No official announcement has been made on its formation, but it has been in operation for about six weeks. The committee comprises the secretaries of four ministries--Mr Brian Walters (finance), Mr Tom Mswaka (economic planning and development), Mr Christopher Ushewokunze (mines), Dr Mufaro Hove (industry and energy development) and Mr T.B. "Jumbo" Pike, general manager, exchange control, from the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe. It is known that there is a backlog of applications to be considered, but the Ministry of Finance would not divulge how many there are, nor whether any had been rejected or approved. "The committee of officials puts its recommendations to ministers whose decision is final," said a spokesman. The FIC has no formal powers at the moment, but regulations are to be promulgated in due course, she added. /Text/ /Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1/

FOREIGN EXCHANGE SAVINGS--Considerable savings of foreign exchange have resulted from the local manufacture of battery casings by Joseph Lucas CA (Pvt.) Ltd. The company began production four months ago, and has already returned $30 000 in foreign currency allocation to the Reserve Bank. Managing director Mr Bob Reeves said that up to $250 000 a year is spent by the industry on imported materials. Mr Reeves said that until 1974 they used a mixture of asbestos and pitch to manufacture casings, but the asbestos was declared a health hazard. "Modern technology now uses 80 percent coal dust and we had the raw material and the plant but not the expertise," said Mr Reeves. But last year the company hired two technicians from overseas who had the "magic formula." In conjunction with National Tyre Services Ltd, sheets of casing material are processed and current production is 30 000 boxes a year. The firm produces 32 types of battery for a wide range of vehicles, and the name of major buyers is printed on the battery to help prevent theft. Mr Reeves added that the firm hopes to provide casings for the entire local market as well as export to neighbouring countries. The company is about t to launch the Polaris reduced maintenance battery for family cars, and is receiving considerable demand for batteries for electric-powered vehicles. /Text/ /Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1/

SEMINAR ON TECHNOLOGY--The first high technology seminar offered by the University of Zimbabwe's Department of Electrical Engineering, in association with the Computer Society of Zimbabwe, will be held at the university on Saturday. The topics of the papers to be presented were selected to meet the immediate technological demands of Zimbabwe's computer engineering staff. "By providing a seminar and forum for discussions it is hoped that the level of expertise of our engineers will be enhanced, with the university taking the lead in the theoretical aspects of computer design," said Mr Wally Green of the Faculty of Engineering. It is hoped that future seminars will cover other aspects of advanced technology. /Text/ /Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1/

KENYAN TRADE MISSION--A 14-man trade delegation from Kenya arrived in Salisbury yesterday for the second phase of a promotion programme sponsored by the Commonwealth Secretariat. The significance of the visit is underlined by the fact that Mr B.D. Jayal, director of the secretariat's export market development division, is accompanying the delegation headed by Mr M.L. Garg and Mr M. Githiji of the Kenya External Trade Authority. The mission's visit is the culmination of a three-month consultancy programme undertaken by a Salisbury firm, Industrial & Commercial Promotions (Pvt.) Ltd. ICP's managing director, Mr J.C. Theo, said that a detailed report had been submitted of its investigations into the potential of two-way trade between Zimbabwe and Kenya. "At the start of the programme it was anticipated that there would be few areas of potential trade. "However, as the programme progressed we became very optimistic about the potential for Zimbabwean and Kenyan goods in their respective markets," said Mr Theo. "We are pleased to report that over 20 different product categories have already been identified where reciprocal trade could be forthcoming, and it is hoped that the delegation visiting Zimbabwe at the moment will conclude some bood deals." While in Zimbabwe the delegation will be briefed by the Ministry of Trade and Commerce, the Associated Chambers of Commerce, the Confederation of Zimbabwe Industries and the Zimbabwe Promotion Council. /Text/ /Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Sep 81 p 1/

GEC-NRZ CONTRACT--An $8,5 million contract has been won by GEC Telecommunications Limited of England to supply a 300 km communications system for the National Railways of Zimbabwe. The system, which will run from Salisbury to Dabuka, is part of a railway electrification project being carried out by a group of British companies. GEC Telecommunications will coordinate the design, supply and installation of the communications scheme which will include telecommunications cables, mobile radio equipment, communications recording equipment and an eight-hop two GHz microwave radio system which with small capacity carrier-on-cable links will interconnect some 40 stations and sidings into the system. The cable system will be specially screened in order to reduce to an acceptable level any interfering noise voltages and danger voltages induced by the overhead railway electrification wires. The mobile radio equipment will operate in the 450MHz UHG bank and provide communication between the control centre at Dabuka and trains at all points between Salisbury and Dabuka. Communication will also be provided with road and rail maintenance vehicles and with maintenance personnel along the track. Message recording equipment will enable conversations with the control centre to be continuously recorded. The microwave-radio equipment will incorporate standby facilities to protect vital traffic carried by the system which will have an ultimate capacity of 300 speech circuits. The small capacity links will each cater for 12 speech circuits transmitted over trackside cables. In addition to speech, the system will carry data, telegraph, mobile radio control, centralised traffic control and telecontrol (centralised power control) circuits. /Text/ /Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 Aug 81 p 3/

BATTERY PRODUCTION--Chloride Zimbabwe are manufacturing the largest batteries mad in the country. The mammoth 1 800 HG battery used to power Clark forklift trucks at Turnhalls weigh the equivalent of a fully-laden Peugeot 504 and deliver 1 071 amp hours (a normal car battery delivers 50). The Chloride batteries can supply power for a full eight-hour shift on a non-continuous basis and take eight hours to recharge. /Text/ /Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 Aug 81 p 5/

EMIGRATION FIGURES--A grand total of 8 805 people officially emigrated from Zimbabwe between January and May this year, an increase of 3 025 people over the same period in 1980. However, a total immigration was also up during this period. A total of 3 472 people immigrated to Zimbabwe, up from 2 049 the previous year. Of the emigrants, the vast majority, 5 995, went to South Africa, followed by Britain, 704, Kenya, 636, and Australia, 397. Most of the immigrants came from Britain, 1 025, followed by returning Zimbabweans, 907, Zambia, 375, and South Africa, 352. Among the immigrants to Zimbabwe, 2 168 were classified as new, 1 180 as returning, and there were 130 temporary residents. /Text/ /Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 Aug 81 p 1/

PF OFFICIAL QUITS--The Patriotic Front vice-secretary for Central Province, Mr Godfrey Manyararah, has resigned from the party to join ZANU (PF). In a statement yesterday, he appealed to other politicians to abandon their parties and join ZANU (PF) led by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe. Mr Manyararah said ZANU (PF) was a popular party that every peace-loving Zimbabwean should join and support. "We should now unite and work for one goal which creates peace and unity." Mr Manyararah has been a politician since 1957, during the days of the African National Congress. He said people should now forget the past and join the party that was working for the people in the spirit of reconciliation. "I am appealing to all parties to merge and join one organisation which won the elections," Mr Manyararah said. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Sep 81 p 1/

MUGABE'S TOUR--Tomorrow the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, resumes his country-wide "meet the people" tour during which he will be accompanied by cabinet ministers and other Government and party leaders. Announcing this last night, a Government spokesman said the Prime Minister would visit various areas in the Midlands. Mr Mugabe will address two rallies in the Charter district tomorrow and will speak at two more rallies in the Chilimanzi and Belingwe districts on Thursday, the spokesman said. After addressing two rallies in the Gokwe district on Friday, Mr Mugabe will meet civic leaders and party officials from Gwelo, Que Que, Selukwe and Torwood in Gwelo. On Saturday, Mr Mugabe is due to tour the ZISCO works in Que Que before meeting the company management and workers. Later the same day, he will address a rally in Que Que before leaving for Salisbury. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Sep 81 p 1/

NON-ALIGNED MOVEMENT--The Non-Aligned Movement has moved from strength to strength on the platform of right and morality rather than might and domination in international relations, the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Simbarashe Mubengegwi, said last night. Addressing a reception in Salisbury to mark the 20th Anniversary of the founding of the movement, he said that by championing the genuine aspirations of people everywhere, the movement had acquired moral authority which could not be ignored. The movement had also made significant contributions to the maintenance of peace and the promotion of independence for the past 20 years. On the future of the movement, the deputy minister said the priority was to maintain unity among member states. The question of redistribution of wealth would continue to dominate the international scene. "There can be no moral justification for 25 percent of humanity to control 80 percent of the world income, leaving the remainder to 75 percent of humanity. "It is this basic contradiction that the movement should address itself to in the eighties." It was also "morally indefensible for human resources to be ploughed into the weapons of human destruction, when 35 percent of mankind has no medical facilities, 25 percent is grossly undernourished, 20 percent is completely illiterate and 20 percent is without decent housing." /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Sep 81 p 1/

MAPUTO ORDERS POTATOES--Bulawayo--Zimbabwe is growing a special seed potato crop to meet an export order from Mozambique, said the manager of the country's sole supplier of certified seed. The order--for delivery in April, May and June next year--would not affect seed supplies to Zimbabwean growers, said Mr J.W. Gurr of the Seed Potato Co-op in Salisbury. Shortages of seed for sowing at home were due to the reluctance by Mashonaland seedsmen to risk growing frost prone crops during the Zimbabwean winter, he added. Mr Gurr said in addition to releasing the bulk of seeds for home growers in Sepgember/October, they would soon introduce two new certifiable varieties developed in Inyanga. Amethyst and Emerald--the new types--are said to be more resistant to late potato blight and are both long-term growers. In fact they are the first domestically-produced commercial hybrid seeds to be introduced in the country for some time. The last was marketed about three years ago. The new seeds will have been tested for more than six years before release. Mozambique has ordered 110 000 pockets of seed at 20 kg each but, until Zimbabwe growers are geared up to meet the new demand, will get only 40 000 pockets. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Aug 81 p 7/

STRIKE DISPUTE--Striking staff in the Marandellas municipal liquor undertaking returned to work late yesterday afternoon but will consider further action if the sacking of a colleague is not satisfactorily explained or reversed. The vice-chairman of the workers' committee for the liquor undertaking, Mr Alfred Madamombe, said the barmen, their assistants, municipal police, supervisors and waitresses went on strike yesterday morning over the summary dismissal of a barman on Friday. "The industrial relations people came down and we discussed the problem with them," he said yesterday. "We want our fellow man reinstated. They told us they were having a meeting with the town councillors and would come back to us." The sacked man, a supervisor at Chikomo Tavern in Mombotombo, was given his pay in lieu of notice on Friday. A letter from the council read: "The council is very dissatisfied with the manner in which you have discharged your duties and has no alternative but to terminate your services with immediate effect." The Town Clerk, Mr Roy Hamer, declined to comment. /Text/ /Salisbury THE HERALD in English 1 Sep 81 p 5/

ANGOLAN TECHNICAL, SCIENTIFIC CULTURAL AGREEMENTS SIGNED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text] Angola and Tanzania yesterday established a joint commission on Trade and Economic cooperation and signed technical, scientific and cultural agreements after two days of ministerial level talks.

The Angolan Minister for External Trade, Ndugu Lopo do Nascimento, leading a 13-man delegation to the bilateral talks, said after the signing ceremony in Dar es Salaam yesterday that Angola had indicated the possibility of cooperation in the importation of bicycles, textiles, meat and beans from Tanzania.

Ndugu Nascimento explained that in October this year an Angolan trade delegation would visit Tanzania to discuss products identified for export in the course of the talks.

He said another delegation of oil experts would also visit Tanzania to "continue discussions on the possibility of supplying Tanzania with oil."

Items identified by Tanzania for possible cooperation with Angola include importation of common salt animal feeds, oil seeds, marble, hides and skins, wax, prepared glues, steel sheets and tubes as well as petroleum and petroleum products.

According to the Minister for trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, the list is not exhaustive as the solidarity existing between Tanzania and Angola has no time limit.

Under the economic, technical, scientific, and cultural agreement; exchanges in experiences and personnel would be undertaken and where necessary relevant information on technical matters would also be made available.

The Joint Commission, an umbrella agreement supervising the other two agreements and any new ones that might arise, consists of a permanent structure whereby the two countries would be able to identify further areas of cooperation and methods of achieving this.

In the joint commission agreement it has been agreed that the commission meet once a year while subcommissions on the identified areas of cooperation would meet more frequently to deliberate and prepare the agenda for the annual joint commission.

Composition of the commission would be established at a later date but in practice the commissions are headed by ministers of participating countries.

Asked on the possibility of establishing a barter system of trade between the two countries the ministers said this would be worked in the course of implementing the agreement because the just signed agreements were self-perpetuating.

On possible constraints in the implementation of the agreements, Ndugu Nascimento said the question of transport snags was discussed during the talks and common solutions would be sought.

Ndugu Nascimento said in the first agreement ships ferrying Angolan goods to and from India and Pakistan would stop over at Dar es Salaam port to unload and load goods exchanged between the two countries.

PARIS RADIO CORRESPONDENT VIEWS SITUATION IN CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

LD031810 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 3 Sep 81

[Interview with Alain Menargues, Paris Radio's special correspondent to the Central African Republic, by unidentified radio announcer on 3 September--recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] The first question, of course, is how does Bangui, the capital, look 2 days after the coup d'etat? It is said that all is more or less calm. Is this true?

[Answer] (?Yes, of course) all is calm and if it were not for the few soldiers who are at the intersections and the military marches broadcast by the radio, nobody would have any idea that Bangui had a coup d'etat 48 hours ago. For example, the market, the big market in Bangui, lives to the rhythms of [words indistinct] and really that is the only thing which allows one to feel the important presence of the military.

[Question] Tell us about the new strongman in power and his team, which after all, he put into authority very, very quickly.

[Answer] The general is of average height and rather strongly built. He is 45 years old. He shows a face of gentle good humor. He has just presented his full government: generals, colonels, lieutenant-colonels and captains. They were all [words indistinct] camouflaged and the tasks are parceled out equally to each one of them. He was a student of Bigeard [Gen Marcel Bigeard]. He was trained under Bigeard and he has retained exactly the same way of speaking. (?He affirms that) these are soldiers who do not want to influence politics but who want to set the country on its feet again in order to enable the civilians--he wishes this--to take back power. But when would this happen, in a year's time, in 18 months? It all depends on the social and economic situation.

[Question] Now, Alain Menargues, vis-a-vis the population of the Central African Republic, what are the reasons put forward by General Kolingba to explain, to justify this coup d'etat?

[Answer] Well, listen, he told me just now that it was the population which pushed him. In fact--and this is what happened--Ange Patasse, one of the leaders of the opposition, came back last Sunday from Brazzaville where he was [words indistinct] by about 5,000-6,000 people who acclaimed him and who followed him in a procession to the center of the town. On the 14th of September, in fact, a big demonstration, a big political rally had been envisaged. We are of the impression here that it was precisely in order to put an end to pressure by the opposition that the soldiers have taken power.

[Question] Well, we now come to what one might call the domestic kitchen. It is said that former President Dacko had in reality more or less negotiated his departure with the new strongman, General Kolingba, in other words that he was more or less pushed out. What is the truth in all this?

[Answer] [Words indistinct] that this is absolutely correct. You know, that in 1980 there was a certain euphoria here. And this euphoria was followed by an anxiety provoked by the indecision and the weakness of Dacko, who was not very much liked, because he was [words indistinct] because the economic situation was bad. Dacko knew very well that he could not rectify the situation. You remember the attack of 14 July, that bomb in a cinema which claimed three lives. Dacko was not able to take matters in hand again. You remember that already by the 14th of July he had to resort to the army; he, who had promised to be a good president. It seems that he was preparing his exit. As you can see, he is, above all, ill.

[Question] One last question, Alain Menargues. It is being said that there are Americans behind this gentle coup. From what you have learned there, as a Paris Radio special correspondent to the Central African Republic, are there Americans more or less pulling the strings? Yes or no?

[Answer] The new president has just told us that he has had no contact with the Americans. (?Seen from) closer quarters the Americans already have economic interests and have a massive concentration of oil exploration going on here. Have they found any oil? That, of course, we do not know. There is also a Libyan presence in the north of the country. The Libyans had already tried in Bokassa's time to open up a front here in Bangui.

Are the Americans really present here, have they been seen? Here at the American Embassy discretion rules the day, of course. The Central African officials are denying such information most vigorously. That is where things are at the moment, speculation. The officials here are saying that these are speculations which emanate from French journalists.

CALL FOR FREE ELECTIONS--A CAR opposition party based in Brussels today called for free and democratic elections to be held in that country, in the wake of the bloodless army coup 2 days ago. The opposition group, called the Movement for the Liberation of the Central African people, said in a communique that it was satisfied with the resignation of former President David Dacko, who was ousted by Army Chief of Staff Andre Kolingba. The statement added that in view of the political tension in the republic, the army remains one of the reasonable alternatives to ensure a transition. The communique said the army should soon hand over power through elections supervised by the OAU and the United Nations. General Kolingba has suspended the constitution and all political parties, but has said that elections could be held in the next few weeks. REPORTED KIDNAPPINGS, ASSASSINATIONS--Paris (AFP)--The National Patriotic Movement (MPN) of Chad, hostile to the Libyan presence in Chad, has accused President Goukouni Oueddei's People's Armed Forces of kidnapping and assassination in Ndjamena. In a communique which reached Paris yesterday, the MPN's secretary general, Col Doungous Kimton, stated that several teachers at the Felix Eboue school were arrested in July and are "now believed missing." The communique also reported the assassination of Lieutenant Alladoum on 12 July, which it said brings to 3 "the number of Chadian Armed Forces (FAT) officers killed in the Chadian capital since January 1981." According to the MPN, Mr Abdoulaye Adoum Dana, chief of FROLINAT-Volcan and former minister of transportation, was also the target of an assassination attempt. The communique also reported the assassination of the prefect of Lai (Tandjile), Mr Nimane, whose body, it added, has just been found. "A commando unit has just been set up with the blessing of the Libyans in order to eliminate both government officials and ordinary citizens considered suspect," the MPN communique added and denounced Libyan operations which it said are aimed at eliminating the entire Chadian elite. REGION CONTROLLED--Geneina, East Sudan, 6 Sep (SUNA)--The North Forces of Chadian former Minister of Defense Hissein Habre had succeeded yesterday to control the region of "Guereda" 45 km northeast Geneina town in the western Sudanese borders with Chad. This region had been under the control of pro-Libyan forces of Acyl Ahmat. Hissein Habre's forces had been involved in bloody clashes with Acyl Ahmat men and Libyan forces in order to set free the region. [Text] [JN061849 Khartoum SUNA in English 1735 GMT 6 Sep 81]

GOVERNMENT DENIES DEFENSE PACT--Moroni, August 13--The Government of the Comoro Islands has denied claims by an opposition movement-in-exile that it signed a defense pact with South Africa and that 170 mercenaries from Belgium were integrated into the islands' security forces last month. Comoran Foreign Minister Ali Mroudjae called the allegations yesterday "lies," and added: "The whole world knows that the Government in Moroni has signed defense accords only with France--in November, 1978. South Africa has also denied the claim about a defense agreement, made in Paris by the National Front-Union of Komorans. The group also said that the "mercenaries" had arrived in the archipelago off the East African coast "posing as tourists" on July 27. (A.F.P.) SENEGAL ASSIGNS GUARDS TO PROTECT JAWARA

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2822, 25 Aug 81 p 17

[Text] Banjul, August 23--Senegal has put about 50 presidential guards and security agents at Gambian President Sir Dawda Jawara's disposition as a result of the July 30 coup attempt in Gambia, a narrow enclave bordered on three sides by Senegal.

The move is part of a plan announced by the Gambian Head of State to combine the two countries' armed forces and security services. He also recently proposed creating a Gambian-Senegalese confederation.

The Senegalese guards were presented to President Jawara on Saturday, well-informed sources said.

Senegalese soldiers--who put down the attempted coup--have already started training their Gambian counterparts in traffic control, searching cars and military drill, the sources said.

Meanwhile President Jawara, who yesterday started a four-day trip to the interior to discuss the confederation project and test the mood of rural communities, has uncapped a senior traditional chief indirectly implicated in the July 30 bid, the Ministry of Local Administration announced in a statement today.

The chief was named as Sanjali Bajan, traditional ruler of Kombo central district on the Kombo Peninsular near here, one of the areas where the rebels tried to hide after the intervention of Senegalese troops.

Chief Bajan, a well-known orator, was captured by the plotters and later broadcast an appeal over Radio Gambia--which was in rebel hands--for people to support the short-lived Supreme Council of the Revolution and demand the withdrawal of Senegalese forces.

Last week saw the resignation of Education Minister Dembo Jatta, who made a broadcast in similar conditions. (A.F.P.)

DISCUSSION CONTINUES ON MINORITY PARTIES' MERGER

Minority Parties Rally

AB310803 Accra Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 31 Aug 81

[Text] The merged minority parties have held a rally at Sunyani as part of their nationwide tour to present themselves to the electorate as a group. Explaining the philosophy behind the merger, the leader of the Third Force Party, Dr Bilson, said the precarious socioeconomic position of the country leaves no room for the pursuance of individual ambitions. In view of this, the minority parties and their leaders have decided to bury their individual ambitions and make the salvation of the country their paramount concern.

The leader of the ACP [Action Congress Party], Col Bernasko, called on the government to meet the demands of farmers half-way, as neglecting them will be equal to killing the hen that lays the golden egg. On his part, the leader of the PFP [Popular Front Party], Mr Victor Owusu, told the people not to give in to the politicians' propaganda going on in certain circles that the merger will result in the abolition of the Brong Ahafo region. He made it clear that the region exists by virtue of an entrenched clause in the constitution.

Alhaji Iddrisu Mahama, leader of the SDF [Social Democratic Front], described the country's present situation as one without direction. He said Ghana was a pace setter in Africa and, in order to regain that position, the electorate must vote the merged parties into power at the next general elections. The MP for Saltpond and a leading member of the UNC [United National Convention], Dr Agama, urged the people to vote for the merged parties in order to get a clearer direction for the country.

SDF Merger Plans

AB040830 Accra Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 4 Sep 81

[Text] The Social Democratic Front [SDF] has said that it is going ahead with negotiations with the other minority parties with a view to forming one party. In a statement issued by the secretary general, K.B. Asante, the SDF referred to an article in an Accra daily that the Trades Union Congress, TUC, has threatened to withdraw from the SDF if it goes ahead with the merger.

He said no new situation has arisen as a result of that publication and that a meeting would soon be held between the national executive of the TUC and the SDF to consider the issue.

Meanwhile, a veteran trade unionist, Alex Hamah, has said the threat by the TUC to withdraw its support for the SDF can be described as progressive or reactionary. He explained that the decision is progressive only if it means that the TUC will completely withdraw from active partisan politics and it is reactionary if it means that the congress will decide to be associated or identified with a particular party. Mr Hamah said should this be the case there is going to be a lot of confusion on the labor front.

APPEAL TO GOVERNMENT, PEOPLE FOR SUCCESSFUL CENSUS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 11 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] THE Population Census of Ghana has come a long way through difficulties to the stage that it has reached now. The last census we had in this country was in 1960 and, by international requirements, the next one should have been in 1970 but this was not possible due to unforeseen circumstances.

The current one should have been held in 1980 but again there were problems. This time, it wasn't only financial. The mass exodus of personnel had badly affected the Central Bureau of Statistics of which the Census Office is a part.

The repercussions of this two-decade lag, though readily imperceptible, have not augured well for the economy.

The economy appears to have lost track of the way social development, which is a necessary basis for economic development, has gone.

Certainly, the population of this country has increased but by how much, nobody knows. All the figures that have been given have all been guesses which are officially clothed as "Estimates". The age and gender compositions have altered. The geographical distribution is very different from what it was twenty years ago as evidenced by the pressure on urban and city facilities and services.

It is therefore no wonder that successive governments have not succeeded in apportioning the 'national cake' equitably.

This stresses the importance of keeping constant and up-to-date checks on population dynamics for economic, political and social development. For example it is only a population census that can tell us more accurately what size the voting population is.

Better late than never, the 'Graphic' welcomes the population census with its trial scheme starting on the 17th of this month.

Like the Voters' registration exercise, there has not been much publicity about the Census or its pilot scheme and we would take this opportunity to caution the Government Statistician to ensure that the programme achieves success.

We know the mentality of people in this country to the counting of human beings. There are all sorts of unfounded interpretations given to such an exercise and the consequent possible unco-operative attitude, particularly of the rural folk.

It is therefore very important that enough advertisement is made of the exercise.

We also hope that the Government Statistician should have learnt a lot from the experience of the Electoral Commissioner. We refer to such happenings as shortage of stationery, absenteeism by the staff and apathy on the part of the people for whom the exercise is carried out.

The 'Graphic' wishes to take this opportunity to call on the political parties to use their platforms in educating their followers about the population census and its benefits.

U.S. NEUTRON BOMB PRODUCTION DECISION SCORED

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 13 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text] Following the American Government's decision to start production of the neutron bomb, French Defence Minister Charles Hernu tactfully revealed in Paris that the Soviet Union, too, has tested a neutron bomb.

So both superpowers possess the technology, with the difference being that only the United States has so far decided to produce the neutron bomb for military deployment.

The French position indicates that other powers than the superpowers possess the capability to produce the bomb, and that the only way to avoid its proliferation is to propose to them a "progressive disarmament policy."

Two important factors make the manufacture and deployment of the neutron bomb a questionable proposition. Firstly, it can only increase the tempo of the armament race. Secondly, it goes counter to the principle of deterrent which has been used as the justification of nuclear armament.

The production of the bomb will worsen the arms race, because President Brezhnev told President Carter before that if the US does not produce the neutron weapon, the USSR will not. The inference is that since the United States has decided to produce it, the Soviet Union will produce it, too.

Seen against the principle of deterrence, the production of the neutron bomb is also illogical. This principle is based on the belief that since the nuclear bomb is so destructive and no nuclear power can escape being destroyed by it, none of them would dare to start a nuclear war.

Inflation

But the neutron bomb seems to fall without this deterrent principle, for two main reasons. In the first place, it is thought of as a "tactical theatre weapon"--that is, its effect can be limited to a specified area--and the duration of its radio-active fall-out is calculated to be far shorter than that of the nuclear bomb.

These factors have apparently led some military strategists to hold that the neutron bomb is not as dangerous as its opponents portray it. It is obvious, then, that its possessors would probably use it more readily than they would the atomic bomb.

In the second place, the American Government has tried for some time now to convince its NATO allies that the main or immediate thrust of the neutron bomb should be to counter-balance Soviet tank superiority in Europe.

The implication is that in the event of even a conventional war with the WARSAW forces in Europe, the NATO forces might use the neutron bomb. This simple tactical-advantage concept of the neutron bomb has no place in the grand deterrent design. Moreover, such use of the neutron bomb against a non-possessor of it will most certainly draw out a nuclear weapon response in a state of desperation.

We must face the truth that the high-radiation neutron weapon is no less destructive than the nuclear bomb. The only difference is that it destroys human beings but leaves buildings and other structures intact; its radio-active effect also lasts about five years against 30 years for the nuclear bomb.

But imagine a neutron bomb attack on Accra: Every human being will perish but all buildings will remain intact. An atomic bomb will destroy human beings and buildings alike. The loss of life is equal in both cases! That is the point.

Looking at the issue from all angles, the decision to produce the neutron bomb is going to give no advantage to anyone; it could only amount to war-mongering that would worsen the current world inflation just as the arms race which started in the early sixties created the inflation.

ALARM SOUNDED AT DANGEROUS LEVEL OF LAWLESSNESS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 10 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by F.N.K. Amoako]

[Text]

THE lawlessness that seems to be rapidly engulfing the whole country is gradually growing out of proportion, and if allowed to go unchecked it will soon be unsafe to live in the country.

Crime is not peculiar to Ghana. But here it is on the ascendency and if statistics are anything to go by then we are yet to see more to come.

The situation in Kumasi is so alarming that the police has advised people not to carry large sums of money on them. People in Tema fear to go out at night because the thugs are always on the move. The situation is alarming at the port.

All over the country people seem to take the law into their own hands. One pertinent example is the construction of "feeder" roads to the Accra-Tema Motorway. Very soon the Motorway will cease to serve its true function as an express carriageway between the two towns. Most of these sub-roads are constructed from Ashaiman, an urban slum near Tema.

If this is allowed to continue the implications are obvious. It can lead to frequent accidents on the Motorway. Thugs can enter the Motorway by this route and erect blockades with their cars with the intention of robbing passing cars. There will be loss of revenue to the Government because these people do not pay tolls levied at the main entrance of the Motorway.

Soon people who cannot afford the toll will just use these sub-roads. Indeed gradually our Motorway is becoming a junction. Ghanaians generally oppose change, therefore if this practice is allowed to take root, it will be difficult to stamp out, notwithstanding that it is wrong. The Police seem helpless in the face of all these because they operate with obsolete equipment.

The situation in the capital is no better. It is common knowledge that people do not bother to report certain categories of crimes because it is most likely that practically nothing can be done about it. For example, stealing of car batteries and armed attacks on people.

This leads invariably to another phenomenon which is catching on fast in Ghana; mob-justice. People suspected of crimes are just burnt without police intervention.

This lawlessness has permeated the very fabric of the Ghanaian society. It is an open secret that workers do not spend more than two hours at work after signing-in their names at government work places. More often than not the person whose responsibility is to see that they remain at post is himself away on 'business'.

Even Parliament seem to have their share of this. There is no gainsaying the fact that the absence of MPs of the majority party on the day of the discussion of the budget statement led to its defeat. What beats the imagination of most people is that the business to be discussed is known forehand. Why the apathy then? Members of the majority party who absented themselves that day should realise that they were ultimately responsible for the presentation of a new budget.

One trouble with problem-solving in this country is that successive Governments have favoured ad-hoc solutions to our problems.

At the root of these problems lies the socio-economic condition of the nation. Each year the trade schools and universities turn out school leavers who must get jobs, which unfortunately are non-existent. What compounds this is that the precarious foreign exchange position of the nation is forcing factories to produce under-capacity, which is steadily leading to redundancy. Thus it seems useless to urge people who have left Ghana for other countries to return home.

In the short-term people who are idling should be mobilised into a strong work force capable of undertaking large scale agriculture. We abound in resources for this purpose.

The measures needed to rectify this in the long-term will be more difficult to implement because they are inter-dependent on a host of other factors. More job openings will have to be created to absorb school leavers. But this is dependent on the general improvement in economic conditions, because even the existing factories are under-utilised.

It is not being suggested that with the successful implementation of these measures lawlessness will completely cease. However, the urge to turn to crime will be less.

The Police must also be a modern efficient outfit capable of combating crime in this country. Corruption must be eradicated from the service. Only dedicated policemen can do what is expected of them. We only hope the gloomy picture will not be with us for long.

PLEA FOR BETTER TREATMENT OF STATE FARMS CORPORATION

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 20 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial: "State Farms in Anguish"]

[Text] It seems that the Ministry of Agriculture has not yet completely made up its mind about the State Farms Corporation--whether it should live or die.

The apparent indecision could be due to a conflict of appraisal between what the corporation is and what it can or should be.

To many analysts, however, the potential role of the corporation in the country's economic future is certain. They are convinced that to jeopardize the corporation's development would be a serious economic misjudgment.

It is, therefore, unfortunate to see the State Farms Corporation being treated as if it does not matter. Right now, its 12,000 employees have not been paid for the last three months.

The corporation itself is not in a position now to pay its way out, including the workers' salaries, without Government subvention--and it has told the Government so for reasons that look genuine.

In the first place, about 75% of the corporation's investment has gone into plantation crops which have a gestation period of several years. So no profit can be expected from the majority of its farms for a long time. The crops include vast plantations of oil palm, coconut, citrus, cola, rubber and cashew.

In the second place, the corporation's 22,000-acre rubber plantation which should have been supporting its operations today was sold to Firestone in 1969 without any compensation to the corporation! The corporation had spent ¢5 million to establish that vast plantation which was worth about ¢30 million by 1969.

In the third place, the funds coming from the Government to the corporation have been in the form of loans, whose repayment has made it impossible for the corporation to build up its own capital fund.

Subvention

So the corporation must live on Government subvention until 1985 when enough of its crops would be producing to enable it to stand on its own feet.

A look at the corporation's production targets and what has actually been cultivated shows that it has a promising future. At least a local bank which does not give agriculture loans was so impressed after inspecting the corporation's projects that it readily gave it a substantial loan.

Most international financial institutions usually allow long grace periods for repaying loans for agriculture because they recognize that agricultural investment is normally a long-term affair.

So it is not a very strong point to abandon a massive agricultural organization like the State Farms Corporation for not paying its way out too soon. In this regard, those who care enough should examine private agricultural projects of the corporation's type to realize that profits don't begin to flow too soon for the private owners, either.

The Ministry should get the corporation's workers paid without further delay because there is no point in the delay. At the moment, because they have not been paid, many of the plantation workers are said, to have deserted the farms, leaving young crops untended. In addition, many of them steal fruits like palm nuts and sell them to keep their families going.

Now, since the workers are going to be paid in the long run, why not pay them now so that they would return to work to save the crops from destruction?

And what does the Eastern Regional Minister mean by saying that the Regional Administration has taken over the corporation's oil palm plantation at Okumaning? Is that a reflection of how simple the Ministry's attitude to the corporation is when agriculture is a priority national programme?

The Government should do something quickly about the corporation's problems to prevent the destruction of this vital economic asset.

GUNSA ADVOCATES INCREASED NATIONALIZATION OF LANDS

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 8 Aug 81 p 5

[Article by Samuel Annobil]

[Text]

THE Ghana United Nations Students and Youth Association has called on the Government to initiate steps to nationalize a greater percentage of land in the country. Only a token percentage should be left for the chiefs and other land owners.

In a communique issued at the end of its 18th annual convention at Cape Coast last week-end, the association regretted the near disaster committed in the north by one ethnic group against another, and drew attention to the damage being done to our image abroad by such disgraceful events.

It implored the Government to delve deeper into the root causes of the northern conflict with a view to restoring the hitherto cordial relations between the peoples concerned.

The GUNSA also called on the Government to embark on massive establishment of rural industries with the aim of developing small-scale industries to process some of the major exports, especially cocoa, and to stimulate their local consumption.

Signed by the association's president, Nii Laryea Browne, the communique reiterated the call on the banks and other financial institutions to consider increasing their financial and material aid to co-operative limits in the rural areas as well as to serious and committed farmers; not the absentee farmer.

It viewed with dismay the deteriorating standard of medical care in the country and expressed its belief that the institution of a comprehensive health insurance scheme would aid in promoting the health of Ghanaians.

COURT RULES IN FAVOR OF CPT TSIKATA IN HARRASSMENT SUIT

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 5 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Awudu Ali]

[Text]

MR Justice Roger Korsah, sitting at an Accra High Court, yesterday ordered the State security agencies to leave Captain Kojo Tsikata (rtd) alone because he was entitled to the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual as enshrined in the Constitution.

The court made it clear that until it was given compelling reasons which had provoked the constant, continuous and naked shadowing of Capt. Tsikata, it could not sanction such a practice, he said.

The security agencies of the country, the judge said, must act within the parameters defined by the laws of the land because it was to them that the individual looked up to for the protection of his rights and liberties.

Mr. Justice Korsah was giving judgment in the case in which Captain Tsikata was seeking the court's relief to perpetually restrain agents of the Military Intelligence from the harassment and inhuman treatment being meted out to him.

The plaintiff also sought damages for unlawful interference with his fundamental human and constitutional rights to life, liberty and privacy.

Stating reasons for its decision, the judge said even though the court could not restrain the security agents from carrying out their official duties, the terms of their appointment did not confer on them the authority to violate the laws of the land.

In finding out wrong-doers, the court advised that a balance must be kept between freedom and security since the personal freedom of a law-abiding citizen would avail him nothing unless it was matched with the peace and good order of the community in which he resided.

It was wrong the court stated, for a police officer or any other person to be sent to commit an offence in order to prove that another person had committed an offence.

On the other hand, the court noted, if the security agencies should be effective, they must be left free to take appropriate action as and when the occasion demanded.

For these reasons, it did not think it proper to grant the remedy of perpetual injunction sought by Capt. Tsikata.

To grant the remedy, would mean that the security agents would not be able to act without flouting its orders, if Capt. Tsikata were ever minded to endanger the security of the State.

In the circumstances, perpetual injunction would be inappropriate it said but noted that Capt. Tsikata was entitled to a declaration that he was entitled to the enjoyment of the fundamental rights and freedoms assured the individual under the Constitution.

The judge hoped [illegible] of the security agencies would curb the excessive zeal of their men and make sure that they worked within the framework of the laws of the land.

The court [illegible] ¢500 damages against each of the 18 security agents for libelling Capt. Tsikata.

A further ¢3,000 cost was awarded in the Captain's favour. He was represented by Mr. Tsatsu Tsikata whilst Mr. J. Zwennes, a Senior State Attorney, defended the State.

PRIVATE AIR COURIER SERVICE LAUNCHED

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 11 Aug 81 p 5

[Text] An international air courier service which will help promote industry and commerce in the country has been formally launched in Accra.

The main feature of the service being run by IML SKY-SERVICES (GHANA) LIMITED, a branch of the London-based IML SKYSERVICES GROUP, is to provide effective business communication system, and among others, help sell Ghana's industry and commerce and also attract investors to the country.

Through its in-built systems of skydata, skypacket and skycourier, all types of sensitive documents, essential spare parts for industrial machines and agricultural tools as well as vehicular parts could easily be carried by the IML's desk-to-desk operations.

Speaking at the ceremony, Mr Appiah-Mensah, president of the Ghana Manufacturers Association, appealed to the Government to give the necessary encouragement and support to private industries in Ghana.

He expressed fears that the whole economy might collapse soon unless the Government took immediate steps to encourage private participation in the country's economic programme.

He congratulated the management of the company for coming to Ghana and hoped that the Ghanaian businessmen would patronize their services.

Mr D. A. Kumi, president of the Ghana Chamber of Commerce, said the main aim of setting up the company was to improve communication in the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), to help increase the volume of trade on the sub-region and said that "once we have these services here we do not have to isolate those in the other West African States."

Launching the courier service, Mr John Salmon, IML's overseas director, said "this world-wide courier service is a real boom to businessmen, many of whom might have lost valuable opportunities because they were relying on the conventional mail and telecommunication system" Present at the ceremony were Baffour O. Gyewu, Member of Parliament for Techiman and managing director of Inter Tours and Cargo Services and Mr S. H. Amancy, an Accra legal practitioner, who is also chairman of the Board of Directors of the IML SKYSERVICES (GHANA) LIMITED.

BRIEFS

PARTICIPATION IN HAVANA CONFERENCE--Ghana is among about 90 countries which will attend the 68th inter-parliamentary union conference due to be held in Havana, Cuba, next month. In all about 1,200 delegates and observers will be present. The conference is expected to discuss a proposal by the Chairman of the Non-aligned Movement, Dr Fidel Castro, on economic issues facing the developing countries. The proposal, first made by President Castro at the United Nations General Assembly, is contained in a draft resolution adopted unanimously by the Commission for the study of economic and social issues at the meeting of the inter-parliamentary council which has just ended in Manila. The document also observed with satisfaction, the proposal made by President Saddam Hussein of Iraq, that the petroleum producing countries and the group of industrialized countries create a common fund for energy and development. The text mentioned "that the contributions will be proportional to the hike in oil prices and to the inflation exported by the industrialized countries." It also contained the proposal of Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo for putting into practice a world plan as well as that of some members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries--for creating an institution for the development of the Third World. FILM, TV INSTITUTE DELEGATION--A four-member delegation of the National Film and Television Institute (NAFTI) has returned to Accra after attending the International Students Film meeting and Television Schools (CILECT) in Karlovy Vary, Czechoslovakia. The delegation, led by Mr Martin Loh, head of the Production Department, comprise three students, Miss Joyce Amoah, editing, Mr Seth Ashong-Katai, script writing and Mr Oti Sarpong, television production. The meeting, which is held in a different country every two years, was hosted for the second consecutive time by the Academy of Film and Television Arts of the University of Prague. It is hoped that NAFTI, an associate member of CILECT, and the only film and television school in Black Africa, will have the honour to host the meeting in the near future. This is the first time that Black Africa was represented at the meeting which took place from July 3 to 8. Two NAFTI film productions were selected after the meeting and will be shown at pre-information viewing at the Venice Film Festival in September, 1981, as part of official contribution of CILECT. NAFTI is supported by the Friedrick Ebert Foundation of West Germany, which provides equipment, raw stock and advice. [Excerpt] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 14 Aug 81 p 3]

MERGER'S INTERIM COMMITTEES--Interim working committees comprising various chairmen and secretaries of the merged minority parties have been formed to coordinate and strengthen the political field work towards the success of the proposed merger. This means that all party post holders at regional, district, constituency and ward levels will now constitute themselves into an interim organization. The committees will have the power to co-opt such persons they deem fit to assist the merger group in the discharge of all responsibilities. A statement issued after a meeting by the leaders of the minority parties in Accra yesterday said every thing possible was being done to bring the merger into reality in order to prove "the critics and the prophets of doom wrong." "In the not too distant future, all matters antecedent to the registration of a new political party would have been decided, the statement said. All party officers have therefore, been urged to take appropriate action to see to the implementation of the decision without delay. It called on all those concerned to submit the names of the interim committees to the interim national secretariat immediately. [Text] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 19 Aug 81 p 8]

RELIGIOUS STRIFE--The Christ Preachers Church based at Accra New Town, has appealed to Muslim leaders to educate their members to respect the constitutional rights of other citizens so as to ensure peace and tranquility in the country. The appeal was made at a press conference organized in Accra yesterday by the leaders of the church under the theme, "The need for religious tolerance in Ghana." Prophet Paul, founder of the church, said very serious acts, being pursued by Islamic believers, if not checked immediately, might lead to a big confrontation between believers of the Bible and those of the Quoran. He alleged that Muslims and Ahmaddiyas were attacking members of the church and causing extensive damage to their property at Accra New Town and Koforidua. GUNSA NEUTRON BOMB CONDEMNATION--The Ghana United Nations Student and Youth Association (GUNSA) has called on the Government and the people of Ghana as well as all peace-loving countries and peoples to condemn without reservation the United States decision to produce and stockpile the neutron bomb. The association also appealed to the international community to step up its campaign for general and complete disarmament to save humanity from another global conflagration. In a press statement issued on Monday and signed by its national coordinator, Mr Ekow Gaisie, the association said it could not accept any excuse for the continuing production and stock-piling of an extremely expensive and lethal weapon of mass destruction in a world that had twice witnessed the horrors of war. The decision by the Reagan Administration to produce and stock-pile the neutron bomb has come as a surprise to all peace-loving peoples of the world in which millions of its peoples are deprived of the means of a livelihood and any form of resistance against disease and hunger, the statement added. BONUS TO COCOA FARMERS--The Cocoa Marketing Board has approved a bonus of ¢1.5 million to be paid to cocoa farmers, throughout the country on their produce during the 1980-81 cocoa season. Announcing this at a farmers' rally at Breman Asikuma on Thursday, Mr Yiadom Ohene Boakye, chief manager of the Produce Buying Division (PBD), said that the gesture was in appreciation of the hard work of farmers and also an incentive to them to work harder. Mr Ohene Boakye warned that any official of the PBD who would be caught misapplying the bonus would be summarily dismissed. To ensure that the moneys reached individual farmers, the PBD, he said had directed that the seven-man committee of every society in the cocoa producing areas should be responsible for administering the bonus. He said that anyone who felt he could enrich himself at the expense of the country should be ready for the most drastic measures, warning that "there was no compromise on this." The PBD boss assured the farmers that the Government was aware of all their problems and would do everything possible to help them. [Text] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 8 Aug 81 p 1]

NATIONAL PETROLEUM COMPANY--The government is to set up a national petroleum company by the middle of next year to be in charge of licensing, exploration, refining and the distribution of petroleum products. Opening a seminar for petroleum inspectors in Accra today, the deputy minister of fuel and power, Mr Canteh, said the company would serve as a focal point for all oil activities in Ghana. It would also be in charge of the petroleum inspectorate division of the ministry. The minister told the inspectors that the inspectorate division is a very sensitive one and he would not hestiate to dismiss and prosecute anyone who colluded with petrol attendants, managers and tanker drivers to cheat the nation. He asked them to check adulteration and strictly enforce the ban on the sale of petrol in jerry cans. Mr Canteh also asked them to deal with attendants who refuse to sell the product. He advised them to make every effort to end hoarding of petroleum products by distributors and sellers and to check illegal export. DEFENSE MINISTER PRAISES U.S. MILITARY MISSION

AB282058 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 1900 GMT 28 Aug 81

[Text] Defense Minister Maj Gen Albert E. S. Karpeh has commended the U.S. military mission to Liberia for its invaluable contributions toward improving the standards of the Liberian armed forces.

He said for the past 30 years, since the establishment of the mission in Liberia, it has provided the necessary training facilities for Liberian soldiers both in the country and abroad.

General Karpeh was speaking last night at the Ducor Hotel in Monrovia at a reception marking the 30th anniversary of the U.S. military mission to Liberia. He expressed appreciation to the U.S. Government for the mission's tireless efforts and sacrificial services to improve the armed forces over the years.

Earlier, the chief of the U.S. military mission to Liberia, Col (Shun Mellow), traced the historical events which led to the establishment of the mission in Liberia in the early 1950's. He explained that since the mission was established, [words indistinct] were pointed out to the late President Tubman and Tolbert [words indistinct] became problems for Liberia in the future. Colonel (Mellow) said between 1958 and 1959 several recommendations were made to the Liberian Government which included adequate army barracks for enlisted men and pay increases for all members of the armed forces. He said these recommendations were reemphasized through the years but regrettably they fell on deaf ears until 1980.

Members of the U.S. military mission to Liberia, senior members of the Defense Ministry, and U.S. [title and name indistinct], who was on official 2-day visit in Monrovia, were present at the reception.

ADVICE TO BUSINESSMEN--Vice head of state Maj Gen J. Nicholas Podier has reiterated the government's commitment to protect and safeguard the interests of all business houses in the country. General Podier said the PRC [People's Redemption Council] will not tolerate any of its members interfering in the affairs of foreign investors, but warned that the government will not condone any acts committed by investors that are not in conformity with the Liberian revolution. General Podier was speaking yesterday at the National Investment Commission headquarters in Assouan Street in Monrovia when he addressed businessmen at a 1-day conference sponsored by the NIC [National Investment Commission] for businessmen in Liberia. We believe in free enterprise and not in taking people's business from them, but businessmen should learn to listen to the voice of the people, General Podier emphasized. SA AID ON ETHANOL--South African services, skills and equipment valued at 2.4 million rand will be teamed up for the construction of Malawi's first ethanol plant. The 6.9 million rand factory will be producing ethanol from molasses and the product will be mixed with petrol to make Malawi less dependent on imported petroleum products. The Credit Guarantee Insurance Corporation (Kredietwaarborgversekeringskorporasie) announced the credit insurance of Jager & Vennote, the latter being a South African Company which will direct, administer and coordinate the project. The Industrial Development Corporation (Nywerheidsontwikkelingskorporasi) is making available a 5-year credit to the buyers to help them finance South African participation. Participation consists of delivery and installation of the machinery and equipment and also the delivery of tank trucks. The factory consists of a steam boiler unit, a fermenting plant and also storage and shipping facilities, to be sent from South Africa, as well as distilling equipment from West Germany. It is expected that the plant will be put into operation next year. Initially production will total 5 million liters of ethanol annually. This will save 1.7 million rand in petrol. The plant will be built along a large sugar mill in the Dwanga River Delta. [Text] [Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 Aug 81 p 21] 7964

NEGOTIATIONS ON COMPENSATION OF ILOIS

Faltering Negotiations

Port Louis THE NATION in French 12 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The failure of the London negotiations on the compensation to be paid to the Ilois is the final episode to date in a drama which has lasted far too long.

Rather than falling into further delays, it would be better to see what cards Mauritius can still play before the fateful day when diplomatic relations are broken off with Great Britain.

Future measures can be summed up as follows:

1. Continue its contacts with Great Britain on the diplomatic level.

2. Carry on official negotiations among the Maruitian British and American Governments.

3. Bring before the International Court of Justice an action against the illegal partitioning of the Maruitian territory.

4. Organize a peaceful disembarkment at Diego Garcia.

5. Wage an international campaign on behalf of the Ilois having the theme, "Save the Ilois Exiles."

6. Launch a suit against Britain in the OAU and the United Nations.

7. Boycott the British ships docking at Port Louis.

8. Look for alternative markets for Maruitian sugar from the Arab countries and China.

9. Recall the London high commissioner in Maruitius.

10. Freeze the British assets in Maruitius and unilaterally write off the debts incurred from Great Britain by the Island of Maruitius when it was a colony.

Some of these measures are practical, while others are not. Likewise, the Ilois and their sympathizers will not be helped by attempting a hunger strike on British soil. Such an action would end in a strike to the end, as has been the case with the IRA hunger strikers, from Bobby Sands to MacDonald, at the infamous Maze prison.

All actions tantamount to a break-off of ties with Great Britain would inevitably cause that country to halt the import of Maruitian sugar. The economy of our country would not survive the reprisals, and the people of Maruitius would be doomed to hunger.

The electoral tactics of the opposition, which include casting the blame on Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam for the partitioning of Diego Garcia are becoming a dangerous game. The battle of Diego will be won--or lost--with the complete support of the Maruitian people and the Maruitian Government.

On this subject, it would be useful to recall that, at the time, Dr Ramgoolam had no choice, being the victim of Great Britain's arm-twisting. And he was not the only Maruitian to take part in the London conference dealing with the creation of the BIOT [British Indian Ocean Territory].

Those who claim to have such a clear understanding today would do well to recall that they themselves were faced with a unilateral British decision in return for Mauritius' independence.

Be that as it may, the latest supporters of the Ilois will not bring success to those people's mission alone. At the very most, they would be helping the election campaign of the opposition.

In that event, they should count on its having a boomerang effect.

English Indifference

Port Louis THE NATION in French 13 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] "The attitude of the British delegation has been characterized by its indifference to the human and material problems of the Ilois," James Burty David, president of the Labor Party and member of the official delegation to the negotiations on compensation for the Ilois, told THEN NATION yesterday.

The British delegation remained indifferent throughout the discussions. It held its offer at 1.25 million pounds, adding to that a few crumbs worth 300,000 pounds in the form of aid.

The members of the Maruitian delegation had demanded 8 million pounds, representing compensation to 942 Ilois families. The British, Mr David added, did not come with serious and mathematically sound offers. "In my opinion, their only offer was at the same time ridiculous and arbitrary," Mr David stressed.

During the discussions, the Maruitian delegation corrects the historical act when in 1965, Mr David noted, the British divided up the Diego Garcia Archipelago of the Maruitian territory. "We consider this act by nature immoral and illegal," declared the president of the Labor Party.

The members of the delegation informed the British that Mauritius retains its right of sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago. Because of that, they categorically stated that the Ilois uprooted from Diego Garcia deserve adequate compensation--without being denied their right to the return of Chagos.

Moreover, Mr David termed "a falsehood" the news report which stated that he and Mr Paul Berenger had had a difference of opinion in Paris. Such a piece of news, Mr David added, could only be harmful to the hearings on the Ilois' claim. "I sincerely believe that the Ilois issue must not become a party problem. A claim on a common platform deserves a consensus," Mr David, returning to his country Saturday, stressed.

Return of Diego Garcia

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 21 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] The Island of Maruitius must make the return of the Chagos Islands, especially Diego Garcia, its priority even risking presenting its case before international forums, even the International Court of Justice. This was the opinion expressed yesterday by Mr Kailash Purryag, the minister of social security, on his return from London, where he had headed the delegation of the "support front" to the Ilois during negotiations with representatives of the British Government. Bitter and very disappointed at what he called the "cavalier and negative attitude of the British Government," the minister deplored the fact that the English had made the question of compensation which is first of all a humanitarian one into a money matter.

Mr Purryag maintains that 8 million pounds of additional compensation is amply justified. Recalling his statement prior to the negotiations, Mr Purryag emphasized that the initial compensation of 650,000 pounds was "most inadequate," and, in addition, that this compensation was given to the Maruitian Government only in 1972, whereas the process of eradicating the Ilois had begun in 1965. This compensation, granted "in good faith" by the British Government, was to have been accepted by Prime Minister Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam as "full and final settlement." But, said Mr Purryag, in 1972, the government was not aware of the extent to which this problem could grow. Furthermore, there had not been a census or a psychological preparation of the Ilois people for their new life by the British Government which, at the time, was responsible for the future of the Ilois. The acceptance of that compensation by the prime minister had been, according to Minister Purryag, made in good faith at the time.

Mr Purryag, moreover, emphasized that the surrender of Diego Garcia to the British had been a unilateral decision imposed by the latter upon the then colonial government.

The Maruitian demand, as presented by the delegation, has been relatively modest, said the minister: one house for each Ilois family, 15,000 rupees per family, and a total of 15 million rupees for the creation of a social infrastructure in Maruitius.

The offer of additional compensation of 1.2 million pounds, and the latest offer of 300,000 pounds made by the British Government at these negotiations, clearly fall short of the needs of the Ilois community in Maruitius, Mr Purryag added.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT UNION DELEGATION VISIT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] "Never stop studying, because education is the main tool in building social progress," Mirkaslav Stepan, president of the International of Students [IUS], appealed yesterday in a meeting with students of the Maputo Trade Institute.

In his address, Stepan extended to Mozambican students in general the congratulations of young people from the 118 countries represented in the IUS, for the success they have achieved in building a socialist society in Mozambique and in their struggle against imperialism.

"Your young people are greatly esteemed within the IUS for the important role they have played in the world student movement and in the national movement, in the anti-imperialist struggle, led by the FRELIMO Party. Proof of this esteem was demonstrated in the 13th IUS Congress, held in the GDR, when young Mozambican activists of the OJM [Organization of Mozambican Youth] were nominated for the presidium of the IUS.

Stepan referred to the support which the IUS has given to countries and to young people who struggle aganst domination and exploitation in the world, particularly in Africa. He said his organization is convinced that the union of progressive forces, encouraging the struggle of the peoples of South Africa and Namibia, will certainly destroy apartheid.

In the morning, the president of the IUS met with Fernando Ganhao, dean of Eduardo Mondlane University [UEM]. Ivo Garrido, party secretary at UEM, was also present.

On that occasion Ganhao stressed the interest shown by the world's students in supporting the Mozambican students in the battle for national reconstruction and in the campaign against illiteracy.

The ISU delegation, led by the union president, has been in our country since last Friday, at the invitation of the OJM. It is being escorted by Leonardo Selano Candeiro, vice president of the organization, who is Mozambican.

The delegation visited Zambezia Province 3 days ago and met with young people in the schools and production sectors. In Quelimane, the delegation was received by Oswaldo Tazama, governor of the province.

DETAILS ON OIL EXPLORATION PROVIDED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Antonio Souto]

[Text] Preliminary seismic research operations began recently in a vast maritime area along the coast of Mozambique, in preparation for oil prospecting, to be initiated next year.

The operations are the result of the two contracts signed in late June by Megid Osman, secretary of state for coal and hydrocarbons, with the Norwegian company GECO and Western Geophysical, a U.S. firm.

This month, Western Geophysical will send one of its ships, the "Western African," into Mozambican waters. The GECO ship, the "Geco Delta," should arrive in October. The teams that will follow the operations onshore should arrive even before the ships. These teams will operate mainly in coastal areas where there are lighthouses.

According to the contracts, GECO should carry out 15,000 km of seismic studies from Beira to Rovuma. The U.S. firm will conduct seismic studies from Beira to Maputo.

The ships will cover the length of the coast as defined above (seismic profiles), to draw a geophysical profile of the coast and to identify structures with potential oil reserves. The research will take in the area from the coast to a line of depth not to exceed 2,000 meters. From the coast to depths no greater than 500 meters, the operation will be much more intensive, to obtain a more complete profile.

During the prospecting operations, the ships will detonate small explosives to generate sonar signals. The geophysical structure of the continental shelf will be ascertained by the manner in which these signals are echoed by the ocean floor.

The ships will also tow cables about 3,000 meters long, to which probes will be connected to detect these signals.

The small explosions and the towing of cables of this length will necessitate a short interruption of fishing in the prospecting area. To this end, various government agencies and companies involved in the prospecting are already working with institutions linked to the fishing industry, as well as local authorities, to avert any problems.

Specialists of the SECH [Secretariat of State for Coal and Hydrocarbons] assured our correspondent that neither the signalling explosions nor the towing of large cables will affect the marine life in any way.

During a press conference given by Secretary Osman immediately following the signing of the contracts, in Maputo, it was divulged that the results of the seismic research by the two geophysical firms "are not intended for any particular client, but will be sold openly to the oil companies."

According to information from the SECH, regulations are being drafted, consistent with the needs of this branch of activity, to organize and provide the legal framework for the future activities of the petroleum companies in the prospecting and production of hydrocarbons. Publication of this regulation is expected shortly.

During the press conference in late June, Secretary Osman said the studies were being conducted at the risk of the firms themselves. "If the research proves to be productive, these firms may take away part of the profits from the exploitation of the fields."

COMPLAINTS SHOULD BE ADDRESSED TO CONTROL, DISCIPLINE SECTIONS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] "The offices of Control and Discipline should vitalize their activity and concentrate more on the main aspect of their work, which is liaison between the state apparatus and the people," the program VOZ DA FRELIMO declared yesterday.

The party news organ quoted the most important finding of a meeting held recently in the party's Central Committee headquarters. The meeting was chaired by Maj Gen Jorge Rebelo, secretary of the Central Committee for ideological work, and was attended by officials of the departments of Control and Discipline in the various ministries, as well as representatives of the nation's major news media.

The purpose of the meeting was to analyze issues relating to letters to the news media from readers and listeners. In the course of the meeting, however, it was observed that very few people write to the Discipline and Control departments when, for instance, they have a complaint regarding some government agency.

"Almost always, in these cases, people prefer to go directly or to write to the news media. This is an anomalous situation, since those offices were created specifically to provide this kind of liaison between the state apparatus and the public," VOZ DA FRELIMO noted.

Although people are not expected to stop writing to the news media, the purpose of the meeting was to search for ways to encourage the public to write directly to the departments of Control and Discipline in all cases within their competence, specifically,, those pertaining to arrogance, bureaucratism and negligence.

The departments of Control and Discipline were created by party decision, announced by President Samora Machel at the rally on 18 March 1980.

On that occasion, after noting the many serious situations detected in the state apparatus during the first campaign of the [political and organizational] offensive, President Machel announced the creation of these departments in all the ministries.

What Came of It?

According to VOZ DA FRELIMO, in most of the ministries, the departments of Control and Discipline, from the outset, concentrated more on disciplinary problems within the ministries than on the ministries' relations with the public.

Moreover, the people are not accustomed to going directly to government agencies to expose problems encountered in their contacts with those same agencies.

"The result has been that, in most cases, the departments of Control and Discipline are not performing the main function for which they were created," notes the VOZ DA REVOLUCAO, and further explains:

"A glaring example is that of a ministry like the ministries of Education or Transportation, which direct highly sensitive sectors, in terms of contact with the public."

"Since the creation of the [Control and Discipline] departments, hundreds of letters have come into the news media with complaints or demands regarding these sensitive sectors. During this time, however, the Control and Discipline departments have received an insignificant number of complaints from the public.

"In part, the reason for this is that the activity of these departments has not been sufficiently publicized, but it is also because of the work style adopted by the departments themselves. In most cases, they are not really concerned with encouraging and stimulating public participation," VOZ DA REVOLUCAO concluded.

BRAZILIAN JURISTS STUDY LOCAL JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Aug 81 p 3

[Interview with Brazilian Communist Party member Dr Pinheiro Machado Netto, by Antonio Mesa, in Mozambique, date not indicated]

> [Excerpts] "In sum, we have reached the conclusion that what the people's government, the government of the people's republic, the socialist Government of Mozambique, has proposed regarding the judiciary branch is, I believe, crystallizing and coming together perfectly. The judiciary system in Mozmabique is not purported to be an independent arm, as it is in other countries. It is an arm of the revolution. It is the revolution itself, extended to litigation and the legal arena." So said Dr Antonio Pinheiro Machado Netto, Brazilian attorney, aged 57, who led a delegation of Brazilian jurists on a 15-day visit to the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Delegation of Brazilian Jurists

The delegation of Brazilian jurists was in Mozambique for 15 days at the invitation of the AMASP [Mozambiqan Association for Solidarity Among Peoples]. Its aim was to learn about the services of the judiciary branch in the People's Republic of Mozambique, and it included the following members:

--Antonio Pinheiro Machado Netto, attorney, leader of the delegation, former PCB [Brazilian Communist Party] deputy, married, member of the Brazilian Institute of Lawyers, member of the Order of Attorneys of Brazil and member of the Brazilian Democratic Center;

--Deburgo de Deus Vieira, attorney, member of the delegation representing the Order of Attorneys and the Attorneys of the sector in which he practices his profession, Cruz Alta;

--Dr Elvio Schuch Pinto, career magistrate, chief justice of the First Municipal Court in Porto Alegre;

--Odilon Rebes Abreu, representative of the Public Ministry, public prosecutor;

--Tarso Fernando Genro, labor lawyer, representing the Rio Grande do Sul Association of Labor Lawyers and the National Association of Magistrates.

Dr Pinheiro Machado Netto talked with NOTICIAS about the results of the Brazilian delegation's encounter with the objective reality of popular justice in Mozambique. He said that one of the aims of his delegation, here at the invitation of the AMASP, was to return to Brazil and to pass on the experience gathered here. He also discussed the political situation in that Western Hemisphere county.

NOTICIAS: Dr Machado, can you tell us something of our impressions of popular justice in Mozambique?

Pinheiro Machado Netto: Well, with one foot already in the plane, I will try to sum up our impressions, the impressions of the delegation.

We have made contact with the judiciary system in the RPM, very close and very profitable contact, first in the capital, where his excellency Judge Serra Ventoso, chief justice of the Higher Court of Appeals, and his colleagues Doctor Claudio and Doctor Martins, gave us a full and detailed description of the judiciary system in the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Then we went to Nampula Province, where we spent almost a week learning in detail about the functioning of some segments of this system.

NOTICIAS: Are you a member of any Brazilian political party?

PMN: I belong to the Brazilian Communist Party.

NOTICIAS: Is there much support in Brazil for Mozambique?

PMN: My friend, what you are seeing here is Brazilian solidarity toward, or with, Mozambique. It is this delegation, which has come here and gathered all this experience and is now returning to pass on everything it has seen, to our places of work, to our associations.

Moreover, our delegation has invited two Mozambican judges to visit Brazil this year, to explain in person to the Brazilian magistrates and attorneys how the system works in this republic.

NOTICIAS: Will the secretary general of the PCB visit Mozambique?

PMN: Yes. He was invited by the party organization here in Mozambique and, if everything goes well, I believe he will be here within 30 to 40 days.

DANISH SHIP BEIRA STOPOVER DENIED--Maputo--The newspaper NOTICIAS DA BEIRA denied day before yesterday that the Danish ship "Skanlith" stopped at the port of Beira before continuing to South Africa. According to the Portuguese weekly EXPRESSO, that cargo ship reportedly stopped in Beira on 15 July 1979 with an illegal shipment of varied war materiel and 10 Alouette 3 helicopters that had been sold as "Portuguese air force surplus" to the Pretoria regime. After reviewing embarkation documents furnished by Mozambican authorities, the NOTICIAS DA BEIRA found that the "Skanlith" had stopped in Beira on 15 July 1979, one month after the date reported by the Portuguese weekly, on its way back from the port of Durban. According to the same newspaper, the Danish cargo ship loaded an unspecified amount of sunflower seeds and left for Rotterdam. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 23 Jul 81 p 12]

STUDENTS TO GDR--The GDR will make available to our country a school for 800 to 1,000 students, who will receive the corresponding compulsory education and will be graduated at the eighth grade level. Following this stage, they will enter professional training centers in institutions frequented by German youth. This school will open next year. Johannes Remus, commercial counselor of the GDR Embassy in Mozambique, stated that the establishment of this school is aimed at assisting Mozambique in the training of workers conforming to the standards in force in developed countries. Johannes Remus was meeting with newsmen at a press conference in Maputo. He also referred to his country's participation at the International Fair of Maputo this year. Fifteen GDR foreign trade firms are represented in this country's pavilion. They will exhibit equipment and products that can be used in the social and economic fields in Mozambique. "We do not intend to exhibit anything that cannot be useful, and we have always responded to the needs of the economic evolution of Mozambique," Johannes Remus added. HUNGARIAN TRAINING COOPERATION--Mozambican higher-level cadres will be trained as of this year in the People's Republic of Hungary. This constitutes part of a work program established by the Mozambican Ministry of Education and Culture and that country, that will be valid until 1983. The relative documents were signed yesterday in Maputo by Silvia Costa, MEC [Ministry of Education and Culture] secretary general and Hungarian Ambassador Gabor Sutto. The program also includes cultural exchanges between the two countries and Hungarian assistance to Mozambique in the fields of radio and cinema. STUDENTS TO CUBA--A group of 188 Mozambican students left yesterday for Cuba to continue their studies at the 4 Mozambican schools in that country. The 20 Mozambican students who have already been in Cuba for some time and who had vacationed in Mozambique as "the best of the best" also left in the same plane. Ministry of Education sources said that 58 Mozambican students returned to our country day before yesterday after having finished the 9th and 10th grade in Cuba. This group had originally left for Cuba in 1977. The contingent of students who left yesterday are the fifth group to attend Mozambican schools in Cuba since 1977. Coming from all the provinces of the country, these students reach the 6th grade and are between the ages of 15 and 17. According to Ministry of Education sources, these students will be distributed around the 4 Mozambican schools, the "Samora Machel," the "Eduardo Mondlane," the "25th of September," and the "28th of January." TRACTORS IMMOBILIZED--Only 25 percent of the tractors in the Limpopo Agro-Industrial Complex are operational, out of a total of 280 tractors in this complex. In the view of the complex director, this is the most serious problem affecting the preparation of the soil already underway for the next campaign. The number of tractors in the complex rose from 98 in 1976 to the present 280. However, while 95 percent of these tractors were operational at that time, only 32 percent could be used in the last campaign, and the figure has since dropped to 25 percent. Another problem is the lack of fertilizer. "We already have prepared 3,000 hectares of land that should be fertilized right now, but we have received no fertilizer as yet," the complex director stated. ATTACK CALLED 'MASSACRE'--Windhoek, 4 Sep (AFP)--The Namibian newspaper THE ADVERTISER said in Windhoek on Thursday that black Namibians consider the South African attack on Angola as a large-scale massacre of their brothers. THE ADVERTISER stressed that according to an opinion poll conducted at random the whites generally consider this action as logical and justified while the blacks consider it as something more vicious than mere provocation. A black, whose identity was not revealed by the newspaper said that the emergence of black power is more important for the black man even if it is under the rule of the SWAPO rather than the indefinite continuation of a struggle which has no other aim than to maintain the privileges of the whites. It will be recalled that THE ADVERTISER is very close to the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, the main domestic Namibian party recognized by South Africa. The alliance is led by Dirk Mudge, who is also president of the Namibian Council of Ministers. [Text] [AB041350 Paris AFP in French 1021 GMT 4 Sep 81]

KOUNTCHE'S SPEECH EMPHASIZES PEOPLE'S PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT COMPANY

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 6 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Jospeh Seydou Allakaye]

[Text] In his recent message to the nation, which was entirely concerned with national problems, the chief of state, Col Seyni Kountche, mentioned the Development Company, as was to be expected. And this was on the day after submission of the first report by the national commission established for that purpose. The long and exacting study prepared by the various commissions and subcommissions has been approved by the Council of Ministers. It may be recalled that under the circumstances, many missions had to go through the smallest Nigerien villages to obtain people's valuable opinions concerning their actual participation in the Development Company. The scope of that undertaking is equalled only by the meticulous concern of the CMS [Supreme Military Council] and the government for the success of the Development Company, that gigantic Nigerien-style development project.

In referring to the problem of setting up the Development Company, therefore, President Kountche stated that it will be entering its active phase. To achieve this, the chief of state established four main directives which will--definitely--enable the Development Company to go into operation for the prosperity and welfare of all Nigeriens. For the time being, it will be our job to put the finishing touches to the establishment of the Samaria structures and especially that of cooperatives, which have been delayed considerably. This initial work, it should be emphasized, is fundamental, since it will practically serve as a basis for the Development Company. It is therefore necessary to carefully select the components that will be used to build this foundation, since we want it to be strong and flexible.

Secondly and concurrent with this initial work, all of the structures planned must be established, from the bottom up, beginning now. These structures are the development cells at the level of villages, neighborhoods and groups organized and voluntarily participating in all matters affecting their own lives. This second phase is actually intended to complete the work so that there cannot be any flaws, despite the multiplicity of the building components. The entire structure must stand like a pyramid, so as to form a homogeneous whole. This idea of unity, homogeneity, strength and complementarity will be realized through constant organization and voluntary participation. There is no place in the Development Society for those who are indecisive and other unpatriotic dreamers.

The third phase will include the very important work of balancing the structures, such as those of cooperatives and the Samaria, so that some do not carry more weight than others. In other words, there must be a quantitative and qualitative coordination of structures already established or scheduled to be. We must all understand that there is no antagonism or opposition between the cooperative movement and the Samaria. On the contrary, these two Nigerien realities, on which we are pinning all our hopes, must exist in perfect symbiosis. This is an absolute necessity. It is particularly necessary since it constitutes the key to the Development Company.

Fourth and finally, until a more elaborate structure is set up at the government level, the work of raising awareness, providing information and changing patterns of thinking must be continued and intensified. With regard to government agencies, President Kountche mentioned a certain degree of administrative decentralization in order to delegate more responsibility at regional and local levels. The chief of state also pointed out that "we must bear in mind that although decentralization makes it possible to get the population interested in solving their respective problems and to better implement the work of development, it has the major risk of obscuring the notions of national unity and general welfare, without which there is no development nor even a nation. That is why we must carry out decentralization with restraint and discretion."

This is obvious and it can never be stated enough that Samaria and cooperatives remain the basic pillars on which our Development Company will rest. They also constitute the appropriate structures through which our population will have control over its fate while participating in the nation's general development. Although we have spoken only of Samaria and cooperatives so far, we should nevertheless not overlook the important group comprised of government agents and officials. They are the ones who will mainly be responsible for raising awareness, providing information and changing patterns of thinking. And that will not be a small job. In any case, the problem must be considered in terms of responsible participation. There is no other alternative.

The necessities of development actually require us to build a society in which participation will not be merely passive acquiescence, but a society in which it will mean personal contact, discussion, initiatives and joint decisions. This is the crux of the problem and we must bear in mind that it is impossible to speak of development without motivation. The government handles the planning, of course, but the rest, all the rest, is and remains the job of the people. The success of our Development Company will depend on their active participation, their determination and their faith in what they are doing. The Nigerien philosophy of development can definitely protect us from those harsh realities of life which Col Seyni Kountche discussed. Despite the harsh realities of this world, we still have faith in divine mercy. But as the saying goes: God helps those who help themselves. So all together, let us make the firm commitment to work responsibly, each at his own level, for the success of our Development Company.

SECURITY SAID TO BE NECESSARY AT ALL LEVELS

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 7 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Editorial: "Vigilance at All Levels"]

[Text] If there is any recurrent theme in our daily words or actions, it is certainly that of security: internal security and external security. In his message to the nation on 2 August, the chief of state particularly stressed this point: "In particular," he said, "I urge you to be constantly mindful of our country's security problems," for "the danger has not been eliminated entirely."

If the chief of state is still calling our attention to this extremely important aspect of our existence, it is obviously because security is necessary everywhere, at all levels and at the beginning of any operation. Whether it involves the basic unit of the community, the family, or the highest level, that of government, ranging through every echelon and social institution, security means existence. That is why President Seyni Kountche said that it is not only the concern of those in uniform. Until recently, in fact, it was commonly believed that this area was reserved solely for military or paramilitary forces. But security is present in every aspect of our lives and each of us has experienced this: food security, social security, economic security, political security. This is a shield which protects all of the country's children and all areas of life.

We cannot talk about security without necessarily stressing the conduct of each one of us in the city and the necessary conversion of minds which are too inclined to leave to those in uniform alone the job of watching over the entire population, even including minor household problems. Everyone's responsibility has been established and no one can shirk it. As fathers, mothers, brothers or sisters, regardless of our place in the community, we must make sure to better preserve our morals, which are becoming corrupted through contact with other poorly copied changes.

It is not only outside threats which must move us to strengthen security. We must also do so to preserve peace and tranquillity in our cities. For like other large African cities, ours are also starting to have their problems. This includes theft, robbery, murder and rape, practices learned during the exodus abroad. To this must be added the unrest of certain foreigners living in Niger.

But the government, whose mission is to assure the security of the population and its property, cannot stand by with its arms folded in the face of danger. That is why the police recently carried out the "Surround Boukoki" operation, which made it possible to flush out about 40 habitual criminals, most of whom were Nigeriens who had traveled abroad. And since that important "crackdown," not a single night goes by without the police arresting two or three robbers in our streets.

The Boukoki operation was actually only a prelude to other operations which will be carried out in all cities. From now on, every thief arrested will not be sent to the PJ [Judicial Police] or to a magistrate, but will go directly to a production center where he will learn to be useful to both himself and to those of whom he took advantage.

Let us say that security is the concern of everyone and particularly of our organizations. It is up to all of us to block the path of criminals and of those new, imaginative rumormongers in the cities. For example, there are rumors concerning the existence of alleged decapitators in Niamey. This is pure fabrication. And these rumors probably came from taxi drivers. Taxi owners are therefore concerned, i.e., those who are not nationals. If this situation continues, the authorities will seize control of the taxi union so that the necessary measures can be taken.

Niger is a legendary land of welcome and hospitality, but we ask foreigners to conform to our laws and customs.

Security also includes the problem of the many handicapped persons who populate our neighborhoods and streets, people who have been abandoned, as though our society had abandoned some of its cardinal virtues! A handicapped person is also a human being. He is therefore entitled to more care and consideration. From now on, the relatives of any handicapped person found in the street will be sought. It is the duty of each one of us to provide aid and assistance to these handicapped persons, such as by taking them to the hospital.

With regard to security, what hurts the most is when citizens sell their dignity and trade the nobility of their souls in exchange for crumbs from the enemies of the Nigerien nation. It is a shame that some fellow countrymen, contemptuously disregarding our people's heroic courage and the enormous efforts of Nigerian authorities to help Niger get out of its torment, allow themselves to be hired by foreign governments and engage in subversive activities.

It is nevertheless certain that Niger, which was patiently built with the sweat of its children, will not allow an inch of its soil to fall into the grip of any vulture or any expansionist, regardless of his origin. Nigeriens are definitely jealous of their country's sovereignty and are prepared to even make the supreme sacrifice to keep their homelard intact. The chief of state also forcefully stressed this heroic pride: "Therefore, show those men and women of infamy that Nigeriens are capable in any circumstances of meeting any challenge, whether economic or political."

No sacrifice is too great for the country's security.

EFFECTS OF ENERGY CRISIS ON NATION NOTED

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 6 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Abdoulaye Boureima]

[Text] The term "crisis" has probably not been used as much since Wall Street's Black Thursday in 1929.

Yet many social, political and even economic crises have occurred here and there in the world, our world of today.

Of all these crises, the energy crisis, whose disastrous consequences we are currently suffering, is the most persistent.

It has even become a standard feature of everyday life because of its strong presence. It is actually being discussed in household conversations; it is one of the primary concerns of politicians; and it is a topic of analysis or consideration.

Everything also seems to indicate that the crisis is growing in importance every day.

Actually, the war of October 1973 and the meeting of the Club of Rome were, to a slight extent, the major precipitating causes of this crisis, whose ground swell has affected and is still affecting our young economies profoundly and systematically, to the extent of complicating our security--as a result of destabilizing our lifestyles.

Economic Recession

The threat is real because it is, first of all, worldwide and because we feel it more than the affluent nations, which have been taking serious measures for almost a decade to reduce, as much as possible, the unemployment caused by the economic recession. But even their economic theories are being swallowed up in the wake of inflation: Keynesianism, interventionism, neoliberalism, monetarism, fiscalism, etc. ... nothing can be done. The crisis exists, a veritable Gordian knot, more present than ever.

But a particularly aggravating factor for the energy crisis, in this last part of the 20th century, is the trend of affluent nations to withdraw into an "egotistical nationalism" that is reluctant to reduce the gap between rich and poor and between more and less developed nations, on one hand, and on the other to establish the foundations for a new international economic order.

Such a trend can only have devastating effects on the economy of our country, which is subject to the vicissitudes of climate, like most Sudano-Sahelian countries.

Moreover, the reduction of taxation and less government intervention have favored the increase in the value of the dollar, whose constant rise risks making the situation worse, due to the meager character of our resources.

At the military officers' conference of 18 July, the chief of state also said that the drain on our foreign finances as a result of the dollar's rise could force us to maintain the rate of investment at a certain threshold.

Parallel Increase

Some people believed that Niger, because of its uranium potential, was an Eldorado that could consequently contain--like a jetty--the waves crashing down on its economy, which was already strained by the fall of uranium prices on the international market. This "strategic" raw material, whose price was formerly quoted at 24,500 CFA francs per kilogram, is today at its lowest level: 16,000 CFA francs.

The loss of revenues is quite obvious for our country, which must also pay off its foreign debt at an ... increasing ... rate of interest.

This situation is further aggravated by our economic relations with one of our main trade partners, whose currency is also increasing in value, parallel to that of the dollar.

Caught in this vicious circle of political economics, our country can only advocate a policy of restraint in proportion to its means.

The economic situation requires us to do so and consequently makes it urgent for us to exercise more restraint in spending and more discretion in management.

OFFICIAL IS CHIDED FOR REMARKS ON KANO RIOTING

Kaduna GASKIYA TA FI KWABO in Hausa 17 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial in column "GASKIYA's Opinion": "He Also Is Providing Information"]

[Text] The NIGERIAN STATESMAN newspaper alleges that an official has declared in Enugu that "common criminals had taken part" in the 10 July rioting in Kano that is now under investigation.

If that official really knows who the rioters are why doesn't he file a charge with the court? Hasn't a board of inquiry been set up? So, what's keeping him from appearing before the board of inquiry and naming the rioters? Isn't that one of the board's concerns?

If that official truly knew who the rioters were and had the full details then why didn't he share that information with the police and the National Security Organization (NSO) before the event?

The majority of individuals providing the board of inquiry with information maintain that there were throngs of rioters. But the official now contends that there were only a handful. Which version is the board of inquiry to accept?

In our opinion, this kind of reporting is counterproductive. Furthermore, it leads the public to wonder whether they aren't really having smoke blown in their faces.

None of us likes the kind of rioting that occurred. But a coverup isn't necessary.

What is necessary is for the public to stop believing that legal procedures are just a bother. When people are wronged they must be made to bring their cases before the judge.

People are aware that they do have one supreme weapon for collective retaliation when politicians renege on their word. That weapon is a referendum to hold a new election.

In conclusion it is our view that since a legal inquiry into the rioting is being conducted, it is not wise at all for individuals in positions of influence to add their two bits. If they do have information about the event they should appear before the board of inquiry in strictest confidence to give it what information they do have.

We hope there can be lasting peace and tranquillity.

SLLC LEADERS ACCUSED OF BEING PAID BY U.S. LABOR

AB071559 Paris AFP in English 1539 GMT 7 Sep 81

[Text] Freetown, 7 Sep (AFP)--The newspaper of Sierra Leone's ruling party today accused trade union bosses at the centre of the current national strike of being in the pay of an organisation with American links.

James Kabia, secretary-general of the Sierra Leone Labour Congress (SLLC) received 5,500 leones (about 6,000 dollars) a year in monthly payments of 450 leones from John Woodrow Kilhefner, local representative of the African-American Labour Centre [AALC] the All Peoples Congress Party newspaper WE YONE said.

Other congress officials were also paid monthly by Mr Kilhefner--who left Sierra Leone last week, according to unconfirmed sources--the paper said, basing its allegations on a reported disclosure to the police by a 69-year-old SLLC finance clerk.

The clerk was quoted by WE YONE as saying that the SLLC, which groups 14 trade unions, also received monthly subsidies ranging from 1,300 to 2,500 leones from Mr Kilhefner, who had an office at the SLLC headquarters.

The paper commented, this has caused some national concern as to the real objectives of Mr Kilhefner's four and half year stay in this country, during which he operated an annual budget of 100,000 dollars.

His American-based organisation is believed to have spent some half a million dollars in Sierra Leone during the last five years, the paper said.

Last week the Freetown government said in a statement that it had become clear that the so-called Sierra Leone Labour Congress is an organisation which is financed and controlled by a body outside Sierra Leone.

The statement said that the findings of an investigation would be passed to the U.S. Government for study.

Other reports said that Mr Kilhefner had told police he had made out cheques to the SLLC for up to 3,000 dollars monthly to help cover its expenses. The AALC programme was financed by the American labour movement independently of the U.S. Government, he reportedly said.

On 13 August Sierra Leone President Siaka Stevens asked the U.S. Embassy here to repatriate Mr Kilhefner, warning that because of his activities the very good relationship which exists between Sierra Leone and the United States might come under a cloud.

The government statement said that U.S. Ambassador Theresa Healey replied that she had no power to remove Mr Kilhefner.

MOGADISHU CONDEMNS 'UNHOLY ALLIANCES' SIGNED IN ADEN

EA212004 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1700 GMT 21 Aug 81

[Text] The Somali Government strongly condemns the unholy alliance recently agreed upon between the PDRY, Ethiopia and Libya aimed at threatening the peace and stability of the Horn of Africa, the Red Sea and the Gulf states. This is the topic of our commentary, written and read by Abdi Idriss Dualeh:

A 3-day summit was recently held in Aden between the three men who head the regimes of the PDRY, Ethiopia and Libya. No communique has been issued so far but it is known for certain that an unholy alliance has been agreed upon in Aden. This unholy alliance is aimed at endangering the peace and stability of Africa and oil-rich countries of the Gulf region.

This Aden conspiracy is not the brainchild of those who met there, because we are fully aware that the policies practiced by those three serve the interests of Moscow. There are Soviet sea, air and land bases in the PDRY, Ethiopia and Libya. These bases and the countries in which they are situated serve to promote the policies of the Kremlin.

Libya was formerly assigned to serve the Soviet interest in North, Central and West Africa. Libya's main task was the creation in those areas of regimes answerable to Moscow. Clear examples are Libya's interference in the internal affairs of Chad and other conspiracies it has launched in several countries including Egypt, Sudan, Tunisia, Senegal, Nigeria and Gambia.

Ethiopia's conspiracy is in the East African region, and that is why peace and stability cannot prevail there.

Aden serves Moscow's interests in the oil-rich countries of the Gulf region. Thus, serving Moscow's interests, Aden recently attempted to interfere in the internal affairs of Oman and the YAR.

In order to consolidate the Kremlin's policies in the region, the three Moscow stooges held a 3-day summit in Aden. A reliable source states that among the items discussed was the use of Libyan oil; Ethiopian military hardware estimated at $4 billion, and Aden's strategic position in subduing all the forces opposed to the Kremlin's policies in Africa, the Middle East and the Indian Ocean region.

Jointly addressing a public rally in Aden, they acknowledged their unholy alliance and conspiracy against the Somali Democratic Republic. For this reason the Somali Government declares that such policies of creating friction and discord in the Horn of Africa region, the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean must be jointly checked by all those concerned.

There is no doubt that if the peace-loving nations of the [word indistinct] world do not jointly check these moves by expansionist Russian policies they may lead to a third world war.

SOMALI SALVATION FRONT STATEMENT ON U.S., LIBYA

EA222316 (Clandestine) Radio Kulmis in Somali to Somalia 1800 GMT 22 Aug 81

[Statement issued by the Somali Salvation Front on "the naked aggression by the American Government against Libya in which two Libyan planes were downed and the Americans also suffered losses"]

[Text] It is no secret that the American administration, with Ronald Reagan's declaration has shown in many ways its animosity toward the socialist Jamahiriyah of Libya, the sole purpose of which is to destroy the great revolution of Libya. The American administration and in particular Ronald Reagan's declared enmity of the Libyan Jamahiriyah is no secret. The American policies of hatred for the independence, freedom and national integrity of the Libyan nation and society are crystal clear to the entire human race.

We would like to bring out three points which declare and openly show the American animosity toward the Libyan nation and the conspiracy with which it is planning to bring down the great revolution of Libya.

1. The American Government has on several occasions declared that it is prepared to fully assist any government, group of people or organization which wishes to topple the Libyan leadership and especially those with which it shares a common border. Any government bent on toppling the great revolution of Libya will get full support in the area of arms, military training, economic, political and social support from the American Government.

2. The second point is that America has declared openly and the world press has reported that America's policies are aimed at destroying the great revolution of Libya. The secret organization of America, the CIA, has devised a plan to assassinate the leaders of the Libyan revolution headed by our brother Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

3. The third point which clearly shows the animosity harbored by the American administration against the Libyan nation, aimed at destroying the great revolution, is Wednesday's naked aggression against Libya's planes which were overflying Libya's territorial waters. Two Libyan planes were shot down and the Americans suffered losses.

In taking this action America not only violated the international laws but showed the animosity she harbors for the great revolution of Libya. America hates the policies of the great Libyan revolution headed by Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, and his policy of assisting all those who are struggling for freedom and others who are struggling against neocolonialism and imperialism, as was demonstrated on Wednesday this week.

America's use of its military might against a small developing country like Libya cannot be tolerated. This is an evil, mistaken and inhuman act taken by a big nation, a superpower, which has a responsibility in contributing to world peace and stability.

Such a provocation and such naked aggression cannot be tolerated by any country in the world and any government that does not retaliate openly or secretly should cease to exist, whether such naked aggression has been committed by a great or a small nation.

It is clear that America is taking such provocative acts because she is not prepared to accept the openly nationalistic and brave policies espoused by the Libyan Government. America aims to intimidate and control all the countries in those regions.

Speaking in the name of the Somali Salvation Front [SSF] and the name of the independent Somali masses we vehemently abhor and strongly condemn the naked inhuman aggression against the Libyan nation by the American Government. Libya is a sister nation and we shall stand by it at all times.

We further declare, in the name of the Somali masses and that of the SSF, that we shall put our forces at the disposal of the Libyan people and government headed by Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. We also declare that we shall participate in any moves to check the conspiracy by the American imperialist against the progressive nations of the world spearheaded by Libya.

Before we conclude, we call on the entire world and the peace-loving nations and nationalistic progressive forces to oppose colonialism, imperialism, Zionism and conspiracies and to fully support the people and the great revolution of Libya. We call on them to openly state and show how they abhor the shameless act of the American Government against the people and the developing nation of Libya.

ARAB CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEETING OPENS

EA071614 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 7 Sep 81

[Text] The Somali Democratic Republic's [SDR] commerce minister, Challe Ahmed Mohamad Mohamud, officially opened the 54th Arab League Chambers of Commerce conference at the People's Hall in Mogadishu this morning.

The opening of the conference, which [words indistinct] on the development of Arab chambers of commerce, was attended by: the chairman of the Supreme Revolutionary Council's [SRC] commercial and financial committee, Challe Maj Gen Abdullah Muhammad Fadhil; SRC officials, and the ministers of finance, livestock development, culture and higher education, industries, fisheries and [words indistinct].

The Somali commerce minister said the fraternal Arab meeting is particularly important at this crucial time when Arab countries are facing political, economic, and social problems. He went on to say that the holding of this conference of Arab chambers of commerce in Somalia would enable the participants to familiarize themselves with Somalia's economic resources, particularly in agriculture, livestock and tourism.

Challe Ahmed Mohamed Mohamud gave details of agricultural, livestock and maritime resources, stressing that Somalia has 8 million hectares of arable land and that its 3,000-km coastline is the longest in Africa.

Referring to livestock, the minister said Somalia possesses more than 35 million animals. In view of this, he said, it would be possible to establish many industries and commercial activities in the country. He added that Somalia's resources have not been properly exploited because in its present economic situation, Somalia lacks the ability to make available the heavy investment and advanced technology required in this respect. The minister added, however, that in spite of its difficult economic situation, Somalia is implementing agricultural and livestock development programs.

The Somali commerce minister called on Arab commercial organizations to invest in Somalia because, he said, Arab investments are more significant and beneficial than [words indistinct] investments.

Challe Ahmed Mohamed Mohamud commended the Kuwaiti foreign minister who recently initiated an agricultural project which has proved successful. He hoped that other Arab countries would emulate this example. The minister went on to say that since some Arab countries are economically wealthy, there is a need for economic [word indistinct] to assist their less prosperous brothers to the mutual benefit.

Challe Ahmed Mohamed Mohamud called on the conference delegates to adopt resolutions which could benefit Arab countries. He said this conference could prove to be one which would serve to promote Arab countries to advance commercially, industrially and agriculturally.

The director general of the Somali Chamber of Commerce, Industry and Agriculture, Challe 'Ali Farah (?Sahal), told the participants that he is pleased the conference is being held in the SDR and that he hopes they would arrive at tangible results.

In reply the secretary general of the Arab League Chambers of Commerce, Burhan al-Dajani, thanked the Somali Government for the warm reception accorded him. He referred to the various levels of development achieved by the Arab Chambers of Commerce and their role in Arab commercial development. Citing the Somali commerce minister's speech, Mr al-Dajani said that as Somalia has abundant livestock, agricultural land and tourist attractions, it is imperative for wealthy Arab nations to invest in developing these potentials, thereby responding to the Arab league secretary general's appeal.

The conference is being attended by Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, Iraq, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Palestine, the Gulf [words indistinct] and the Arab League Chambers of Commerce Secretariat. [sentence indistinct]

COMMENTS ON MANY PROBLEMS OF PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 19 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] Yesterday, speaking before the Maria van Riebeek Club, S. Abram Mayet, a member of the Presidential Council, stated that the leftist-liberal press in South Africa had done the greatest disservice to the country by contributing to the impediments in the creation of the planned black council which the government had held out as a prospect to exist side by side with the Presidential Council.

Abram Mayet and two other members of the council: Dr F. Q. Quint and Mr Ken Winchiu, addressed the club on their views regarding the Presidential Council's aims.

Abram Mayet said that if changes fail to take place in South Africa within a reasonable time there will be only one victor...red imperialism, which will show no mercy to any of the racial groups.

The official opposition has criticised the Presidential Council in a distructive manner ever since it was set up. It has no compuctions about sitting in the white parliament, but is not willing to serve in the Presidential Council which, as a tool of that parliament, must help in working out a new order.

Facts cannot be wished away. There are about 18 million urban blacks in white South Africa who must be recognized. "Otherwise we will be swimming against the current."

However, Abram Mayet is in agreement with Alwyn Schlebusch, chairman of the Presidential Council and deputy state president, that the whites, coloreds and Indians must first achieve reconciliation before there can be talks with the urban blacks.

If the Presidential Council does not succeed in bringing about a reconciliation between whites, coloreds and Indians there will be no reconciliation between the blacks and the other groups. This will then spell the end of the colored members of the council.

Analysis

Racial relations in the country are worse today than they were last year during the same period. It is therefore necessary that the Presidential Council must come up with something. A new constitution will not resolve the country's problems; however, the council can help in doing away with irritating things such as the great number of laws.

Abram Mayet said that it is an easy matter for the colored groups to severly criticize the Group Areas Act. However, none of the groups' leaders have ever done a clinical analysis of this act. The Presidential Council is doing this now.

If the question of District Six and Pageview can be resolved a lot of bad feelings can be removed.

Dr Quint said that South Africa has hard facts on its side with respect to its foreign relations, but is forgetting about the role of sentiment.

It is a hard fact that District Six was overpopulated; but it is a sentimental fact that colored school children are no longer singing. As District Six's coloreds dwindled in number so did the children's singing. The well known colored choirs have also disappeared.

Today's colored children are no longer learning the Afrikaans they had come to know (the colloquial speech), but the Afrikaans which they were told they must learn (the official language).

Dr Quint said that his son told him that he "had made great progress." This is what the whites also told him; but then his son asked whether he could vote. "An 18-year-old white boy has more voice than you do."

Dr Quint said that President Paul Kruger's formula for honesty must be applied to South Africa again.

Mr Winchiu, the youngest member of the Presidential Council, said that the council cannot resolve problems, but it can take into view the complicated situation in South Africa. But he said that the problems can be resolved because they have been caused by humans.

WESTERN CAPE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT DISCUSSED; GOVERNMENT CRITICIZED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 21 Aug 81 p 18

[Text] The Western Cape's gold is its colored labor which offers the greatest potential for industrial growth. The utilization of this labor source's handiness, considerable level of training and possibility of being trained further in management and enterprise can ultimately provide jobs for thousands more.

This is one of the important positive viewpoints offered yesterday in Capetown by the Western Cape's branch of the Association for Long-Term Planning during the conference on the long term prospects for the Western Cape.

Dr C. L. McCarthy of the Economics Department of the Stellenbosch University said that the report on the discovery of minerals and energy sources for injecting life into the economy of the Western Cape is of no use while the skilled and semi-skilled labor here is well equipped for producing things such as clothing, metal products, machinery and transportation equipment.

The big question is who is going to provide job opportunities for the white and especially colored potential workers between the ages of 15 and 64 who by the year 2000 will increase in numbers by about 582,000, not to speak of the blacks who, by that time, will be in the Western Cape.

Mr J. A. Grobbelaar, of the Future Research Unit of Stellenbosch University, said that up until now the whites have been the main enterpreneurs who have provided jobs. The number of whites in the Western Cape is diminishing in comparison with the coloreds and this is placing greater responsibility on the coloreds to act as employers.

Industrialists will have to put greater emphasis on light industries, which have greater employment potential. There is no reason why the Western Cape cannot become the center of the South African electronics industry in view of the growing market in this business and the opportunity for creating a number of smaller industries.

Mr F. F. Pratt of the Industrial Development Corporation said that Atlantis is creating room for expansion, because it holds industries for Western Cape which would otherwise have been diverted to other parts of the country. Several industries, mostly from the Rand, have established themselves in Atlantis. This would not have happened if there had not been industrial ground available in Atlantis.

The development of new industrial regions, which is mainly in the hands of the government, is evidencing a lack of well considered, comprehensive long term planning, because of the lack of services, distances from the source of labor and other factors.

Dr P. E. Claassen and Dr G. N. van Zyl, respectively of the Institute for Planning Research and of the Cape's Metropolitan Planning Committee, have stated that the main criticism against the government's planned space development in the Western Cape is the ban on the creation of new industrial regions in the Cape's metropolitan area, especially Mitchell's Square, and on the establishment of new colored residential areas in the peninsula.

NYERERE: MASSES DEMANDING SKILLED DEVELOPMENT MANAGEMENT

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 23 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Excerpt]

PRESIDENT Nyerere has reiterated that leaders in the political and economic sectors should improve administrative and managerial skills, adding that otherwise the people would throw out incapable leaders.

He told Kilimanjaro Party and Government leaders at the Police Training College Hall yesterday that since Tanzanians were now literate and politically aware they would not tolerate "subsistence leadership."

"I want to tell you my colleagues that the masses are now demanding skilled development management. Unless we equip ourselves with high standards of leadership and managerial skills, some of us will be swept out of the way," he cautioned.

Mwalimu explained that acquisition of administrative and managerial skills was the next development stage after political independence, literacy and ideological clarity.

"In Tanzania we have achieved the latter three. Let us all now embark on the next stage," he urged.

The President, winding up a four-day visit of Kilimanjaro Region, said political leaders were not yet perfect, and that managers in the economic sector lacked up-to-date managerial skills.

He said many leaders lacked initiative to learn more about their professions and that more still shield away from urging people to work fearing that they would not be re-elected in the next general elections.

"This is subsistence leadership. We cannot develop that way. Most Tanzanians survive on subsistence agriculture and what they need is skilled leadership to improve their living standards," he said.

He noted that many leaders, instead of improving themselves, boasted about their positions for which they were not fully qualified. This was false, he added.

"Our management and leadership standards are very low. We must accept this fact. Only then shall we learn how to improve them," he said.

He said Tanzanians should be prepared to learn from the developed countries because technological skills were a new introduction to the country.

NYERERE OPPOSES PROPOSALS TO FORM NEW DISTRICTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Excerpt] President Nyerere said yesterday that the government would not readily entertain proposals to form new districts because the exercise was both costly and superfluous.

Mwalimu, who was laying the foundation stone for the 5.9 million-shilling Mwanga District headquarters here, pointed out that the splitting of districts and regions had now reached a climax.

"Before independence the country had only 10 provinces, but now we have 20 regions with several districts", he said, adding: "We think this is enough".

Mwalimu told hundreds of Mwanga residents, who attended the ceremony, that apart from the achievement, the divisions called for more capital investments and operational costs.

"The government will not readily entertain proposals to create new districts and regions", he emphasised.

He told the Mwanga residents that the creation of the new district was a challenge to them and that they should speed up development to justify the government decision.

In their message to Mwalimu, the peasants likened themselves to a newly-wed young man who, they said was bound by the Pare tradition to maintain his homestead without substantial aid from his parents".

"In the same vein, we don't intend to ask for too much from the government, but we would ask you to visit us after two years to assess our achievements", they told Mwalimu.

The President said that the splitting of districts was aimed at self-reliance, adding that it facilitated easier development management.

"Your concept of the exercise is very promising and, in fact, it is my first time to hear such a correct interpretation", he commended the Mwanga residents, adding: We are waiting to see how you put that into action".

The ceremony was also attended by the Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, who is also the Member of Parliament for Mwanga. Mwalimu was told that the building, to accommodate all government departments, would be completed in the current financial year.

MINISTER SAYS PROJECT COSTS SHOULD BE WITHIN NATION'S CAPABILITY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] THE Minister for Finance, Ndugu Amir Jamal, yesterday cautioned institutions against spending public funds on poorly prepared projects and said project costs should be within the country's economic and financial capability.

Speaking at the Kilimanjaro Hotel in Dar es Salaam during a ceremony last night, Ndugu Jamal said unless boards of directors and operations departments in parastatals were careful in deciding on the structure of vital projects, the country could find itself repeating past mistakes.

The ceremony was held to mark 15 years of the existence of the National Provident Fund (NPF) as an autonomous institution.

The minister emphasised that funds should be approved for investment only in those projects the studies and feasibility studies of which had been successfully completed.

Cautioning against making quick decisions on projects without basing them on the final reports on the project ground work, Ndugu Jamal said authorisation of such projects added to the operations costs and thus wasted current and future national resources and savings.

"Twenty years after independence we cannot continue condoning wrong projections, whether out of ignorance or deliberate", he said.

The minister explained that every parastatal organisation or institution was an asset entrusted to the directors and the management, both of whom were leaders and national trustees.

The NPF, which has registered a total of 320,000 workers since its establishment, had contributions totalling 1,808.5m/- by June this year.

Half the amount was contributed by the workers and the balance by employers.

Ndugu Jamal said the NPF had bought government stocks worth 1,842m/-. It also realised an interest of 654 million/-.

The NPF had also paid to its members a total of 473/- by June 30 this year.

Ndugu Jamal called for efforts to solve the problems experienced by the NPF in getting the necessary proper data from some of the employers.

MWANGA URGES STRONGER UNITY AMONG NONALIGNED NATIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text] Tanzania has stressed the need for stronger unity among Non-Aligned nations in a bid to safeguard developing nations from external threats aimed at weakening the movement.

The call was made in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Acting Minister for Foreign Affairs, Ndugu Abel Mwanga, when opening a three-day seminar on 20 years of the Non-Aligned movement at the Institute of Finance Management (IFM).

He explained that Non-Aligned countries had been subjected to various kinds of threats from external forces in order to weaken the movement by creating misunderstandings and conflicts among member states of the movement.

Unless the movement maintained unity, divisive manoeuvres would continue, Ndugu Mwanga cautioned.

"The future of the world, and the Third World in particular depends on the unity within the Non-Aligned movement", and that "all tendencies to weaken the movement must be strongly condemned and resisted", Ndugu Mwanga said.

He also said that Non-Aligned member countries must make far-reaching sacrifices for the just cause of justice, peace and the restoration of human dignity.

The Minister further said that although the movement had worked tirelessly towards world peace and security in the early days of its founding, the world today portrayed a gloomy picture where the urge for big nations to dominate small nations was on the increase.

He also explained that despite tremendous contributions and commendable achievements of the movement in the decolonisation process in Africa, Asia and Latin American in the past 20 years, the struggle ahead was difficult.

On economic cooperation, Ndugu Mwanga noted that the problem lay in the selfishness of some rich countries which did not want changes.

However, he added that since the international economic order had been widely accepted, the Non-Aligned and other developing countries should continue to eradicate the past era of economic injustice and build inter-dependence that could generate meaningful economic cooperation among states.

He asked the seminar participants from diplomatic missions, ministries, parastal organisations and academic institutions to examine the cause of failures and conflicts and to suggest best ways the movement could use to solve their problems.

Meanwhile, Cuba, Yugoslavia, Egypt and India emphasised unity among the movements member countries and developing nations and urged the movement to spearhead the struggle against zionism, imperialism, colonialism and all acts that interfered with the independence of nations.

The countries, represented at the seminar by their ambassadors to Tanzania, pledged that the movement would continue to support liberation movements and uphold the policy of peaceful co-existence of the Non-Aligned nations.

KAGYA URGES DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS TO PREPARE SHIFT TO DODOMA

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text] DIPLOMATIC missions based in Tanzania have been urged to start preparing for their shift to the country's new capital of Dodoma.

The call was made in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Capital Development Authority's Director of Financial Co-ordination, Ndugu Moses Kagya when briefing members of the diplomatic corps on the scope and progress of the new capital. The meeting was convened by CDA and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Ndugu Kagya assured the diplomats that CDA would assist foreign missions in selecting sites for their chancelleries and official residences in Dodoma.

He said so far three foreign missions — Australia, Zimbabwe and Zambia — had selected their sites, adding: "The foreign missions in the country are very keen to move to the new capital".

CDA, in collaboration with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, would arrange for the diplomats' visit to Dodoma where they could select their sites before the end of the year, Ndugu Kagya added.

Sites for the diplomatic missions have been set adjacent to the planned national capital centre.

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Vice-President's Office are expected to shift to Dodoma by 1984, according to Ndugu Kagya.

Several other ministries, including Livestock Development; Finance; Agriculture; Minerals; Economic Affairs and Planning, and Water and Energy are also expected to have shifted to Dodoma by 1986 when the second phase of the implementation plan would be completed.

Ndugu Kagya explained that due to several constraints, the government had failed to achieve its goal of shifting 30 per cent of the central government staff by the end of the First Five Year Development Programme (phase one) which ended on June 30 this year.

So far, he said, CDA including the President's Office, Prime Minister's Office and Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) were in Dodoma.

However, he said efforts to facilitate the construction of the new capital, eventually estimated to accommodate one million people, were being made.

To ensure availability of building materials, he said, the government had established building materials industries which include brick and tile factory, phase one of which was already operational. Phase two would be commissioned before the end of this fiscal year, he said.

UN ENERGY CONFERENCE DESCRIBED AS 'PATENTLY DISAPPOINTING'

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Aug 81 p 3

[Editorial]

[Text] "PATENTLY disappointing" is about the most fitting description of the outcome of the eleven-day 125-state UN energy conference which ended in Nairobi on Friday.

Granted that so many countries attended the conference, itself a reflection of the importance of the subject under discussion, and granted that so many well-documented papers were presented.

But at the end of it all, the conference came out with an alternative energy action plan but without providing the wherewithal to implement it.

Typically, the UN conference was forced to delay action on a matter that is of basic survival to the world's poor non-oil producing countries.

So, at least for the next one year, if not more, there is going to be hustle and bustle about creating the mechanisms for implementing the action plan endorsed by consensus this year.

Thus, the outcome of the Nairobi conference only underlines that some quarters in the developed countries have chosen to be insensitive to the basic needs of the world's poor countries.

These quarters know that they can adjust themselves to the delaying tactics. They also know that the poor — crushed by massive internal and external economic problems — are not similarly endowed.

It is for this reason that the non-oil producing Third World countries, most of them spending at least half of their export earnings on energy imports, must wake up.

They must wake up to the fact hat an internationaly-engineered solution to the energy problem will take years to come. If come, it will.

And even if it does, it will be not a solution entirely dictated by the real and meaningful development needs of the world's poor countries.

It is thus incumbent upon the poor countries to formulate practical and suitable national energy policies that take cognisance of existing internal and external realities as they are.

The poor have to reduce their almost helpless dependence on fuel imports, fully knowing that they must link up development and energy strategies for development and the requisite and appropriate technologies.

POLICE RECOVER ALL PISTOLS STOLEN FROM ARMORY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Abdallah Yakuti]

[Text] POLICE in Zanzibar have recovered intact all the 25 pistols stolen from the police armoury at Ziwani, here between March and July this year, it was learnt yesterday.

The Zanzibar Urban Region Police Commander, Ndugu Idd Msilimiwa, said in an interview here that the arms, wrapped in a water-tight bag was fished out of a water well early this month.

Ndugu Msilimiwa however, did not say when and where the recovery was made, but added that the pistols were discovered within the Zanzibar town.

The police commander was commenting on rumours now circulating in town that the stolen pistols might have been used by bandits who stormed the Bwawani Hotel here two weeks ago.

"The two incidents are not connected a tail. The stolen arms were in fact recovered days before the suspected armed bandits burst into the Bwawani Hotel and stole 96,170/65 in cash," the commander explained.

Three police officers suspected to have stolen the 25 pistols from Ziwani appeared before the Zanzibar High Court last Friday charged with stealing 25 pistols and being in an unlawful possession of arms contrary to the Zanzibar arms control legislations.

The accused who appeared before the Zanzibar Chief Justice, Ndugu Augustino Ramadhani, were Assistant Superintendent of Police, Harub Ali Hamisi, Sergeant Major Hamisi Hassan and Corporal Mussa Hassan — all are members of the Tanzania Police Force in Zanzibar.

Prosecuting, State Attorney Mohamed Juma alleged that the three police officers, assigned at the Ziwani Police Armoury in Zanzibar, jointly stole 23 pistols and two toy pistols used for training purposes — all valued at 157,500/-. This happened between March and July this year.

The accused, who pleaded "not guilty" to the charges were released on a 10,000/- bail with three sureties each for the same amount until September 7 this year when hearing will start.

Interviewing a cross section of Zanzibar town residents, I discovered that many people were now happy that pistols have been recovered because they feared that once in criminal hands the arms would have been used to hurt or even kill innocent people.

The interviewees have commended members of the Police Force in Zanzibar for their prompt action to recover the arms.

REPORT NOTES REDUCTION IN MAINLAND CAR IMPORTS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

MAINLAND Tanzania made a substantial reduction of about 50 per cent on the importation of cars in 1977 compared with its 1968 bill although it spent nearly nine per cent more of the nation's foreign reserves at the close of the decade, it was learnt in Dar es Salaam over the weekend.

According to government statistics on road transport, the nation spent 32.6 million/- of its foreign exchange reserves to import 1,262 cars in 1977 compared with 29.1 million/- spent to bring into the country 2,737 cars in 1968.

However, the Bureau of Statistics, which has published the figures in its June 1980 report, does not attribute the car import slump in 1977 to any economic factor.

It is however, known that it was about 1977 when the government further tightened up its control on the importation of cars after realising a substantial drain of the nation's foreign exchange reserves through the car import trade.

The car importation control was based on a legislation whose Bill seeking to amend the Motor Vehicles (Restriction on Acquisition and Dispositions) Act, 1972, was passed by the National Assembly in July, 1972.

The Bureau's report which gives transport statistics covering aviation, shipping, railways and road, shows that the number of imported cars dropped to 1,414 in 1974 when the nation spent 26.4 million/- of its foreign exchange reserves.

A drastic drop was realised in 1975 when only 604 cars were imported at an expenditure of 13.1 million/-.

The import figure for 1976 on cars was 609 cars on which the nation spent 14.1 million/-.

In 1977 the import trade bill rose sharply to 1,262 cars forcing the government to spend 32.6 million/-, the highest figure during the decade.

The statistics show that 2,755 buses and lorries were imported into the country in 1968 when the nation spent 53.0 million/- compared with 3,045 buses and lorries on which 291.2 million/- was spent in 1977.

Since 1968 the number of imported buses and lorries has been decreasing — 2,325 in 1974, 1,449 in 1975, reaching the lowest figure of 1,274 in 1976 and shooting up to 3,045 in 1977.

The amount of foreign exchange spent on the importation of buses and lorries in 1974 shot up to 108.5 million/- and dropped to 88.2 million/- in 1975. But in 1976 the amount rose to 92.8 million/-.

Tractors imported into the country totalled 91 in 1968 during which 10.0 million/- was spent compared with 16 tractors valued at 1.2 million/- in 1977.

Twenty-six tractors were imported in 1974 at an expenditure of 0.4 million/-. The country imported 1,284 motor cycles in 1968 on the strength of 2.2 million/- compared with 3,202 cycles valued at 12.0 million/- in 1977.

POT COURSE FOR MACHINE MAINTENANCE COMPLETED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

A group of 13 trainees from three metal producing industries in the country recently graduated from a Problem Oriented Training (POT) course organised by the Metal Industries Development Association (MEIDA) in collaboration with the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA).

The pioneer course held at the Vocational Training Centre (VTC) at Keko in Dar es Salaam is aimed at producing machine maintenance experts who would enable the industries save local and foreign exchange currency.

The three-week course brought together 13 trainees from the Ubungo Farm Implements (UFI), the National Bicycles Company (NABICO) and the Aluminium Africa (ALAF).

Closing the course, the National Development Corporation (NDC) General Manager, Ndugu J. Mwambungu, urged the newly trained graduates to put into practice what they learned from the course as well as impart the knowledge to others in their respective industries.

The POT programme will continue in various phases to cover the more than 60-members of MEIDA in the country.

Meanwhile, five Tanzanians have already started a training course which would enable them to become trainers in the various MEIDA industries in Tanzania, after the Swedish experts who are currently running the course leave.

WAGES FOR MINIMUM WAGE EARNERS, CASUAL LABORERS SET

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 22 Aug 81 p 3

[Text]

DAILY, weekly, fortnightly and monthly wages for minimum wage earners and casual labourers have been categorised by the government following a declaration of the new minimum wage which became effective July 1, this year.

The Labour Commissioner, Ndugu A.I. Mdamo, has sent a circular to all mainland labour offices explaining how much a worker deserves under his or her respective category.

An urban worker, "and those engaged by commercial enterprises outside towns" will be paid thus:

Workers above 18 years — daily (23/5), weekly (150/-) fortnightly (300/-) and monthly (600/-).

Those above 15 years but below 18 years — daily (18/30), weekly (119/20), fortnightly (238/40) and monthly (476/80).

Drivers — daily (23/95), weekly (155/75); fortnightly (311/50) and monthly (623/5).

Rural workers above 18 years will get 17/70 (daily), weekly (115/-), fortnightly (230/-) and monthly (460/-). Those aged between 15 and 18 years will get 17/30 (daily), weekly (99/35, fortnightly (198/70) and monthly (397/40).

Drivers — daily (23/65), weekly (153/65), fortnightly (307/25) and monthly (614/55).

Urban casual employees above 18 will get 3/50 an hour and 23/50 a day. Those aged between 15 and 18 years, will get 2/45 and 18/30 an hour and a day respectively.

Rural casual employees above 18 will get 2/35 an hour and 17/70 (daily). Such an employee aged between 15 and 18 years will get, 1/50, 2/50 and 15/30 an hour and a day respectively.

The government has also set a ceiling for house rent deductions for minimum wage earners provided housing by the employers. The law says: "Persons of or above 18 years of age will face a monthly deduction of 48/-; and deductions for persons of or above 15 but below 18 years of age is 24/-".

BRIEFS

TACC-SOVIET COOPERATION AGREEMENT--The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Tanganyika Association of Chambers of Commerce (TACC) yesterday signed a cooperation agreement covering trade and economic sectors at a meeting in Dar es Salaam. According to the agreement, which took effect immediately, the two countries will strive to develop mutually beneficial trade and economic relations. Signing for the Tanzania side was the Director of TACC, Ndugu J.T. Lupembe, who welcomed the agreement as a worthwhile image to greater understanding between the people of USSR and Tanzania. Speaking on behalf of all the chambers of commerce in the country, Ndugu Lupembe stressed that the agreement was not between one chamber of commerce in Dar es Salaam and another in Moscow but between all chambers of commerce in the two countries. On behalf of the USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Senior Vice-President of that body, Ndugu Evgeni P. Pitovranov said that drafts of the agreement earlier sent to Moscow had already been approved. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 26 Aug 81 p 3]

KENYAN ASPHALT CONTRACT--Nairobi, Monday--A Kenyan company, Cabroworks, has won a contract to supply 200 tonnes of asphalt to Tanzania, marking a significant breakthrough in the two countries' trade which has been stiffed since the closure of the border in 1977, the NAIROBI BUSINESS TIMES newspaper said here yesterday. The one-million shilling consignment, the paper said, was delivered last week across the border with Tanzania on its way to Mbeya. The asphalt is to be used on a Bank of Tanzania building project in Mbeya. The project is undertaken by Cabroworks, a Mombasa based subsidiary of Cassman Brown and the Kenyan Company Limited of Wilson Airport. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Aug 81 p 1]

NYERERE'S RETIREMENT OF POLICEMEN--President Nyerere has retired in the public interest the Mwanza Regional Police Commander, Ndugu M.P. Ndomba, and the Region's CID Officer, Ndugu K.A. Kange. A statement issued by the Ministry of Manpower Development in Dar es Salaam yesterday said the two had been retired effective August 13, this year. The retirement of the two officers was attributed to recent problems which had cropped up in the Region. The problems, said the statement, had necessitated the formation of a special probe commission which found that the two were involved. [Text] [Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 23 Aug 81 p 1]

MILITARY AGREEMENT WITH UGANDA--Reports from Dar se Salaam say Uganda and Tanzania have signed an agreement believed to provide for military cooperation. Tanzania's MZALENDO newspaper said officials from both countries confirmed that an agreement had been signed but refused to divulge the details. The agreement followed the visit to Dar es Salaam by the Ugandan vice president and defense minister, Paulo Muwanga, and the chief of defense forces, Maj Gen Tito Okello. Mr Muwanga said recently that Uganda wanted at least 800 Tanzanian soldiers to help train the Ugandan Army. Tanzania had 45,000 troops in Uganda which helped oust President Idi Amin in 1979. PRESIDENT HOLDS AT-TA'IF PRESS CONFERENCE

He said that the talks he held with his majesty included various issues, but they discussed in particular matters of interest to the two countries, the Middle East, and other international problems.

Speaking of his country's attitude to the Middle East situation, President Kaunda said that Zambia had notified Israel of its objection to such aggressive inclinations, both in 1967 and again in 1973, when Israel waged war on the Arabs and occupied Arab territory. [Passage indistinct]

He said that Zambia demands that the Palestinians should be allowed to set up their own state and that Israel should withdraw from occupied Arab territory, including Jerusalem. [Passage indistinct]

The Zambian president said that his country had often condemned Hitler's persecution of the Jews; by the same token it cannot accept Jewish persecution of Arabs.

Concerning South Africa, Kaunda said that he advocates peace in southern Africa, but while the racialist trap in South Africa remains, there will never be peace.

Kaunda called for the withdrawal of all South African forces from Namibia, and for the implementation of UN Resolution 435.

He expressed hope that the United Nations might be able to do something about this. He said that his concern at the moment is that the United Nations should compel South Africa to withdraw its troops from Namibia, and should put an end to racial discrimination in South Africa.

Kaunda expressed his thanks and appreciation for the king's invitation to visit Saudi Arabia. He said that relations between the kingdom of Saudi Arabia and Zambia are excellent.

He added that mutual relations between the leaders of Saudi Arabia and Zambia will strengthen the ties between the two countries.

He said that he was leaving Saudi Arabia convinced that the relations between the two states will go from strength to strength.

The Zambian president expressed the support of his country for the proposals of Prince Fahd ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz, the Saudi crown prince and deputy prime minister, concerning peace in the Middle East.

He said that he saw no real solution for the problem of the Middle East--particularly for the Palestine problem--without the participation of the PLO as the legitimate representative of the Palestinians in any settlement in the region.

President Kaunda condemned the repeated Israeli attacks on Lebanon, describing them as savage and contrary to the fundamental principles of the rights of man.

Asked about Muslims in his country, President Kaunda said that Muslims in Zambia enjoy freedom of worship without restrictions or pressure.

OPPOSITION CHIEF DINI, GOVERNMENT EXCHANGE ACCUSATIONS

Gouled's 'Tribalistic' Policy Denounced

Paris LE MONDE in French 14 Jul 81 p 20

[Article by Philippe Decraene]

[Text] Visiting Paris privately for a month, Ahmed Dini, who was prime minister of Djibouti from 14 July to 17 December 1977, is now preparing to return to his country. Head of the opposition since he resigned in order to mark his disagreement with Hassan Gouled, reelected president on 12 June, Dini has reportedly increased his semi-official contacts until his departure, planned for 14 July.

"Either France will reconcile its national interests and the socialist options or it will continue to finance repression and oppression directly, and the situation in Djibouti will then evolve as it did in Chad." Of Afar nationality, while Hassan Gouled is Issa in origin, Dini, who for many years was one of the most loyal battle companions of the current chief of state, now denounces the "tribalist policy" of the latter and accuses France at the same time: "Since independence, the former mother country has exclusively supported the Issas. There is now no French technical assistant, not a single doctor or teacher, in Afar territory."

Dini, who condemns the fact that "the Afar territory has lived for 4 years under a curfew," claims that Djibouti is living under "a veritable dictatorship." He specifies: "It is all a matter of scale. We have a small population, numerically speaking. Our territory is not large. The nature and weight of the Djibouti dictatorship are different from those of other African nations, but in our country also, political prisoners are being tortured to death."

Nor is the leader of the Djibouti opposition only "disillusioned" by independence. He says he is "desperate" and asks: "What are the French leaders doing with their options? Are the people of Djibouti also worthy of democracy and justice or not?" Backed by his own experience, he adds: "In 1974, during the presidential campaign, I was the local leader for the candidate Mitterrand. Hassan Gouled is a retired Gaullist who has never been a socialist, but he successively belonged to the RPF [Rally of the French People], the UNR [Union for the New Republic], the UDF [French Democratic Union]."

Finally, Dini emphasizes the fact that none of the main demands formulated by the nationalists under colonialism has yet been met: elimination of prostitution, a ban on the sale of Qat -- a local drug used as a mood elevator -- and destruction of the dam isolating the city of Djibouti from the rest of the territory.

In this connection, he states: "Prostitution has developed so alarmingly that the cadi of Djibouti has personally headed up the campaign against it. Daily local consumption of Qat has gone from 3 tons before independence to 8 tons today. The wall of shame erected by the underground army is still in place, useless, because the population of Djibouti has doubled in 4 years."

Editorial Refutes Dini's Charges

Djibouti LA NATION DE DJIBOUTI in French 23 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Editorial: "Ridicule Does not Kill"]

[Text] Ahmed Dini, still the same, ceaselessly works at creating an image of a political leader, which he has not been able to do in his own country.

Since his departure from the government in 1977, he has stepped up his capricious and lying statements that sometimes border on madness. Despite his eloquence, his contradictory affirmations only discredit him with those whose backing he seeks. The latest is the statement that appeared in the 14 July 1981 LE MONDE.

What does he say that is new? Actually, he only repeats the same refrain of division and a so-called antagonism between the two main components of the Djibouti nation.

"The north is living under a curfew," he said.

We have already heard this and it has been verified and contradicted by observers and journalists from that same newspaper (see the article by Langelier, LE MONDE, 10 June 1981). Did he not once state that the people in the north were dying of thirst because of the established government? There also, foreign observers ascertained the truth (see Andre Landouze's article in TEMOIGNAGE CHRETIEN).

He also dares to speak of a dam.

Is it necessary to remind him that it is he who erected the dam, which he had electrified and strewn with mines when he held the sinister role of minister of the interior of the so-called local government under the colonial government? It is not necessary to point out that the people of Djibouti still have an unenviable memory of that fascist.

There is no more dam, Mr Dini! Rest assured and sleep well, if the memory still haunts you.

One question must be asked: Does Dini not yet know that the Republic of Djibouti exists, sovereign and independent?

What does he expect of the new French leaders when he addresses to them that veiled threat of the "Chadization" of the Republic of Djibouti? There can be no doubt that this bitter man has been surpassed by the events.

The Republic of Djibouti maintains privileged relations with the French Government, relations based on respect and mutual interest, just as it maintains relations with a large number of other nations in the world.

Let us look at a few more statements by our dear Dini.

He states that there is not a single French technical assistant, not one doctor, not one teacher, in Afar territory.

Is it possible that he does not yet know that from Ali-Sabieh to Obock, passing by Dikhil and Tadjourah, all the school and health establishments are operating normally and without technical assistants? It is the sons of this country who head them admirably well.

Yes, that is what independence is, Mr Dini: gradually taking over the affairs of one's own country.

Obviously the children of that bourgeois are being cared for in Europe!

His opportunism causes him to forget who campaigned for Francois Mitterrand in 1974 and in what election district in Djibouti he obtained the majority. Well, if Dini has lost his memory, let us remind him that it was Hassan Gouled who organized the campaign and obtained the majority in favor of Francois Mitterrand in his area -- that is, the second district of Djibouti City. The files still exist and the friends of the French Socialist Party are alive and happy, moreover.

It was Hassan Gouled who also worked and obtained the majority in the same district for the candidate Alain Poher, supported by the French left in 1969 when the newly "socialist" Dini was the local leader of the campaign of candidate Georges Pompidou.

At any rate, the people of Djibouti will never forget the active part played by the French left in their fight to regain dignity and freedom. They will be grateful to it.

Concerning the cry of despair of that man nostalgic for division and hatred, let him know once and for all that no force will break the national unity and freedom so dearly acquired by the Djibouti people.

Prime Minister Sets Record Straight

Djibouti LA NATION DE DJIBOUTI in French 13 Aug 81 p 3

[Clarification by Prime Minister Barkat Gourad Hamadou]

[Text] The fallacious statements by Ahmed Dini contained in the 14 July edition of LE MONDE gave rise to a clarification by Prime Minister Barkat Gourad Hamadou, a clarification addressed to that same newspaper, which printed the main excerpts in its edition of 9-10 August 1981. For our readers, we are reproducing that clarification in its entirety.

Dear Editor:

The 11,338 issue of LE MONDE, dated 14 July 1981, publishes an article by Philippe Decraene entitled "Ahmed Dini Denounces the Tribalist Policy of President Gouled."

The remarks reported in the article contain so many untruths in so few lines, by a man who unsuccessfully aspires to play the role of "leader of the opposition" in his country, that I am led, as prime minister of the Republic of Djibouti, to ask for space in your columns.

It is not a question of beginning a controversy, but of stating the facts, of which your reporter is well aware in all their complexity, no matter what his previous positions may have been regarding the independence of our country (see his investigation published in LE MONDE of 4 and 5 July 1980 and that of Langellier of 12 June 1981).

Let us say, first of all, that it is normal for an opponent to express his disagreement with the policies of an existing government, whose prime minister is Afar, along with several of its members. This shows the soundness of our young democracy and consequently, that the famous "Afar problem" is not what Dini is trying to create.

However, I cannot fail to respond to the scarcely veiled appeal for French intervention in the choice of our sovereign nation's leaders. This is contrary to our national dignity and to the international morals which President Francois Mitterrand intends to restore in relations between France and the African countries.

A few simple facts give French public opinion a more precise idea of a situation, the aftereffect of colonialism, which the vigor of President Gouled's policies and the support of the great majority of the Djibouti people are making it possible to resolve.

The policy of peace and of Djibouti's neutrality in particular, within the framework of the conflicts now bloodying the Horn of Africa, would not have been crowned with success if the unity of its sons: Somalis, Afars or Arabs, had not cemented the unity of our country. Those who thought that the independence of our country was a "dangerous illusion" may be disappointed. The violent facility of a few did not satisfy their hopes.

The abandonment of Afar territory is the result of colonization and particularly the creation by it of our capital and the railroad, which reduced the regional economic role of Tadjourah and Obock to nothing.

As soon as independence was achieved, President Gouled tried to reverse that movement. The first industrial investment was made in Afar territory. It was a water plant that is already beginning to bear fruit, not for camels, but for the children of men.

What is more, within the framework of the establishment of our policy of democracy and regional development, the north and the south will have new economic activities. Studies and agreements will, in the north, upgrade the mining and energy resources of Lake Assal, organize the protection of the Day Forest and also, within an area of 50 to 100 kilometers, restore green areas and fight the encroachment of the desert. At the Obock port, fishing and thermic activities will be promoted.

It is easier for Dini to shine in cliches than it is to work as our government does for the entire population, without distinctions as to ethnic groups, including his own.

When some have dreamed, led astray by the attraction of the Kalashnikovs and grenades, of extending the misfortunes of regional wars to our emerging nation, Dini made his choice. The government and all the people made theirs. While the former group tried to cut the north off from the south and provoke a tribal confrontation, the government doubled the means of maritime relations (are we responsible for the Assal fault?) and assured civil peace solely through civil jurisdictions, the moderation of the judiciously chosen penalties, the measures of clemency and the releases ordered by President Gouled do justice to the accusations of tyranny and bloody dictatorship that astound those who know our country and the man of peace, moderation and patience which our president is.

It is the unity of our people through all its ethnic groups that enabled Djibouti to take in all those from other countries, whatever their origin, driven by war, who have found shelter in our country. Could France itself have welcomed into its territory the equivalent of 10 percent of its population, as Djibouti has done?

That also does justice to the allegation of the "dam isolating the city of Djibouti." For the sake of history, let us recall that it was set up by Dini himself, then the merciless minister of interior of the colonial government still remembered by the people. President Gouled forbade the dam to continue playing the role of police and segregation that had so sadly fallen to it. The proof: Inside it, the population of the city has doubled. On the outside, Balbala has grown tenfold, when that suburb was periodically razed by the colonial government, and circulation between the zones is free.

It is true that in 4 years, we have not solved the problems of poverty and underdevelopment or, along with them, the overconsumption of Qat and the scourge of prostitution, but it is not enough to speak about these things in Paris and to live off one's land income and parliamentary indemnifications in Djibouti in order to solve them.

One must also plan the fight against speculative increases in prices, improve housing, create jobs and ensure a better distribution of national income within a democratic framework and financial and monetary stability. I hope we can talk about these things in 2 years. Djibouti's political success has surprised many. Its economic and social success will do the same.

In the meantime, our government has tried to satisfy one of the most essential human rights, fortunately forgotten in Europe but terribly pressing in our country: that of having access to drinking water. In 4 years of independence, Djibouti has drilled in the bush and the desert more wells than during 100 years of colonization and they are there to prove, contradicting the lies, that the north has had its share.

For the rest, I refer you to the response of our newspaper LA NATION.

In conclusion, may I tell our French friends: Do not allow yourselves to scorn Africa. It has serious difficulties, but recognize that it deserves better than prejudice. What would have happened to your peace if Djibouti, at the mouth of the Red Sea and the entry to the Indian Ocean, had not known how or been able to resist the solicitations contrary to its policy of neutrality and true nonalignment? It achieved this only through the unity of its people and international cooperation. France's role is extremely important.

It is amidst peace that human rights are built, for they do not come ready-made. Whatever Europe's immense contribution, they remain the result of a constant struggle of peoples, sometimes against their own history. Djibouti, which has placed its foundation and oath under their auspices, is involved in the struggle. It is not enough to be emotionally moved.

DETAILS ON EXPLORATION, EXPLOITATION OF OIL

Wed Oil Activities

Libreville L'UNION in French 18 Jun 81 p 4

[Article by Jean Bilinga: "The Oil Hopes for Ayol II"]

[Text] Minister of State for Mines, Energy and Hydraulic Resources Edouard-Alexis Mbouy-Boutzit granted an interview on Tuesday morning, 16 June, to the president and general director of the Wed Gabon Oil SA company. Mr Mbou Ossamy, director of technical affairs at the ministry, was also present.

The visit being paid by Mr Ichiro Matsumoto coincides with the discovery of indications of oil last month at the Ayol II site, which this Japanese company is exploiting along with ELF [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France] Gabon (operator) in a 70-30 percent partnership.

The first estimates for Ayol II suggest production of 1,082 barrels per day, according to a Tokyo source. This would mean an annual production of 58 to 60,000 tons. The drilling of this sixth Wed Oil well between 10 and 14 May 1981 thus has yielded promising results. However, it will be necessary to await related tests to confirm the profitability of this oil sheet, which is a part of the Assouka concession, and exploitation will not begin until next September or October.

Wed Oil, after acquiring the Assouka prospecting concession in October 1973, made substantial investment efforts. It expects to spend 5.946 trillion CFA francs in 1981 and its overall investment for the 1973-1982 period will come to 14.697 trillion CFA francs, according to the financial official, Mr Tsuguo Onoda.

The initial wells drilled (in Ngole, Loba, Gardon, Nsina and Mouveni) yielded no results. Then luck turned and Ayol II raised hopes.

Another Japanese company, Mitsubishi, is operating in Gabon, exploiting the Baliste concession to the north of the Ayol site, in conjunction with ELF Gabon. The presence of these Japanese companies shows the increasing interest of that country, which is heavily dependent on oil resources, because it consumes 236 million tons annually (4.8 million barrels per day).

Other Companies' Efforts

Libreville L'UNION in French 22 Jun 81 p 4

[Article by Jean Bilinga: "The Tribulations of Amoco Gabon"]

[Text] Oil production in Gabon is experiencing an increasing decline, to judge from the estimates of the hydrocarbons office in Libreville. In fact, the total of 8,894,702 tons produced in 1980 is expected to drop to about 6 million tons in 1981, representing an average daily production of 152,000 barrels.

However, glimpses of light through these cloudy prospects serve to revive the enthusiasm of oilmen. We have discussed the hopes of the Japanese Wed Gabon Oil company (See Thursday, 13 June 1981 issue) concerning the Assouka concession. Today we will comment on the results achieved by the Amoco Gabon Exploration Company at the Inguessi Marine concession.

Let us note, moreover, that a confusion occurred in connection with our earlier article. The daily output of 1,082 barrels per day pertains to Ayol I, discovered in 1979, rather than to Ayol II. Its exploitation will begin in 2 months or so, the relatively long period between discovery and the beginning of operations being due, among other things, to the order placed for a marine platform. As to Ayol II, it proved unproductive. When the drilling encountered a clayey structure this week, the well was abandoned and efforts turned to the next wells--Ayol III, Ayol IV, etc.

Where the Amoco discovery is concerned, the Amoco Gabon Exploration Company (an affiliate of Standard Oil of Indiana) and the Ministry of Mines published simultaneous press releases in Chicago and Libreville last 19 May following a series of final tests completed on 12 May 1981. It appears that a drilling undertaken by the Hudson Bay platform in an area covering 1,391 square km of the Inguessi Marine concession, 86 km to the southeast of Port Gentil, justified the hopes of the prospectors, because well No IMB-4 revealed exploitable quantities of oil.

The measured density of this crude oil is 36° API [American Petroleum Institute], which means crude oil of excellent quality comparable to the Lucina product. The output here, stabilized by means of a 32/64-inch pipe, is 2,100 barrels per day, while the pressure at the wellhead is 970 PSI [pounds per square inch], which should yield some 105,000 tons annually.

Within the same framework, another drilling has been undertaken 6.8 km away from the producing well, in another structure at the point known as IMB-5. This well, being drilled on the same concession, will exceed 1,000 feet in depth. The Inguessi Marine concession has had a checkered history, being held successively by ELF [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France] Gabon and ESSO, which abandoned prospecting after having drilled 16 unproductive wells. Amoco took over the exploration of this vast area, and has achieved relatively rapid success, since the company did not begin operations in Libreville until 2 May.

The name Amoco Gabon Exploration Company in fact covers five companies: Amoco Oil (50 percent), Wintershall (18.5 percent), British Petroleum (15 percent), Lingen (8.25 percent) and Preussag (8.25 percent). Amoco has explored four concessions in Gabon under four different names--Gombe Marine, Omboue Sud Marine, Iguela and Inguessi Marine, in association with other oil companies such as Gulf Gabon, Hispanoil and Gulf Canada.

The discovery at IMB-4 followed ups and downs which cost the company a fortune earlier. In fact, the general director of Amoco, George W. Trump, explained, technicians were working at this well when two serious accidents occurred. The first was a sudden eruption of gas under high pressure (blowout) at a depth of 2,000 feet (600 meters).

Then the tripod of the Hudson Bay platform, one of the "jack-up" type, was damaged by violent submarine currents. It was towed to Port Gentil, where it had to go under repairs which were costly mainly in terms of the suspension of its work--$70,000 a day for a total of 37 days, yielding the astronomical total of 725 million CFA francs! This total includes the cost of work suspension for a helicopter and two logistic support vessels, but did not include the idling land personnel.

We should note in conclusion that 74.5 percent of the output of the well, which will not exceed 5,000 barrels per day, will go to the Gabonese government according to the regulatory provisions, the balance of the crude oil being allocated to the various foreign partners, prorated on the basis of their financial contributions.

SECOND FUEL PRICE INCREASE THIS YEAR ANNOUNCED

Libreville L'UNION in French 15 Jun 81 pp 1, 4

[Excerpt] The prices of various fuels have been increased again, effective today, 15 June 1981, over the whole of the national territory. This is, in fact, according to the minister of economy and finance, a technical adjustment of prices necessitated basically by the sudden recovery on the money market of the American dollar, the currency on which the purchases of crude oil the SOGARA [Gabonese Refining Company] needs to meet our domestic demand for oil products are based.

This development is reflected in an increase of 2.70 percent in the retail price for premium, 2.85 percent for regular and 6.40 percent for gas oil.

It will be recalled that last 10 April fuel prices were already increased by 9 percent as a result of the provisions of Decree No 0043 promulgated by the minister of economy and finance, which has today been revoked. Thus the price of premium in Libreville is going from 180 to 185 francs and gas oil from 93.5 to 99.5 francs. The prices in Port Gentil are the same as in Libreville. In Lambarene, on the other hand, premium is going up from 185 to 191.5 francs, regular gasoline from 179 to 185.5 francs, and gas oil from 102 to 108.5 francs. The price of premium is going from 187 to 193.5 francs in Tchibanga and Makokou, and in the latter locality regular is increasing from 180 to 186.5 and gas oil from 101 to 108.5. In Oyem, premium is going from 188 to 194.5 francs, regular from 181 to 187.5, and gas oil from 102 to 109.5. In Franceville, premium is increasing from 186 to 192.5 francs, regular from 182 to 188.5, and gas oil from 102 to 109.5. In Koulamoutou, premium is going from 186 to 192.5 francs, regular from 181 to 187.5 and gas oil from 101 to 108.5.

UNITED STATES IS CRITICIZED FOR ITS ANGOLAN POLICY

Nairobi TAIFA LEO in Swahili 28 Aug 81 p 2

[Editorial in column "The Voice of the Nation": "South African Brutality"]

[Text] For a long time now South Africa has been trying to destabilize Angola with continued provocatory border incursions.

South Africa has also made use of its Angolan rebel puppets, UNITA (a movement aiming at the total independence of Angola).

But it is now plain that South Africa does not want this type of arrangement. Instead it is bent on achieving its objective unaided. South African Prime Minister P. W. Botha even admitted as much.

As South Africa sends its forces to attack Angola it should remember that the conflict may escalate into a sharp confrontation with Angola. The latter is now on record as saying that it will no longer tolerate such aggression.

This is the first time Angola has issued such a sharply worded warning.

Angolan president Jose Eduardo Dos Santos has already asked the current OAU Chairman President Daniel arap Moi to help end the aggression.

He has also asked for an urgent meeting ot the UN Security Council to debate the issue.

At the same time there are indications he is mobilizing for a bitter struggle.

For a long time South African aggression was played down by other nations that the United States and South Africa misled into believing that UNITA, under Savimbi's leadership, was reputedly the authentic government of Angola.

This is what made Angola decide to bring in Cuban troops for defense assistance.

It is now clear that Dos Santos will use those Cuban troops in the present confrontation, thus sharply escalating the conflict.

A bloody clash could be averted if the Reagon administration would quit encouraging UNITA and South Africa to continue their maneuvering.

Moreover, the large U.S. oil companies operating in Angola belie American claims that the present regime in Angola is not the legitimate representative of the people.

Even some members of the U.S. Congress have said it makes no sense to undermine the Angolan regime.

Despite such criticism and even the risk of a serious outbreak of war, the Reagan administration refuses to budge its stance and have any further dealings with Angola which has stated that the Cuban troops are helping confront the South Africans.

If the United States continues its propaganda aimed against Dos Santos' government, Reagan will be forced to recognize that the nations of the world now know the truth about Angola and are prepared to support it.

Consequently, even if the United States deceitfully declares "it regrets any activities leading to a confrontation in that region," it will not succeed in fooling the world on the issue of Angola.

LONG-TERM VIEW OF KENYA'S ELECTRICITY SUPPLY

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 18 Aug 81 pp 23, 26

[Text]

ELECTRICITY has played and will continue to play a very significant role in the economic and social development of the country. E.A.P.L., which is responsible for the management of electricity supply in the country must strive to provide the high standard of service which is expected of it by the nation.

Electricity is a secondary form of energy converted from primary sources like water-power, oil, geothermal, gas, wood, coal, nuclear, wind-power, biogas, solar energy and other similar sources of energy.

Kenya has no known resources of oil, coal, gas or nuclear energy. It is estimated that known hydro resources (about 800 — 1,000 MW) will be fully exhibited within the next 15 or 20 years. Geothermal is still in its early stages of development and the potential is estimated to be between 170 — 1000 MW. Kenya's various natural resources are depleting rapidly and with the demand of energy growing steadily due to increase in population, higher industrialisation and modernisation of the rural sector of the economy, the country faces an energy crunch which has no easy solution.

The indigenous resources available in the country for the production of electricity will continue to be exploited to the full. However, as the natural energy resources are more scarce than the demand for energy, Kenya will continue to depend partially on imported fuel like oil, coal, gas and in the distant future nuclear; with a result that the cost of energy in whatever form, and whether indigenous or imported, will continue to rise.

Electricity in Relation to other forms of Energy

While no reliable data is available on wood and charcoal consumption in the rural sector, the table extracted from the National Development Plan 1978 — 1983 gives indication of the consumption of electricity in relation to other forms of energy in the modern sector.

	Oil Equivalent (In '000 tons)	Per cent Share
Coal & Coke	36	1%
Oil	2,085	85%
Electricity	339	14%
Total	2,460	100%

As can be seen from the above table, oil, which is largely used in the transport sector, plays a very important role in the modern sector of energy in Kenya. Electricity, however, is likely to play a more significant role during the next 10 to 15 years as more and more hydro and geothermal potential is developed.

Available Source of Primary Energy for Generation of Electricity.

Graph 1 gives the pattern of growth up to the year 2000, and the primary sources of energy which will be developed in producing this electricity. In 1981, about 68 per cent of electricity produced will be from hydro-generation. By 1990, its share will increase to about 90 per cent and then decline to about 50 per cent by the year 2000 as most of the hydro-electric resources will have been exploited. From 1993 onwards, oil or coal, both imported, will play a significant role and towards the end of the century, nuclear energy could become a reality.

Utilisation of Electricity

Graph 2 gives the pattern of electricity growth upto the year 2000 and the way electricity will be utilised for different categories of consumers. It is expected that by the year 2000, 65 per cent of electricity used will be for industry and the rest — 35 per cent domestic and commercial use.

Cost of Electricity

There are basically two elements in the cost of generating electricity:

a) Capital cost of plant and machinery including dams and drilling.

b) Running charges for operation and fuel.

While the cost of generation depends upon the type of, and utilisation of plant, its location and its source of energy, the following table gives an approximate indication of the relative costs of generation for different sources of energy.

FIG.1 DIFFERENT SOURCES OF PRIMARY ENERGY TO MEET THE ELECTRICITY DEMAND (1980 - 2000)

FIG.2. UTILIZATION OF ELECTRICITY INTO DIFFERENT CATEGORIES 198 2000
TOTAL GENERATION
UNITS SOLD LOSSES
COMMERCIAL DOMESTIC OFF PEAK YEAR

	Capital Cost K£/KW	Running Cost including fuel Cts/KWhr	Av. Cost of Generation Cts/KWhr
Hydro	800-1200	5 - 8	35 - 50
Geothermal	1000-1200	8 -12	32 - 45
Thermal (Oil)	400-500	40 - 50	60 - 65
Thermal (Coal)	600-700	25 - 35	55 - 65

As can be seen from the above, Hydro and Geothermal have high capital costs and low running costs, compared to thermal plant using oil or coal. During the past seven or eight years, there has been considerable inflation in the capital costs, and this trend is likely to continue. For example, Gitaru Hydro-electric scheme (140MW) was completed in 1978 at a total cost of about K£48 million. The next hydro-electric project on Tana, Kiambere, which will also have an installed capacity of 140MW is estimated to cost about K£215 million on today's prices, and will cost about K£200 million when completed in 1985/86. The reason for this considerably more cost is not only inflation, but also the remoteness of Kiambere and its less attractive site compared to Gitaru. This trend will continue for all future hydro developments at Tana or elsewhere in Kenya.

The present day cost of electricity for urban, rural and isolated areas is as follows:

Urban,	Interconnected	:	Shs. -/55 per KWHr
Rural,	"	:	Shs. 1/40 per KWHr
Rural,	Isolated	:	Shs. 2/60 per KWHr

It is quite clear from the above table that due to economics of scale, and better utilisation of resources, the cost of electricity in urban areas is much cheaper than in the rural areas.

Role of Electricity in Kenya's Economy

Modern Sector

Provided an industry is not far from the national grid, electricity will continue to provide the most efficient and economic means of motive power for the industry. It is expected, however, that for small-scale industries, direct utilisation of windmills, solar energy and micro-hydro will be made, which perhaps will prove to be the most efficient in the long run.

Consumers in commercial areas use electricity mainly for lighting, refrigeration, air conditioning and some heating. It is a sad reflection on the ingenuity of some architects and engineers, that in a place like Nairobi which enjoys such excellent climate throughout the year, some of the larger buildings in the city centre are designed to use so much artificial lighting and air-conditioning that it leads to wastage of electricity. This is a tendency that must be curbed at the planning stage.

For domestic consumers in the urban areas, electricity has hardly any substitute to provide energy for lighting, refrigeration and radios at home. However, domestic cooking and water heating do have efficient substitutes and the use of gas cooking and solar heating should be encouraged.

Rural Sector

Energy in rural areas is primarily used for:

a) Basic sustenance (cooking, heating and lighting)
b) Commercial and social amenities like hospitals, schools, and trading centres.
c) Economic developments in pumping of water and irrigation, small scale agro. and village industries.

Because of the high cost of supplying electricity in rural areas, it would be desirable if it is primarily used for development purposes. While the basic needs for cooking and heating in the rural areas will be largely met by wood, charcoal, kerosene and to some extent biogas, electricity should play an important role to boost economic development. Electricity in rural areas does not have a high a priority as supply of food, clean water, fuel, shelter, access roads, schools and health centres. Furthermore, alternative sources of light and energy though generally inferior are nevertheless available in the remotest and poorest regions. It is important therefore that before an area is selected for electrification, proper economic cost/benefit analysis is carried out so that electricity when provided is used not merely to meet the social needs, but also to increase productivity and economic wealth in that area.

Conclusion

Kenya has very limited primary energy resources and therefore has to depend on imported fuel for its energy needs. At the same time, it has limited financial resources to meet the energy bill. There is no simple solution to this dilemma, but considerable progress can be made by understanding the energy problem in its right perspective and start developing and managing the indigenous resources in Kenya with good planning, appropriate pricing policy, and proper Government control.

TRADE UNION ELECTIONS TURN TEMPESTUOUS

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 21 Aug 81 pp 14-17

[Text]

THE impression created in Kenya's labour movement at the moment is that the 31 member Central Organisation of Trade Unions (Cotu), whose grip on the organisation of the country's labour force has seldom been challenged, is now threatened with disintegration. And that is not all. It is already being said within trade union circles that the Cotu elections, scheduled to be held at Kisumu's Labour College on September 12, may be cancelled yet again. This is because of the on going exchange between the pro-Cotu administration, the All Workers group, and the Labour Front group. Despite this gloomy picture, the secretary-general of Cotu, Mr. Juma Boy, as well as the registrar of trade unions and the ministry of labour, have agreed that the elections will certainly be held as scheduled.

After the Cotu polls were postponed from May 9 this year by the body's executive board, it seemed that the tension gripping the rival groups shortly before that date had relaxed. There was silence until Boy demanded, early last month, that all affiliate unions should submit lists of the ordinary members they intended to send to the forthcoming Cotu polls. In a letter of July 14, Boy instructed that the lists be submitted to the Cotu headquarters within 11 days to enable him to inform individual members to attend the polls as provided by the Cotu constitution. The following day, Boy wrote to the registrar saying that some unions be disciplined for their reluctance in sending their ordinary delegates list. These were the Kenya Local Government Workers Union, the Kenya Management Staff Association, the Kenya Union of Scientific, Research, Technical and Allied Employees and the Dock Workers Union — all members of the Labour Front.

That was when the lid blew off. Boy's instructions were received grudgingly by the Labour Front who claimed that was not constitutional. When the deadline for the submission of the list expired, only the Dock Workers Union had submitted their list. The union's secretary-general, Mr. Ishmael Yunis, reacted immediately by claiming that he had received the instructions just before the deadline. He claimed then that Boy, whom he had ousted from the union leadership last year, was seeking to bar the Dock Workers Union from participating in the Cotu elections. After the Yunis outburst, other unions in the Labour Front group then spoke, but only after submitting their lists of delegates to Cotu headquarters. Their spokesman was Mr. Walter Adell, the secretary-general of the Kenya Management Staff Association who seemed to have been personally stung by the fact that of his list of five ordinary delegates he had submitted, Boy had deleted one name. Adell, who claimed to be speaking on behalf of the rest, told The Weekly Review that Boy's instructions did not conform with the requirements of the Cotu constitution and were intended to exclude "certain affiliate unions" from participating in the elections. Adell had even suspected that a plot was being hatched to postpone the Cotu elections once again. "It looks clear to me that Boy wishes to raise a constitutional furore and thereby find cause for postponing the elections once again," he said. For some reason, Boy decided not to issue a rejoinder contrary to expectations.

The ministry of labour and the registrar of trade unions seem to have decided to keep out of the constitutional debate between Boy and the Labour Front group. At the end of last month, the labour commissioner, Mr. J. M. Mutugi, said that the registrar was the ideal arbitrator over the issue. And then, an official in the office of the registrar said he "did not see anything wrong" with Boy's instructions. But in spite of this uncertainty over the legality of Boy's instructions, everything appeared to go into a calm with reports that Yunis had finally submitted his list, the matter seemed to have reached a conclusive end.

After a pause of several days, it was the pro-Boy, All Workers Group's steering committee, which shattered the calm. The committee errupted just after the Kenya Engineering Workers Union completed its elections and asserted that the Labour Front was planning to sabotage the forthcoming Cotu polls. The claim was made at a press conference on Wednesday last week by the committee chairman, Mr. Ali Mohamed, who recently ousted Nairobi's deputy mayor, Councillor Chadwick Adongo from the leadership of the Union of Posts and Telecommunications Employees. The claim must have been prompted by the constitutional tussle between Boy and the Labour Front. It was even suggested that the presence of the steering committee, over the Boy/Labour Front group tussle, was a strategy planned by Boy. Mohammed's claim was given weight by the presence at the press conference of Mr. Ochola Ogaye Mak'Anyengo of the Railways and Harbours Union, Mr. John Malii of the Transport and Allied Workers Union and Mr. Jacob Ochino who is Boy's deputy in the Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers Union.

These claims provoked the Labour Front group, as expected, although it had been rumoured that the Labour Front group had been cautioned by the minister for labour, Mr. Titus Mbathi, not to engage in verbal exchanges. Two days later, Adell made a response on behalf of his group, which was quite tactfull. He preached industrial peace which he claimed the steering committee was attempting to mar. But he hastened to add that the committee was in effect "a marriage of convenience" which had a specific mission to accomplish. On Monday this week, Mohamed and his associates decided not to let go Adell's remarks. This time the committee claimed that they had the support of some 18 affiliate unions and they are currently working on a list of candidates they intend to support for Cotu seats.

As this exchange continues, particularly when the steering committee releases the list of their chosen candidates on September 4 as promised, there is as yet no sign that the Cotu polls will be postponed once again. The main reasons for the postponement of the polls last May was that some five unions had not completed their elections and that some unions, particularly the Labour Front group, were reluctant to submit the lists of their ordinary delegates. However, Cotu headquarters at the moment says that all the unions have presented their respective lists of ordinary members for the polls. On the other hand, although the Kenya Engineering Workers Union held its national elections in Mombasa on August 9, Mr. Charles Mboya, the former general secretary of the union, is challenging the election of the new general secretary, Mr. Justus Mulei, but the ministry of labour and Cotu feel that that is not sufficient reason to postpone the elections. Mutugi is certain that the polls will be held.

For Boy, it does not seem likely that he will have the elections postponed. This is because, first, there is mounting pressure within and outside Cotu to hold the elections because it is generally believed that proper elections have not been held since 1972. The elections of 1975 were only those of the secretariat staff while last year the elections were postponed twice and this year once. Second, the High Court case filed by by Mr. G.K. Gachuuru against last year's election of Boy and Ochino in the Kenya Petroleum Oil Workers Union must have been nightmares for Boy. It therefore must have come as a relief when the court ruled that the case could not be heard before the Cotu polls as had been requested by Gachuuru. Before the court ruling on Monday this week, it was rumoured in trade union circles that if the court had heard the case and then declared the elections of Boy and Ochino null and void, Boy would have faced certain constitutional barriers in his candidacy for the polls.

Boy's associates are certainly prepared for opposition from the Labour Front group during the forthcoming polls and especially from Mr. James Karebe, the general secretary of the Kenya Local Government Workers Union, whom they have chosen as a candidate for the top post of secretary-general. The group has still to announce the rest of the lineup for the Cotu polls but trade union insiders say that except for Karebe, the rest may be satisfied with positions in the Cotu executive board or other less prominent posts.

One other cloud, however, hangs on the horizon of Boy and his group. The line-up of Mak'Anyengo, Ochino, Mulei and Mohamed may not wish to support Boy without getting back dividends. Then there is also the general secretary of the Amalgamated Union of Kenya Metal Workers, Mr. Fred Omido, who is also Cotu's chairman but has not made clear his intentions for the polls. Most likely, he may either choose to form an alliance with the Labour Front or form an individual grouping. Should he decide to do the latter, he will be at odds in trying to re-capture his seat. As for the Boy group, it is unlikely that they will accept Omido, mainly because Omido supported Mr. Elijah Odera to oppose Boy in the petroleum oil workers union last year after Boy had been ousted by Yunis and was frantically windowshopping for a union to represent.

As for the rest of Boy's associates, a cloud of uncertainty looms over the posts they wish to get although Mohamed says that the steering committee would amicably agree on who gets what. Mulei, for instance, has been a close associate of Boy for many years, and quite often lately he has acted in Boy's post when the latter is away. Mulei therefore has been described as the probable successor to Boy in the light of talk that Boy may soon get some additional government responsibilities. Then there is Mohamed, who since ousting Adongo and defecting from the Labour Front group, has been in the forefront of the All Workers Group. The extraordinary vigour with which he has since supported Boy has left no doubt at all that he has nothing to do with the Labour Front group. For this, Mohamed must expect some reward. What he is said to have an eye on is to be Boy's deputy.

Mak'Anyengo too, a veteran trade unionist, must be expecting some reward not more so much because he has been a useful reinforcement in Boy's team, but because he has devoted most of his public life to trade unionism. While last year, just prior to his election to the Railway and Harbours Union, he was sure that he had no interest in Cotu posts, Mak'Anyengo had a different story this week. "As an old serving trade unionist, I would offer to serve Cotu. . . I leave it to my group to consider what capacity I can serve Cotu best," he said. It seems very likely that Mak'Anyengo would not settle for anything lower than the post of deputy secretary general. But, probably the oddest personal casualty of this turnabout in the pro-Boy group is Ochino: He stood down in favour of Boy in the elections of the petroleum oil workers union and contented himself as Boy's deputy reportedly in anticipation of becoming Boy's deputy in Cotu. However, now the field is not quite as open as he would have liked it to be.

Mr. Were Dibo Ogutu, the general secretary of the Kenya Chemical Workers Union, may also need the assistance of the Labour Front group if he is to retain his post of treasurer-general in Cotu. Ogutu has kept a low profile in Cotu rivalries but he briefly broke his silence after Boy unsuccessfully attempted to oust him. That incident could have dealt the last straw in whatever relationship Boy and Ogutu had and it would be little wonder if some of the Boy associates are not eyeing Ogutu's Cotu post. There is even talk within trade union circles that Ochino, who unsuccessfully challenged Ogutu in the elections of the Kenya Chemical Workers Union early this year, may be the All Workers Group candidate for the post of treasurer-general in the Cotu polls. One likely barrier for Ochino, however, is that there is an established tradition in Cotu that only principal officers of the affiliate unions (chairman, secretary-general and treasurer) are usually elected to Cotu posts. Should the majority of the delegates at the Cotu polls go by this, then it will have to be another long wait for Ochino.

Even as many in Cotu contend that rivalry in Cotu is a catching disease, and that an epidemic is raging in Cotu now, Mohamed does not see that rivalry surfacing within the All Workers Group. Mohamed, like the rest of his associates, is non-commital about his personal ambitions in Cotu, but is certain that there will be a satisfactory selection for respective candidancy in his group. "We do not have anybody here (All Workers Group) who is ambitious. . . We will sort out everything fine," he said this week. Whatever the case may be, the Cotu elections, if they take place after nearly ten years, may come up with suprises.

POLICE DISPERSE STRIKING MILL WORKERS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 19 Aug 81 pp 1, 24

[Article by Gideon Mulaki]

[Text]

RIOT police yesterday dispersed over 1,500 striking workers of four mills in Kikuyu.

Earlier, the workers had greeted Labour officials from Kiambu with chants of "No money, no work," as they asked the employees to resume work.

The workers are claiming that they are being ill-treated and victimised by the managements of Steel Rolling Mills, Steel Fasteners, Steel Foundry and S. Industrial Factories.

They alleged that one of the directors even slapped a shopsteward and that some of the workers have had their "fingers chopped off by machines and nobody bothers about them".

The firms are said to be interrelated and some of the directors are common to all four mills which are situated next to each other.

The managing director of the four firms, Mr. R. D. Patel, told the Nation the workers were sacked because the strike was illegal.

The strike began on Monday when negotiations between the management, the Labour Department and the workers were deadlocked. The workers' slogan was: "No better treatment and money, no services."

Mr. Patel said the trouble started when an employee was warned against coming to duty drunk. But the matter, he added, was resolved by Monday evening.

He said the employees had agreed to resume work at 5 p.m. in the presence of Labour officials. He said he was surprised when the strike continued yesterday.

Mr. Patel said the workers had no dispute with the companies but with their union, the Kenya Engineering Workers' Union. But he did not say what the dispute with the union was about.

He warned: "I am prepared to close the company. We have to get new people and whoever wants any job, even the former employees, have to apply anew."

Mr. Ernest Lumula, a shopsteward, said a worker was summarily dismissed on Monday after being accused of drunkenness and coming to duty late.

He said there was "some misunderstanding" between the shopstewards and Mr. Patel as a result of which Mr. Patel slapped one of them and turned them out of his office.

But Mr. Patel denied slapping a shopsteward. But he agreed there had been a misunderstanding which resulted in some pushing.

Mr. Lumula said the company was paying the workers only 250/- per month and a house allowance of 30/-.

"We want at least 900/- plus house allowance of 200/- per month to go back," he said amid cheers from the striking workers.

WIDE SALARY GAP EXISTS BETWEEN CITIZENS, NONCITIZENS

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 12 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Kul Bhushan: "Salary Gap Is All Too Big in Big Business!"]

[Text]

A WIDE GAP exists between the salaries of the citizen and non-citizen business executives in Nairobi. Non-citizens usually get 50 per cent more than citizen executives.

A managing director of a large Nairobi company gets an average salary of Shs. 22,275 per month. If fringe benefits are added, this figure is swelled to nearly Shs. 24,000.

However, a Kenya citizen managing director is normally paid only Shs. 16,400 per month as basic salary while a non-citizen gets Shs. 25,300 per month.

These figures were published yesterday, based on a 1981 survey of salaries and fringe benefits for Nairobi by International Business Consultants Limited.

The data was provided by 68 Nairobi companies on 604 job holders and covers the salaries and benefits to top level manpower in the private sector.

The average salary of a chief accountant is Shs. 11,133. However, a citizen chief accountant gets Shs. 9,725 while a non-citizen chief accountant gets Shs. 15,215 — a difference of nearly Shs. 5,500.

The fringe benefits available to managing directors include full use of a company car or car allowance, housing allowance, pension scheme, medical scheme, personal accident insurance, domestic servants, a driver, furnished house, club subscriptions, entertainment allowance, education allowance, leave allowance and telephone, water and electricity bills.

The difference between the average salary of a citizen and a non-citizen managing director is Shs. 8,900.

A sales manager gets an average salary of Shs. 11,565 per month — but while a citizen sales manager is paid Shs. 9,905 his non-citizen colleague ges shs. 15,655 — or 58 per cent more than the citizen.

On average the difference in salaries of general managers is 24 per cent, but the 'salary gap' between a citizen and non-citizen company secretary is more than 100 per cent, which means that a non-citizen company secretary earns more than double the amount earned by a citizen company secretary.

The citizen gets a basic salary of Shs. 9,645 while the estimated basic salary of a non-citizen company secretary is Shs. 20,000 per month.

Non-citizen heads of research and development departments of big companies also get nearly double the salaries paid to citizens.

A statement by Inbucon, who conducted the survey, said a good deal of uncertainty was found on the question of senior staff remuneration levels. At a time when the Kenya economy is in a period of consolidation, and inflation is having its effects, it is essential that companies have a sound basis for reviewing their salary policies, the statement said.

NAIROBI CRIME SAID NOT AIMED SPECIFICALLY AT AMERICANS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 20 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Still Safer Than New York"]

[Text]

READERS of the International Herald Tribune in Kenya must be scared to death, particularly if they happen to be Americans. This is because the newspaper's issue of August 17 carried a story that all but says there is a crime syndicate in Nairobi which has Americans as its sole targets.

The story had an American peg, to use the trade jargon. An American woman journalist covering the United Nations Conference on New and Renewable Sources of Energy was shot during a robbery and died later. Like all deaths of human beings in the hands of others, the death was a sad one.

In an apparent effort to make the story of more interest to Americans, the paper's correspondent accumulated some figures on crime against Americans in Kenya. A US Embassy spokesman was quoted as saying that "there had been a significant increase in violent crime against Americans here... with 51 cases reported since November". In addition, the homes of 17 embassy officials have been burglarised, presumably during that period.

But that is not all. Four Americans have been killed previously, presumably since Americans started visiting or living in Kenya. And even plain living appears extremely hazardous for Americans, particularly embassy officials. They have night watchmen, steel gates and steel grates on the door of their bedrooms. They appear to survive only by sleeping in mini-fortresses.

That we have our share of crime in Nairobi and indeed in Kenya is a fact. That we are fighting it as vehemently as any country could is also a fact. However, that only members of one nationality are targets of crime is nonsense. That anyone, particularly a journalist, should even insinuate so is, as Americans would say, a lot of bull....

Anyone who has ever ridden the New York subway at ten in the morning or walked the streets of Washington after dark should know that it is still safer to walk the streets of Nairobi, even after midnight. Especially if you are American.

THOUSANDS OF WORKERS LAID OFF BY MINISTRY OF WATER DEVELOPMENT

[Article by Irungu Ndirangu]

[Text]

THE Ministry of Water Development has started sacking thousands of casual workers all over Kenya.

Yesterday, 150 workers in Nairobi took their letters of termination from the Ministry headquarters. And many more are likely to be dismissed for not accepting the letters despite warnings.

In Murang'a, the services of 163 workers were terminated yesterday. Last week, the Ministry had sacked 500 casual workers in Kisumu. It is understood that so far about 2,000 workers all over the country have been sacked.

Sources told the NATION the exercise was nationwide and that several hundred more workers would be affected.

The main reason given for the sackings are inadequate funds. Many of the sacked workers have not been paid their salaries for July and August.

Work at the Ministry's Nairobi headquarters came to a total standstill yesterday morning as nearly 200 casuals were asked to stop work and receive termination letters.

Anticipating protest, the administration had already called riot police who were on guard, with a senior police officer repeatedly warning: "Get your letters and if you have questions go to the personnel officers individually."

But tension rose between the workers and the personnel officers present outside Maji House to serve the letters.

The police officer, however, warned: "We shall disperse you if you become disorderly." Pointing at one worker, he added: "As soon as you become disorderly . . . you could sleep in the cells."

Some workers then declined to enter the compound, saying: "Tuingie tuuawe? (Do we go in to be killed?)"

Chief Personnel Officer Phares Rutere then asked Under Secretary L.C.T. Dena to inform the workers of the purpose of the gathering.

Mr. Dena said the Ministry had found it difficult to pay the workers their July and August salaries because of financial stringency.

He warned the workers that anyone who did not accept the termination letter would be deemed to have deserted his job. He asked each worker to sign a copy of the letter and return two copies to the Ministry.

The Minister for Water Development, Mr. Moses Mudavadi, was yesterday not available for comment on these developments.

CHINESE CULTURAL DELEGATION--A Chinese cultural delegation arrived in Kenya at the weekend. The six-man delegation is led by an Assistant Minister in charge of cultural relations with foreign countries, Mr. Wang Zang Fang. Among the members of the delegation are the director of the African department, Mr. Ge Shengping, director of the general research office, Mr. Li Huiqiang, and divisional chief of African department, Mr. Huang Qiad. Those who met the delegation included an Assistant Minister for Culture and Social Services Mr. Jackson Kalweo, the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry Mr. Joseph Muliro, Director of Culture James Kangwana and the Chinese Charge D'Affaires in Kenya. The delegation will be in Kenya for a few days. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 18 Aug 81 p 14]

SUGAR SALES BOYCOTT--Wholesale traders in Coast Province, particularly Kilifi and Lamu, have threatened to boycott the selling of sugar in their shops unless urgent measures are taken to review the profit on the commodity which is said to have gone down by more than 40 per cent. This warning was issued yesterday during a meeting of wholesalers at the Kenya National Chamber of Commerce boardroom under the chairmanship of Coun. J. Gasper Valele who is also the branch Vice-Chairman. The wholesalers complained that the costs of petrol and lorry hires had risen and that this left the wholesalers with no increase in profits. They complained that the Kenya National Trading Corporation (K.N.T.C.) had only two depots in the province making it impossible for wholesalers in Malindi, Kilifi and Lamu to buy sugar in Mombasa and still show a profit. It is high time the K.N.T.C. established depots in all districts of the province to enable the traders to deliver the commodities at cheaper transportation charges, they said. The members also complained that some manufacturers were selling certain items in quotas which cost as much as Shs. 500,000 and no trader was allowed to buy such quotas in half. The traders felt this was an implicit way of the manufacturers favouring the well-established wholesalers and consequently discouraging small traders who cannot afford such high sums of money. The traders said some depots had a system of loading and off-loading which forced them to use the men around the depot. They were charged seventy five cents for every loaded bag and 50 cents for offloading. The wholesalers alleged that this system further reduced their profit margin. INTEREST RATES UP--The Housing Finance Company of Kenya (H.F.C.K.) has increased its interest rate on mortgages from 12 per cent to 14 per cent per annum with effect from October 17, this year. In a letter sent to its clients, the H.F.C.K. said "subsequent to the mandatory increase in the rates of interest payable on deposits announced in the budget speech last June, it has become necessary to increase the rate of interest chargeable on your mortgage account from 12 to 14 per cent per annum." The company, however, gives concession to those staying in their own houses who will have to pay 13 per cent on their mortgages. The H.F.C.K. and other housing finance companies increased their interest rates to 12 per cent less than a year ago. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 14 Aug 81 p 5]

FOURTH UNIDO CONFERENCE--Kenya will host the fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO) in 1983, the Minister for Industry, Dr. Munyua Waiyaki has disclosed. Dr. Waiyaki, who was welcoming the Executive Director of UNIDO, Dr. Abdel Rahman Khan, also disclosed that the Kenya Government has approved the ratification and signing of the UNIDO Constitution. Dr. Khan said that the two moves by the Kenya Government were very significant and they will go a long way in strengthening UNIDO. In a speech read for Dr. Waiyaki by an Assistant Minister for Industry, Mr. Henry Wariithi, the Minister said that the technical assistance UNIDO provided Kenya was in form of technical expertise and training of national staff. "We do appreciate this assistance, and request that your organisation continues to help us in other areas which we have already lodged with you", Dr. Waiyaki said. He said that the Government had already requested UNIDO to assist the Ministry of Industry in carrying out increased responsibility in a number of areas since the creation of the ministry a year ago. Major technical assistance to Kenya by UNIDO include: 1980-83 programme to cover Industrial Promotion department costing US $3 million assistance to the Kenya Industrial Estates, the National Agricultural Chemical and Fertilizer Corporation, and to the Industrial Research and Consultancy Unit of the University of Nairobi. Dr. Waiyaki said that besides Kenya being a member of UNIDO, she was also elected to the Industrial Development Board at the Third General Conference in New Delhi in 1980. He added that although Kenya had no permanent representative at UNIDO headquarters in Vienna, "we hope that we shall be able to play a role in the deliberations of the Board". Dr. Khan pledged to help Kenya as much as possible. [By David Njagi] [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 13 Aug 81 p 7]

DIESEL SHORTAGE--The shortage of diesel continues. While some Nairobi petrol stations said they got inadequate supplies, others, particularly upcountry ones, said they had run out of diesel. Paraffin was also reported to be in short supply. But Energy Minister John Okwanyo said he could not comment on the situation yet. "We have been very busy at the energy conference here and it is very difficult for me to assess the situation", Mr. Okwanyo said from his Kenyatta International Conference Centre office. The general manager of Kenya Shell, Mr. Nick Muriuki, said he did not think the situation was so serious. "Personally, I have no case where any farmer or transporter is saying he cannot operate because of lack of diesel", Mr. Muriuki said. "Let us not create a situation where people think there is a crisis or you will have hoarding," he added. A NATION survey, however, revealed that several sectors of the economy were now starting to feel the pinch of the shortage. With the exception of large transport companies, which normally buy diesel in bulk, many transporters said they were affected by the shortage. "All those trailers standing there are stranded because there is no diesel," said a woman who runs a petrol station. Several trailers had come all the way from Kigali, Rwanda, to buy diesel. EDUCATION MINISTRY TERMS TEACHERS' STRIKE 'IRRESPONSIBLE'

AB070724 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 0625 GMT 7 Sep 81

[Text] The Education Ministry has described the decision by MCSS [Monrovia Consolidated School System] teachers to go on strike today as unjustified and highly irresponsible. The ministry said the accusation that teachers are not taken seriously by the government is baseless.

In a release yesterday evening, the ministry noted that since the revolution, the majority of public schools teachers have had salary increments of over 100 percent as compared with the low salaries teachers were making before the coup. The release added that since the coup, the minimum salary has become $200. During this fiscal year, the government has allocated $3.1 million to increase the salaries of teachers up to $250 which is the minimum. The release further said that fiscal increment for 1981-1982 would benefit about 80 percent of public school teachers.

The Education Ministry said the government has a high regard for its teachers and as demonstration of this has allowed salary increments for only teachers and nurses this fiscal year. It is therefore impossible at the moment to give across-the-board increments due to the difficult financial situation.

The release said any teacher who does not turn up for work today, Monday September 7, will not receive his or her salary and will be dismissed at once.

Meanwhile, the superintendent of the MCSS, principals and officials of the education ministry have been instructed to inspect all public schools today and see whether any teacher is absent. Those absent will be fired. The ministry noted that the MCSS teachers' association does not represent the public school teachers of Liberia and that schools will be open today and classes would be held as usual.

POLICE DIRECTOR WARNS PRESS AGAINST SENSATIONALISM

AB061020 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 1600 GMT 5 Sep 81

[Excerpt] The national police director, Mr J. Y. Myers, today warned local newspaper publishers, especially the MIRROR newspaper, against sensational reporting with conflicting headlines. Director Myers was reacting to the front page headline, Police Director in Big Trouble, published today by the MIRROR newspaper.

He declared further that he was in no way personally connected with the story which, according to the MIRROR, involved the chief of Monrovia city police concerning a $16,700 counterfeit case. Director Myers also recalled that when the same city police chief was removed from his post recently, the MIRROR newspaper published a sensational headline, Police Director Fired, that created public concern about the fate of the national police director. Director Myers described the MIRROR's style of sensationally conflicting headlines as a means of selling its publication fast.

He also recalled recent warnings to the local press by the minister of information and other authorities against sensationalizing their reporting as a means of improving their marketing chances. Director Myers warned that if the MIRROR newspaper repeated its sensational conflicting and embarrassing publications, creating negative public concern about his activities as national police director, he would institute a tougher measure against the publishers of the paper. He also warned other publishers against copying the embarrassing style of the MIRROR.

NEW GOVERNMENT PAY SCALE GOES INTO EFFECT

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 18 Aug 81 pp 1, 6

[Article by J. M. Cassell]

[Text] A pay hike of $20.50 goes into effect this month for all civil servants who were earning $200.00 prior to the April 12 Revolution.

This new salary structure excludes those already benefitting from the PRC's minimum $200.00 a month salary adjustment which took effect within the 1979-80 fiscal budget.

The increment, says the Deputy Director of the Budget Bureau, Mr. James E. Collingwood, is an attempt at distinguishing a white collar worker who is earning $200.00, from a yard boy earning the same amount.

Director Collingwood who made the disclosure during an exclusive interview Monday, said there is a serious morale problem between clerical groups and other employees of lower status (messengers, drivers, and yard boys) because the salaries of these two groups of government workers are the same.

With much sensitivity towards this issue, he said the Government of Liberia decided that the salaries of those who were earning $200.00 and did not benefit from the salary adjustment, be given a mark of distinction from their co-worker of lower status to offset this morale problem.

The new salary structure does not affect civil servants earning more than $200.00, Collingwood said.

However, the Director said any agency which adjusts salaries of employees earning more than $200.00 "would have to do this within their own financial means."

Mr. Collingwood said although the government is doing its utmost for civil servants, however, it would have to conform to the directives set by the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

The directives from the IMF calls for prudence in government's spending, he said.

OFFICIAL DECLARES AIRPORTS SAFE

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Aug 81 p 8

[Article by J. M. Cassell]

[Text] Despite criticisms from officials of Air Liberia on the bad state of the nation's runways, a spokesman of the Liberia Domestic Airport Agency, a national airport maintenance office, says all airstrips upkept by his agency are "reasonably safe."

LDAA's Manager E. Cosby Sherman said the allegations by officials of Air Liberia that the nation's dilapidated runways contributed to defects on the HS 748 aircraft was "quite surprising."

The allegation against the management of the Liberian Domestic Airport Agency was made by the management of Air Liberia at a press conference last week.

But countering the assertions in an interview Wednesday, Mr. Sherman said the management of Air Liberia should know that the "wear and tear of any airline is inevitable."

"We would hate for anyone to come out and say that we are the cause of the wear and tear of their airlines, when they should know that such a thing is inevitable," Mr. Sherman said.

At present, he said, nearly all airstrips in this country are made of laterite which during the rainy season "at times go bad." To add to this, he said heavy equipment such as bulldozers and caterpillars are used on these runways "and when you have a plane weighing 117,500 pounds as the 748, pounding on a little runway, you have go to have problems. Probably not of the proportion which Air Liberia's Management claims," he implied.

LDAA's Chief of Airport Services and Aerodome Technician, Charles B. Cummings, Jr., who usually commutes to the various counties, added that of the four major airstrips in the country (Zwedru, Greenville, Harper, Voinjama), the runways in Zwedru and Voinjama are in perfect condition while those in Harper and Greenville need repairs.

According to Manager Sherman, the LDAA is operating on an airport maintenance budget of $42,000 which is $2,000 more than last year's $40,000.

This, he said, "is a far cry from the anticipated $12 million proposed in 1979." The agency up to now has not received response to that proposal, he said.

Mr. Sherman said the $12 million was intended to pursue a four-year airstrip development program.

NEW RANKING OFFICIALS NAMED

Defense Staff Director

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] The new Director of Staff of the Armed Forces of Liberia, Brigadier General Robert Saye was commissioned Wednesday, by Defense Minister Major General Albert Karpeh on behalf of Commander-In-Chief Samuel Kanyon Doe.

The ceremony was performed during a reception hosted by the staff of the Defense Ministry for two out-going officials of the Ministry.

Brigadier General Joseph Farngalo, former Director of Staff, now assumed a new position as Nimba County Superintendent while Colonel Edward Sackor, former Deputy Minister for Operation, takes up a new portfolio as Minister of Local Government.

Minister Karpeh admonished Brigadier General Saye to perform his duties with loyalty and commitment, and urged the two out-going officials of the Ministry to be responsible and sincere in the discharge of their duties.

The Director of Staff Brigadier General Saye thanked Head of State Doe for his preferment and said he accepted his new position as a challenge, and promised to serve with dedication to meet the expectation of the Liberian people.

The two out-going officials, Brigadier General Farngalo and Colonel Sackor expressed regret for leaving the Defense Ministry, and assured that they would continue to work in the interest of the Liberian people.--LINA.

Health Minister

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The Head of State and C-I-C Samuel K. Doe has appointed a new Minister of Health and Social Welfare.

She is Mrs. Martha Sendolo-Belleh from Nimba County.

According to an Executive Mansion release issued here Monday, her appointment takes immediate effect.

Mrs. Belleh succeeds Dr. Kate Bryant who requested the PRC permission to retire from the position due to "unstable health condition".

Mrs. Belleh was Directress of the Nursing Division at Cuttington University College in Suacoco, Bong County, before her appointment.

She holds a B.Sc. Degree in Nursing from Cuttington, a Master's in Public Health Administration from Case Western Reserve University, and a certificate from the Ghana Institute of Public Administration.

Dr. Bryant's request for retirement was contained in a letter to Chairman Doe, dated July 20, in which she thanked the Chairman and PRC for the opportunity afforded her to serve in the government since the revolution.

Delay in acceptance of Dr. Bryant's request was motivated by the Council's desire to replace Dr. Bryant with another female, according to the release.

In a letter to Dr. Bryant, C-I-C Doe said, "please accept our appreciation for the invaluable contributions you made to our revolution".

Deputy Speaker

OPR OFFICIAL PREDICTS ELECTION VICTORY

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 13 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] Responding to an invitation from the Organization of the Rodrigues People (OPR), over 100 Rodrigans attended a training meeting yesterday at which Serge Clair and France Felicite explained to Rodrigans living in Mauritius the situation prevailing on the island and provided them with political, social and economic information. The PMSD was named as mainly responsible for the unhealthy political situation that exists and the government was blamed for the deterioration in the social and economic situation.

Felicite, who will be on the list with Serge Clair in Rodrigues for the coming general elections, first of all outlined the role of the OPR which, according to him, is not a political party in the conventional sense of the term, but an organization that wants to encourage Rodrigans "to return to their roots and regain their own identity." The OPR wants to restore their sense of patriotism, which was becoming blurred at one time because of the "paternalistic policy" preached by the PMSD.

"The relentless struggle waged by Serge Clair for 5 years is beginning to bear fruit," Felicite said. The Rodrigans now understand that they must first of all rely on their own resources and not solely on Mauritius. A number of Rodrigans have returned home after the awareness training of Serge Clair.

Felicite then pointed out the contradictions existing between the way in which the government sees things in Rodrigues and reality as lived by the Rodrigues people. He quoted the journal PERSPECTIVE, a publication of the Ministry of Information that speaks of the construction of certain roads, while the newspaper LE RODRIGUAIS ceaselessly demands that the roads be repaired. Another example cited by Felicite: The government speaks of the establishment of two Junior Secondary Schools on the island, while they are in fact two old warehouses turned into schools that give only 3 hours of instruction a day.

For his part, Clair evoked the "campaign of fear" waged by the PMSD among the Rodrigues people since 1967. The Mauritians must not condemn Rodrigans if the latter voted for the PMSD in 1976. If they did so, it was because they were poorly informed and the PMSD deliberately blocked all information. For years, the PMSD kept the Rodrigues people in ignorance in order to better exploit them at the time of the elections, the leaders of the OPR said.

Clair also emphasized the "campaign of lies" waged by the PMSD against the OPR on the island. Instead of restoring the Rodrigans' pride, the PMSD ceaselessly repeats at all meetings that its representatives are going to seek foreign aid to help the Rodrigues people live.

Going on to the proposed secession of the PMSD, Clair said that the party "has never truly known what independence means to a nation."

Along another line of ideas, Clair denied that there is any anti-Mauritian feeling on Rodrigues. Naturally, the Rodrigans have a grudge against some Mauritian officials who take advantage of their power, but that feeling is not general and the OPR is waging a campaign to make the Rodrigans understand that they must not judge the Mauritians as a whole based on the behavior of a few officials or of the PMSD. He explained that several steps had been taken with the prime minister and other ministries in order to have Mauritian officials whose behavior on Rodrigues leaves something to be desired replaced, but each time, there has been political intervention.

Clair then gave documented information on agricultural production, the main factor responsible for the deficit in the trade balance between the two islands. Here again, it is the government that is responsible, he said, for even after the drought, the authorities did not see fit to free Rodrigans who had been hired as relief workers. For its part, the PMSD encourages Rodrigans to be satisfied with unproductive work and to pocket a wage of 700 rupees as relief workers, when they should have made themselves useful by working the land or by engaging in livestock raising.

Clair concluded by expressing his firm conviction of an OPR victory in the coming general elections, for the Rodrigans have understood that the PMSD "does not work to advance the people of Rodrigues."

Nothing will help it this time because many PMSD followers now support the cause of the OPR, which is to ensure the development of Rodrigues, not independently of Mauritius, but in a complementary fashion, Clair concluded.

BRITISH REFUSAL TO MEET ILOIS' COMPENSATION DEMANDS EXAMINED

Purryag Criticizes British Attitude

Port Louis THE NATION in French 6 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Great Britain's refusal to grant the Ilois [Islanders] equitable compensation has not only led to the breakup of the London conference, but given rise to a strong reaction from Kailash Purryag, head of the Mauritian delegation.

Meeting with the press, the minister of social security revealed that he had refused to sign a joint declaration because the British authorities had decided, even going to the negotiating table, not to modify the offer of 1.25 million pounds (20.3 million rupees), content to add social aid amounting to 300,000 pounds (about 4.8 million rupees). "We were treated in a cavalier manner," Purryag said.

The minister told foreign journalists of the Ilois' living conditions. "In one case, 31 persons are living in the same room and in another, a family has taken shelter in a goat shed. The problem is therefore not political, but humanitarian."

The British have evoked economic difficulties, but the minister emphasized that the situation of the Ilois was certainly worse.

It will be remembered that Purryag had demanded the sum of 8 million pounds (about 130 million rupees) in order to enable each family to have decent housing. Moreover, the minister reminded the British that they were responsible for compensating the some 1,200 persons who were "illegally and inhumanly displaced" between 1965 and 1973 and that the surrender took place when Mauritius was still a colony.

World Opinion

The Mauritian delegation hinted, according to REUTER, that the matter will be brought up at the Commonwealth conference, in the United Nations and the OAU.

In a dispatch from Paris, AFP hac announced that Mauritians residing in France have set up an international solidarity committee, Diego Garcia-France, in order to support the fight waged by the former inhabitants of that island and the demand for dismantlement of the American military base established there.

Duval Expects Help From Courts

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 8 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] It is henceforth with the Americans that the prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, proposes to discuss financial aid for the rehabilitation of the Ilois. He reportedly hinted as much to his aides following his return from Paris, commenting on the failure of the London negotiations between the Purryag mission and British officials. The prime minister will therefore make the matter one of the main topics of discussion with the American Government during his coming visit to Washington in October.

While, for the government and the MMM/PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement-Malagasy Socialist Party] opposition, the Ilois problem is mainly a political one to be solved by diplomatic means, this is not the feeling of Sir Gaetan Duval, leader of the PMSD, who believes that the case will be won or lost in the courts.

Commenting on the failure of the London negotiations, the leader of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] told LE MAURICIEN yesterday that he was "not at all surprised" because the members of the delegation should have known, in his opinion, that the British Government was not willing to offer more money as a result of the Venkatessen vs The Queen case in which Venkatessen, an Ilois, is demanding compensation from the British Government for being removed from the Chagos Archipelago.

The case was brought before the court by Bernard Sheridan, a British solicitor, and Sir Gaetan Duval. It was for the purpose of getting out of the trial that Great Britain agreed to give the Ilois compensation, through Sheridan, the leader of the PMSD believes. "We must go ahead with the trial, which is completely valid," he says, "for we can establish that the Ilois are of British nationality and were 'thrown' into Mauritius."

In addition, Sir Gaetan Duval holds the MMM responsible for the fact that the trial has not yet been heard. He recalls that Sheridan, who came to Mauritius to make an investigation into the Ilois case in connection with the proceedings, was taken aside by Kader Bhayat, Michel and Gerard, representatives of the MMM, who took his documents from him. "The responsibility for the failure therefore belongs to them and the Ilois must have an accounting from them," Sir Gaetan says.

For the leader of the PMSD, the London affair is "a sad drama being played out on the backs of the Ilois" and the taxpayers. The MMM does not take it seriously, Sir Gaetan Believes, for one cannot seek compensation for the Ilois and ask for the return of Diego Garcia.

As for the prime minister, according to Sir Gaetan Duval, "he has behaved in a ridiculous manner." Concerning Berenger's tour aimed at internationalizing the problem, in Sir Gaetan's opinion, it strangely resembles "an estension of the tourist group tour. We shall see the results it has," he adds.

The leader of the PMSD henceforth views the problem on the legal level. The case before the British court can bring the Ilois something "on the condition they stop playing games. We must accept the fact of the surrender of Diego Garcia. We must recognize the rights of the Americans, which stem from the rights of the English on the island, which in turn derive from the fact of the surrender."

Another means of internationalizing the problem on the legal level would be, in Duval's opinion, to put the Ilois of British nationality on a plane and send them to England. If the British authorities refuse them a visa and arrest them, the government could then, through Sheridan, serve a writ on the British Government in order to contest their arrest and take the matter before the higher international legal bodies, "but that would be an extreme case," Duval admits.

As for the pressure that a future MMM-PSM government proposes to exert in order to recover Diego Garcia, Duval ironically recalls that Berenger, who promised to charter a boat and put the Ilois on it in order to send them to Diego Garcia, "has not found one volunteer for the trip."

Duval then answered the accusation made against the 1973 coalition government, which reportedly accepted 650,000 pounds in compensation for surrendering Diego Garcia to the English. The leader of the PMSD recalls that the surrender took place in 1965 and that the PMSD then withdrew from the coalition. Bhayat should first of all learn the history of his own country before trying to make history.

For his part, the president of the Labor Party, James Burty David, who is now in Paris, said, in a statement on Radio France Internationale that the government of Mauritius has always claimed sovereignty over the Chagos Archipelago.

Concerning the demand for compensation on the order of 8 million pounds for the Ilois, David states that it is "in no way linked to our sovereignty over the archipelago."

For his part, the vice president of the MMM, Kader Bhayat, said in a press conference yesterday, that "it is no longer necessary, given the turn of events, for the prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, to reveal to the Mauritian nation what really happened between him and the British Government on the question of the Chagos Archipelago since 1965." Bhayat stated that the statements made by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam on the matter "contradict one another so much that no one can believe him any longer when he has just said that he was tricked by the English." At any rate, he says, the impression that one has "is that the prime minister is also trying to trick the people."

The vice president of the MMM has asked Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam to make public any correspondence between him and the British authorities along with accounts of the discussions in London and other documents on the dismembering of the Chagos Archipelago.

Bayat, accompanied by Jean-Claude de l'Estrac and L. Baligadoo, said that the MMM is "pessimistic" about any friendly settlement of the matter. The MMM therefore expects to go to bat at various levels in order to obtain satisfaction. "We hope that the government of the United States will be involved in discussions on compensation for the rehabilitation of the Ilois," he concluded.

Retaliatory Measures Suggested

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 8 Jul 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] Guy Ollivry, leader of the Mauritian Democratic Union (UDM), suggested yesterday afternoon that the Mauritian Government cease any repayment of debts contracted with England before the country's accession to independence as a retaliatory measure to counter the attitude adopted by Margaret Thatcher's government on the Ilois.

"Mauritius' debt to England for some development projects amounts to nearly 50 million rupees and has never been canceled despite numerous appeals to the former British minister, Mrs Judith Hart," Ollivry recalled.

"Mauritius is still paying interest on that debt." Let us cease repayment of the debt and use that money to improve the living conditions of the Ilois, while awaiting settlement of the Diego Garcia question by an international organization (the United Nations, the International Court in the Hague or the European Human Rights Commission, he added. Nothing more should be expected of the English themselves in order to resolve the problem of the Ilois, according to Ollivry.

The attitude of the British authorities at the time of the London negotiations, even though it may be considered as revolting, is scarcely surprising to the UDM, Ollivry says. When one is dealing with a government that shows total indifference to the 2 million unemployed in its own country, one is scarcely surprised that the fate of a few hundred Ilois families does not interest it. The human question does not count for much under that regime either, says Ollivry, who recalls that he was among the first to demand the demilitarization of Diego Garcia (at the Commonwealth conference in Colombo). However, he emphasizes that one must not forget the "terrible responsibility" of the Mauritian Labor government for the entire Diego question. Ollivry says that one cannot forget that the Laborites, in order to avoid a referendum on the matter, "sacrificed, not only the archipelago, but also the many families living there." These families have never asked to come vegetate in the Port Louis suburbs, the leader of the UDM notes, and for them, Diego Garcia represented happiness. Ollivry emphasizes that the Laborites sacrificed the unfortunate Ilois without requiring serious guarantees about their future or their nationality. For Ollivry, if the problem of the Ilois exists 16 years later, it is because the Mauritian Government has always demonstrated an "indifference as culpable as that of the English" toward the former inhabitants of the archipelago. It has been the role of the opposition groups (first of all, the PMSD, then the UDM, and finally, the MMM) to fight for the Ilois families, Ollivry said.

What is to be done in order to make the English yield now? The UDM, in addition to halting the repayment of debts, has three other proposals: 1) taking the matter of the validity of the surrender of Diego Garcia before the International Court of Justice in the Hague; 2) lodging a protest against Great Britain with the Hague Court and the European Human Rights Commission, as well as the UN human rights organizations, for the illegal and inhuman treatment inflicted on the Ilois by the English, especially since the Ilois are their nationals.

As for the nonpayment of debts from before Mauritius' independence, for Ollivry, the fact that the British Government has not canceled them shows its mentality. He recalled that in the case of France, President Georges Pompidou wiped out all debts of the former French colonies to which his country had granted loans when they were still under French tutelage.

Mauriciens Must Solve Own Problems

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 8 Jul 81 p 4

[Editorial by Lindsay Riviere: "Perfidious Albion"]

[Text] Could misfortune serve any good purpose? The insult to Mauritius by Great Britain on the occasion of the negotiations concerning the compensation to be offered to the Ilois has had the effect of an electric shock on the country. Each citizen has learned, much to his surprise, that the former colonial power (which has never ceased occupying a separate place in the hearts and minds of the Mauritians) can be so mean, petty, dominating and insensitive to our national concerns. The overwhelming naivete of the Mauritian people, fed by the condescending tone of the men governing us, has suffered a heavy blow. A more adult attitude toward the outside world may perhaps result from it and it is high time.

Who are our Ilois? For London, they are obviously pretentious "natives" who dare to speak of rights and British citizenship and who should be satisfied to have obtained what they did. And what about the (tardy) "pressure" of the Mauritian Government? Who in Whitehall is afraid of a regime whose main officials are nostalgic for English order, who live with one foot here and the other in London and who are publicly sorry to see the colonial power take its bases out of a territory now independent? ("It breaks my heart to see you go!" Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam dixit. [sic])

How convenient it is, the reference to the iron temperament of that "tough woman" Margaret Thatcher! It makes it possible to conceal so many calculations and not to say many things to the government that basically, one does not take seriously. Mauritius is the least of the concerns of the English Conservatives. Pressed to get rid of its colonies, Great Britain practically disappeared from this part of the world. The meagerness of its aid to Mauritius, the insignificance of its cultural effort in our country, the attitude toward our fellow countrymen wishing to go there and the military disengagement in our region bear witness to the fact that henceforth, the official friendship is now but a formality and that it is manifestly no longer the card we should play.

Now that these facts are more clearly perceived, it is important for Mauritius to review its dossier and attitude in this entire affair. As in the Tromelin affair, the regime has so far linked the outcome of the negotiations on Diego Garcia to the alleged warmth of English-Mauritian relations and has attempted to see in London's "sympathy" for the problem a demonstration of "friendship" toward Mauritius. But we see where that strategy has led! Mauritius must henceforth invoke its rights, exhibit more dignity, put the question before all international bodies, bring in its Third World partners and in short, become a diplomatic thorn in Great Britain's side.

Perhaps this attitude should be preceded by national unity on the matter. Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam is no less guilty than the English but, given the development of events, this is a secondary problem. We have in fact seen how cleverly Great Britain has exploited our internal divisions, diverted our attention by giving the opposition enough elements to make the government the main target of recriminations and come out clean. The opposition seems to be falling into the trap. Today, the way out is clear: It is up to Great Britain to pay. We shall then have the time to attribute the historical responsibility for the affair. The most urgent matter is to present, in the face of London's arrogance, the image of a country united on a matter of principle, one that has a heavy moral and not only legal charge.

Perhaps in so doing, the country will regain some lucidity with respect to the outside world. Too often and on too many questions, Mauritius links its future and the solution of its problems to its alleged popularity with other countries. It has been told this so often that it has finally been taken in by its own game. People believe that the problem of the undocumented persons in France, that of Tromelin, of the Chagos, of unemployment, will be solved by our overseas "friendships." But elsewhere they are singing a different tune. Sir Gaetan Duval has encountered indifference from the Americans, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam has been politely rebuffed in Paris and discovers, to his consternation, that "the West is dropping it," that London does not give a hang about our Ilois, that emigration, in the current context, is a utopia and that we are therefore facing the crisis alone, like everyone else. Perhaps the Mauritians will finally understand, bearing the burden of failure, that it is right here in Mauritius and nowhere else that the solutions to our problems are to be found, in our will to attack difficulties rapidly and with determination, in our capacity to unite on essential questions. Since the London failure, Diego Garcia has, in our opinion, become the immediate test of that will for unity.

MMM SEES ELECTION VICTORY; INVITES FRANCE AS PARTNER IN POSSIBLE REGIME

French Aid Sought

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 16 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] France will be called upon to become a privileged partner of a future MMM regime and its aid will be sought by any new MMM-PSM [Malagasy Socialist Party] for the return of Diego Garcia to Mauritius. In substance, this is what was hinted by Paul Berenger, secretary general of the MMM, now on a private visit to Paris in order to make contact with that country's authorities following the victory of the socialists in the presidential and legislative elections.

In an interview with the leftist French newspaper LIBERATION, Berenger stated that the London negotiations on the question of the Ilois [Islanders] "led nowhere and will lead nowhere before the next general elections." But, he continued, as soon as we are in power, we shall undertake wide-ranging diplomatic and political action, relying on friendly countries such as France, Madagascar, Tanzania and the Seychelles in order to recover the archipelago." French aid will also be solicited, Berenger said, by a future MMM-PSM government in order to enable Mauritius to move away from South Africa: "We are aware that we shall have difficulties when we try to move away from South Africa, and there also, we shall need France's aid," the secretary general of the MMM said.

Concerning his contacts in France, Berenger said that he met with representatives of the French Communist Party on Monday and that he was planning to meet with Lionel Jospin, secretary general of the French Socialist Party. About these contacts, the secretary general of the MMM explained:

"We are not used to referring to the French Socialist Party in order to define ourselves, but I must say that we are close to that party. Above all, I want to examine the problems of the Indian Ocean with Lionel Jospin, because we are worried. I would not like to see the socialist government allow certain tensions to develop in the region. Second, we consider ourselves to be a brother party of the Socialist Party. We are going to inherit a catastrophic situation and we are relying on our brother parties to grant us emergency aid. Finally, I want to discuss sugar quotas and prices instituted by the Lome Convention and I want to draw the attention of the socialists to the dangers of a European protectionist trend for Mauritius."

Finally, during the same interview, Berenger defined the MMM as being of "Marxist and libertarian inspiration" and the type of socialism he proposed to Mauritius as "a modern socialism, a socialism of managers."

Mauritians Oppose Nuclear Bases

Port Louis THE NATION in French 26 Jul 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] Paul Berenger, leader of the MMM, declared in New Delhi that the American decision to strengthen its security arrangement on Diego Garcia should help the MMM in the coming general elections. According to an AGENCE FRANCE PRESSE dispatch from New Delhi, Berenger told the press that most of the Mauritian population is opposed to the construction of American nuclear facilities on Diego Garcia.

Berenger added that the voters do not like to see the Americans so close to us in the process of building secret nuclear bases and they are now convinced that the Mauritian prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, has helped the Americans.

Berenger said he is convinced that the progressive movement he heads (MMM) will win the election and form a government with the Socialist Party headed by Harish Boodhoo.

The United States is building runways for B-52 bombers on Diego Garcia and port facilities able to accommodate ships carrying up to 12,000 sailors.

The coral island, retained by Great Britain at the time of Mauritian independence, was granted to the United States for 50 years beginning in 1967. We consider that pact to be illegal; the island belongs to us, the young (36) leader of the MMM emphasized. "When we come to power, we shall take the island back from the British and will tell the Americans to pack up and leave Diego Garcia," Berenger added.

The Delhi government has refused to comment on the talks of the Indian prime minister with Berenger. However, the 40-minute interview underlines Mrs Gandhi's interest in a movement whose influence is rapidly growing in Mauritius, the AFP notes.

In the latest elections in December 1976, the MMM won 32 out of 70 seats, compared with 25 for the Labor Party of Sir Seewoosagur, who could form the government only with the support of five elected officials from a rightist party and eight appointed members.

The appeal for the restitution of Diego Garcia, inflation reaching 27 percent in Mauritius and unemployment totaling 13 percent of the active population. All these factors, along with the American decision to strengthen its facilities on Diego Garcia, may help the MMM come to power, Berenger's aides believe.

BRIEFS

NEW PSM EXECUTIVE--The veterans have returned to the forefront in the PSM [Malagasy Socialist Party]: Dr Rohit Beedassy and Radha Gungoosingh who, along with Harish Boodhoo, were the founders of the party but who have been somewhat eclipsed in recent months, have resumed their rank within the party. Dr Rohit Beedassy was elected president of the party, while Radha Gungoosingh will be the assistant leader. alongside Harish Boodhoo. They replace Deerpalsingh and Jocelyn Seenyen in those respective posts. The Boodhoo-Beedassy-Gungoosingh trio will thus once again head the party. A. Parsuramen remains secretary general of the party, while Deerpalsingh, always said to be very close to the MMM (too close, it is whispered in the PSM), takes on the duties of PRO [presumably public relations officer]. The new executive committee of the PSM has 20 members. Of that number, eight were appointed to be on the Political Bureau: Harish Boodhoo (leader), R. Beedassy (president), Y. Maudarbaccus (vice president), K. Deerpalsingh (PRO), A. Parsuramen (secretary general), K. Offman (administrative secretary), Kailash Ruhee (coordinating secretary) and Jocelyn Seenven (member of the executive committee). The PSM, which is preparing to celebrate its third anniversary, will soon begin a series of regional meetings and evening congresses that will lead to a national meeting on 16 September, the party's anniversary. The first congress is planned for next Tuesday in Nouvelle Decouverte. [Text] [Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 17 Jul 81 p 1] 11,464

DUVAL'S 12 COMMANDMENTS APPROVED--The executive committee of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] has unanimously approved the "12 commandments" that are part of Sir Gaetan Duval's campaign. They are: 1) an unemployment allowance of some 300 rupees per month for every unemployed worker; 2) the alignment of the wage compensation of all workers on the sugar industry scale; 3) the opening up of Diego Garcia to Mauritian workers as provided in the agreement for the surrender of Diego Garcia to the English; 4) immediate startup of work on the northern airport so as to employ some 4,000 to 5,000 persons without jobs; 5) immediate cancellation of the attorney general's order standing in the way of the application of the Lefebvre Report by the Marine Authority; 6) abrogation of the law preventing deepsea fishermen from engaging in their craft, a law that puts 3,000 young men out of work; 7) a guarantee to dockers laid off due to the installation of the bulk sugar terminal of a pension for their widows at the same rate as government employees; 8) the granting of the same advantages as those of dockers to 63 men laid off by Taylor Smith because of the bulk sugar terminal; 9) annulment of the increase in rent for widows, which had gone from 11 to 62 rupees; 10) reduction in the rent of persons living in the CHA [expansion unknown] compounds to a reasonable rate and abolition of the required deposit, which puts housing supposedly built for the poor out of their reach; 11) immediate supplying to the new compounds of water, electricity and roads, without additional charges; and 12) the guarantee of payment of a 13th month's wages to government employees and members of the parastate agencies. PMSD SEEKS CANDIDATES--The Mauritian Social Democratic Party (PMSD) of Sir Gaetan Duval is now seeking possible candidates for the coming general elections. At a meeting yesterday morning, the party executive committee decided to issue a formal appeal to possible candidates who would like to join the PMSD. Sir Gaetan Duval, leader of the PMSD, confirmed this news but emphasized that his party will remain free to accept or reject certain candidacies. What will be the profile of the typical candidate in the coming general elections? Sir Gaetan had no comment at this stage, but he did state that before choosing the new candidates, he will avoid "past errors." [Text] [Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 28 Jul 81 p 4] 11,464

SWEDEN PRAISED FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO ECONOMY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Within the framework of the relations of cooperation between the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM] and Sweden, Sweden is the main source of economic aid to our country. In 1980 alone, Sweden provided the RPM with economic assistance totaling more than 1.25 million contos.

The above information was provided by that Western country's ambassador, Finn Bergstrand, during a recent interview with our newspaper. During that interview, the Swedish ambassador in Maputo added that for this year, the amount of aid has been increased to about 1.5 million contos.

Among the various sectors whose activity is being supported by Swedish cooperation, the most important is transportation. Last year alone, Mozambique bought more than 250 heavy vehicles, both trucks and buses.

The volume of road equipment acquired from Scania represents about 60 percent of the total imports in that sector. Vehicles of that make have been a tradition in our country for the past 20 years.

The plans call for acquiring a total of between 150 and 200 buses and trucks from Scania this year.

The buses, which will be of the Marcopolo type, will come complete with body, while some of the truck units may arrive with just the chassis.

To insure the necessary technical support, the Scania manufacturing firm has had a permanent office in Mozambique since national independence.

Working through the technical assistance enterprises designated by our government, Scania's representative provides support in maintaining the equipment and training personnel.

The training courses for mechanics are held with the manufacturer's assistance and are provided in a school built in Maputo. The school is equipped with facilities and has suitable teaching materials, all of the latter translated into Portuguese.

The same Scania representative in Mozambique also has facilities for replacing parts. Those facilities are located in Maputo, Beira, Nampula, and Quelimane. Steps are being taken to set up more facilities for the same purpose.

Concerning the vocational training being supported by Scania, several courses have been provided this year, with 40 auto mechanics having been trained.

The training courses are taught by various specialists from the manufacturing firm. The instructors specialize in either buses or trucks.

As part of the expansion of Swedish support in the field of road transportation, another personnel training center is under construction in the country's capital. The second to be built, this will be the largest and will provide the best of working conditions.

Also underway are negotiations between the Government of the People's Republic of Mozambique and Sweden to carry out another project in the field of road transportation.

The purpose of that project is the construction in Maputo of an auto assembly plant that will use some of the infrastructure that already exists. If agreement is reached, the project would take about 2 years to complete before operations could begin.

REFRIGERATION CONTRACT AWARDED TO FRENCH FIRM

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] A cold storage plant for the preservation of potatoes, onions, and miscellaneous fruits and vegetables will be built in Maputo under a contract signed recently between the National Fruit and Vegetable Marketing Enterprise and the successful bidder, the Paris-based French firm of CIFAL [expansion unknown]. The project also provides for setting up three automated lines for presorting potatoes in the major producing zones. One of them will be installed in Moamba, while the other two will be mobile and will be used in the central and northern parts of the country.

The contract as awarded takes effect this September, and according to the deadline it establishes, the cold storage plant and the sorting lines are to be delivered by the constructing firm 22 months later.

Features of Undertaking

The cold storage plant is a complex that will consist of an automated line for cleaning and receiving potatoes and onions. The line will have an hourly capacity of 30 tons, which will provide between 450 and 460 tons per day, since it is designed to operate 16 hours a day.

The plant will have 56 chambers for preserving potatoes, onions, and miscellaneous fruits and vegetables, and 14 of them will be equipped for drying onions and germinating potato seed. The capacity of the chambers will permit the simultaneous bulk storage of 12,285 tons of potatoes and 2,520 tons of onions or of 16,380 tons of potatoes alone.

In addition, the plant will have a system for pulling and packing the products. This will be accomplished by extractors and conveyors that will carry the potatoes and onions to a line where they will be graded, sized, and packed in bags weighing between 5 and 30 kilograms. The pulling and packing capacity is 15 tons per hour in the case of potatoes and from 5 to 7 tons for onions.

The total cost of the undertaking is estimated at 58 million French francs (about 350,000 contos). In addition to construction of the plant, the contract calls for training Mozambican personnel both here and abroad to manage and maintain the complex.

The cold storage plant will be built in the Matola industrial zone (in Maputo) near the Namaacha highway and a railway line so as to facilitate transportation and the movement of the products.

The permanent potato presorting line to be set up in Moamba and the two mobile lines for use in the central and northern parts of the country will each have a receiving and shipping capacity of 30 tons per hour.

Importance of Project

The completion of this project, which is scheduled for delivery in July 1983, will permit the integral movement and storage of our production of potatoes, onions, and miscellaneous fruits and vegetables and guarantee the producers that their products will find a market and be sold.

It will also make it possible to store surpluses and organize "reserves" of strategic products to insure steady supplies of those products in the southern part of the country, even during periods when they are not being produced.

It should be noted that the supply plan for the southern part of the country (Maputo, Gaza, and Inhambane provinces) calls for 24,670 tons of potatoes and 3,450 tons of onions annually. Since potatoes and onions are produced in that area from July to December, it has been necessary to import them from abroad in the months from January to June. In 1980 alone, 95,000 contos in foreign exchange were spent to import potatoes, while 35,000 contos were spent to import onions.

When the cold storage plant goes into operation, it will be possible not only to avoid that outflow of foreign exchange but also to reduce our economic dependence on South Africa. That country has been our main supplier due to its proximity and the highly perishable nature of the product.

This undertaking is also considered strategic because it will enable us to store and preserve the potato seed produced in other parts of the country with a view to saving the foreign exchange that we have been spending to import seed. And here again, we will break the dependence on others that has existed to date.

UNESCO EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC, CULTURAL ASSISTANCE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 16 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Several projects in the areas of social science, education, and teacher training are included in the protocol of agreement signed yesterday by UNESCO and the People's Republic of Mozambique. The agreement was signed by Graca Machel, minister of education and culture, on behalf of Mozambique and by Amadou M'Bow, general director of UNESCO, who left yesterday to return to Paris.

The agreement covers a total of six projects to be carried out with the support of that UN specialized agency for the development of education, science, and culture.

In the field of education, UNESCO will support the project aimed at establishing a system in Mozambique for the education and training of secondary and technical teachers.

UNESCO support in the same field is also to be provided for the training of teaching staff for higher education, adult literacy and education, statistics and planning, and other areas.

In the natural sciences, UNESCO will support Mozambique in the project aimed at establishing an institute on water resources and assist in the work of the Inhaca Biological Station, among other things.

In the field of social science, the agreement signed yesterday with UNESCO includes support by that institution for training in the field of sociology. This project will benefit several countries in this part of our continent.

The protocol of agreement also includes various actions in support of the democratic mass organizations, specifically the OJM [Mozambique Youth Organization] and the OMM [Organization of Mozambique Women].

The most important of the various actions called for is the training of cadres both within the country and abroad. Financial support for the development of those democratic mass organizations is also provided for in the agreement with UNESCO.

The ceremony for signing the agreement was attended by Fernando Ganhao, rector of the Eduardo Mondlane University, and other high officials from the Ministry of Education and Culture.

BEIRA HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY--The first phase of the hydrographic survey of the entrance channel to the port of Beira was completed recently with the topographic mapping of all the geographic marks, according to a news report yesterday by Radio Mozambique. On the basis of those marks, the National Directorate of Maritime and River Transportation has ascertained the need to dredge and mark out the entire channel in the near future. According to information from Radio Mozambique's Beira office, the hydrographic survey will be conducted annually as part of that national directorate's plan. The purpose is to collect up-to-date information that can be supplied to maritime shipping concerning conditions in the channel entrances to Mozambican ports. The team from the National Directorate of Maritime and River Transportation in charge of the work includes Soviet cooperation workers in addition to Mozambican cadres. MINES MINISTER OUTLINES PROJECT FOR MINING ACTIVITIES

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 20 Aug 81 pp 3, 6

[Excerpt] The first shipment of iron ore from the re-activated Marampa Mines is expected to be made next year, one year ahead of the projected date.

Already, a buyer in the international market has opted to purchase the first half million tons produce.

This was disclosed by Mines Minister Hassan Gbessay Kanu when he addressed senior members of his Ministry from all over the country.

The Minister said that the reactivation process had been progressing and when the mines became fully productive, one million tons of ore concentrated would be exported annually.

Speaking on gold mining, Mr. Kanu said that the potentials were encouraging and disclosed that the Bank of Sierra Leone had bought 71 bars of gold weighing 26 ounces each, mined by the National Diamond Mining Company.

He said that a proposal had been made to open a branch office of his Ministry in Makeni to monitor gold mining activities in that region.

He said that Kimberlite mining negotiations were going on and as soon as a definitive agreement on this was reached the mining operations would recommence.

He gave the assurance that government would ensure that the outcome of the negotiations would bring greater benefits to the people of this country.

U.S. DECISION TO PRODUCE NEUTRON BOMB EXAMINED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 25 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

[Editorial: "A Lethal Weapon"]

[Text] The decision of the United States to produce the neutron bomb means the beginning of the proliferation of a most lethal weapon that will be used sooner or later.

Whichever way one views it, the neutron bomb goes across many barriers in its hitting power and overall effect.

Its basic potency lies in the fact that it can destroy human beings (in their thousands) without damaging physical structures like buildings.

Experts point out that the intense radiation which the bomb produces will put tanks out of action as well as destroy armies.

This makes it principally, they argue, an anti-tank weapon.

The point to be carefully digested is that the neutron bomb, because of these very characteristics which enable edifices to remain inspite of the bomb's devastating effect on human beings, will be a first-call-in weapon in war compared with nuclear bombs that annihilate all living forms while destroying every physical object.

In the hands of emotional leaders, the neutron bomb would doubtless be used backed with the arguments that are ridiculously proferred about the possibility of a limited war being fought with devastating weapons.

When the French decided to produce the weapon a year ago, we criticised the move pointing out that the neutron bomb would add a new destructive dimension to the constant threat to world peace.

Many nations of the world criticised the French but they went ahead with their project of destruction anyway.

Former US President Jimmy Carter did the moralist bit and stopped production of the bomb by Americans.

He won a commitment from the Russians that they too, would not work on such a bomb and the world felt it was getting some breathing space, at least.

President Reagan obviously feels the US should flex some muscle and his Defence Secretary, Weimberger, has argued that the only way to negotiate SALT with the Soviets is from a position of "strength" which must include, of course, the neutron bomb.

With the American decision to produce and stockpile the bomb however, there is no longer a withholding lever on the Russians and, as the Kremlin has hinted, counter actions will be taken.

Such counter actions predictably mean Soviet development of the neutron bomb.

Other nuclear powers will have the same bomb in the end; so too will even lesser advanced countries only a matter of time. [as published]

Because some people still argue that the neutron bomb is a limited weapon, it will eventually be used in what will be termed a limited war.

That will be the start of a total war which inevitably call for nuclear weapons.

NATCO PRODUCTS BRING IN FOREIGN EXCHANGE

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 26 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] Within the last two and a half years, the National Confectionery Company (NATCO) has exported biscuits and confectionery and earned this country foreign exchange more than 100,000 U.S. dollars to Liberia and the Gambia.

This has been revealed by the Managing Director of NATCO, Mr. R. D. Rajwani in a statement to the press.

Mr. Rajwani said "today we have shipped two containers of biscuits and confectionery valued at more than 32,000 dollars to Liberia by the vessel Boringia."

Recently, the Managing Director said they exported more than 35,000 sterling to the Gambia.

He told pressmen that under the banner of the Mano River Union recent trade agreement which was implemented in May this year, NATCO has been doing good business with Liberia.

Speaking on exportation to other West African states, Mr. Rajwani said they have secured an agent in Nigeria to sell their products.

With regards to French speaking African states, Mr. Rajwani said they require labels with French inscriptions to sell their products and disclosed that the labels are now being prepared.

He said the prospects in these French speaking African states seem to be good.

The Managing Director told the pressmen that apart from any other factor the availability of vessels to Nigeria and the Gambia has been causing some concern.

ONE HUNDRED ARABIC TEACHERS TO RECEIVE DIPLOMAS

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 26 Aug 81 pp 1, 8

[Text]

SOME 100 Sierra Leoneans, all Arabic teachers are expected to obtain diplomas tomorrow after a crash inservice training course for teachers in Arabic language and Islamic studies at the Milton Margai Teachers College.

The course has been running for about two months now And will end tomorrow with a graduation ceremony.

It was organised by the World Federation of Arabic Islamic International Schools in Raid, Saudi Arabia and sponsored by the Imam Muhamad Islamic University, Saudi Arabia.

The Federation which is an independent organisation was invited by the Supreme Islamic Council of Sierra Leone to run the course.

Similar courses have been run in the Gambia and Nigeria.

According to the Cordinator and Supervisor of the courses, Dr Omar Jah a Gambian, the main objective is to coordinate the efforts of Islamic schools throur out the world and help them improve their teaching capacity and provide a common syllabus and well trained and skilful teachers It will also provide all nenecessary educational facilities that the Muslims need.

The Federation, Dr Jah said, apart from its international activities studies conditions in schools mainly or entirely Islamic schools or educational institutes that have departments or sections in which Arabic language and Islamic studies are taught.

Dr Jah who is an Associate Porfessor in the Department of history, Faculty of social sciences at the Imam Muhamad Islamic University in Riad, Saudi Arabia, said, the Federation realises the handicap of most of the schools in training teachers and providing syllabuses and text books and its main concern is to find out the needs of these schools in terms of teachers, syllabus and text books and to provide help as much as possible.

He said in most cases the teachers especially in Africa are not trained.

The Coordinator said the Federations hopes to negotiate with the Sierra Leone Ministry of Education to help promote the teaching of Arabic language and Islamic studies.

By training the teachers, Dr. Jah said, the Federation wants to create an atmosphere whereby indigenous teachers not foreigners will be in positions to take over the responsibility of teaching Arabic language and Islamic studies.

Dr. Jah believes that if Arabic language and Islamic studies are properly taught the education and enlightenment amongst Muslims will improve greatly and this will facilitate in no small measure the condition of living and intellectual development of Muslims in this country.

This, he said, will help the Muslims to contribute immensely to the natoinal development.

The Federation is not operating alone. Dr Jah said, it coordinates the efforts of many Islamic bodies interested in the promotion of Arabic language and Islamic studies.

There are eleven professors involved in the course and they are drawn from different Islamic Universities in Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Sudan.

According to Dr. Jah the Federation pays all the bills, for local teachers participating in the course which include lodging, feedng and transport and the lecturers are paid entirely by their Universities Aboard.

STERLING PRODUCTS BRING IN FOREIGN EXCHANGE

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 20 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Pharmaceutical Products made in Sierra Leone and exported to one of the neighbouring states have earned this country 250,000 U.S. dollars in foreign exchange.

The new General Manager of Sterling Products International in Sierra Leone, Mr K. H. Freivogel disclosed this at the State House during discussions with President Siaka Stevens.

Mr Freivogel expressed his determination to maintain the good relations between the Government and his Company and looked forward to a continued cooperation in order to increase their activities and products.

President Stevens assured Mr Freivogel that Government would maintain the cordial relations between it and the company.

Mr Freivogel who is a German, has held senior executive positions in the company in Ethiopia and the Sudan before his assignment to Sierra Leone.

Sterling Products International which was established in Sierra Leone in 1977 is an American multi-national pharmaceutical concern operating in about 107 countries around the world.

It has been engaged in the manufacture of products such as Panadol, Cafenol and Pardrax locally.

COMMENTARY ON REGULATION OF GOLD EXPORTS

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 26 Aug 81 pp 1, 16

[Editorial: "Talking of Gold"]

[Text] Parliament last week passed a law making the Bank of Sierra Leone the only authority to export gold from this country.

This is aimed at centralising the exporting of the yellow metal and is calculated to ensure that as much foreign exchange as possible comes to the government as a result while protecting the marketing of this very precious metal.

Considering the desperate need for this country to get foreign exchange from any available source, this particular law cannot be considered negative and its overall objectives are viewed positively in the national interest.

If the move however should be successful and a good deal of circumvention of the regulations should not occur it is important that various factors must be taken into account.

In the first place the gold prospector who has been used to dealing with outside market however clandestinely or otherwise, will expect the Bank of Sierra Leone to offer him satisfactory rates for his gold.

Minister of Mines Mr Hassan Gbassay Kanu has hastened to assure that the Bank will adhere to the internationally approved prices of gold and that should help a good deal.

It would make no sense if when the world price of gold is fixed at a particular level the Central Bank in Sierra Leone offers anything below that level.

In fact, as an incentive, the Bank would do a lot better towards curbing illicit exportation of gold if it offered more attractive conditions in the local market while it caters for its dearly sought foreign exchange.

It is also a good suggestion that the customer in Sierra Leone be paid in part in foreign exchange as yet another attraction.

If the object of the Law is to reduce smuggling of gold as much as possible then the rules governing enticement and satisfaction in business have to be scrupulously observed as much as possible.

NEED FOR DEVELOPMENT WORK PLAN FOR UNEMPLOYED YOUTH STRESSED

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 28 Aug 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Summary] When he opened the sixth session of the national council of the Youth Union which began in the city of Tanga early this week, the deputy director general of the Revolutionary Party [CCM], Allen Heri, asked the union to develop means of bringing together the youth to ensure that all take part fully in the development of the national economy.

Recently, the minister of state in the Vice President's Office for economic affa_rs, who is also a member of the central committee of the party, Kighoma Malima, asked the Youth Union to establish a procedure for registering all unemployed youth with the capacity to work and set up a brigade to produce goods and do other important work for the country's development.

The registration of these youth, as Minister Malima advised, should proceed simultaneously with important development tasks which can be carried out in various areas of the country. Examples are the cutting of sisal plants, the digging of irrigation ditches on farms, the proper maintenance of villages and the cultivation of fruits and vegetables.

These are some of the tasks which can be done by our youth who up to now have been unemployed. We believe that it is not in the agricultural sector alone that the strength of these youths can be used. With good programs, good leadership and the help which is required, our youths can be engaged in other tasks, like operating small enterprises and fishing.

It would be well if the youth union would maintain a procedure which would make it possible for all working age youth to work, make their contribution to the development of our nation and raise their standard of living. But it would be better if the government would also recognize the importance of this matter.

A large country like ours with sufficient land suitable for agriculture must have the capability to be self-sufficient in many things, and especially in food, if only we have a firm plan to use the strength of the youth of this country.

ECOWAS PLANS INTRODUCTION OF COMMON CURRENCY

AB101754 Lagos NAN in English 1741 GMT 10 Sep 81

[Text] Lagos, 10 Sep (NAN)--A principal officer with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), Mr Frank Ofei, said in Lagos today that the organisation was making plans to introduce a common currency as a medium of exchange among member-states.

Mr Ofei announced this while briefing a 22-man delegation of the Nigerian Export Promotion Council (NEPC) scheduled to visit four ECOWAS countries.

He said that the introduction of the common currency would reduce currency exchange difficulties between member-states of the organisation and that the measure was being taken in cooperation with the International Moentary Fund (IMF).

He did not, however, say when the currency would be introduced.

Mr Ofei mentioned communication and transportation as two of the problems facing the community, adding that communication between Francophone countries was better than those between Anglophone countries.

"We are looking at the infrastructural problems involved in communication and transportation with a view to promoting inter-action among member-countries," he added.

The marketing adviser to the NEPC, Mr P.E. Osazee, said that the council would visit the four countries to study problems of exporting goods and explored the possibility of projecting Nigeria-made goods.

ATMOSPHERE RELAXED IN CAPITAL

PM100820 Paris LE MONDE in French 5 Sep 81 p 5

[Dispatch by Philippe Decraene: "The Opposition Seems to be Adapting to the Military Regime"]

[Text] Bangui--Three days after receiving full powers from Mr David Dacko, the Central African military are adopting an open approach and are not avoiding any contact or dialogue. Despite their firm statements they are trying to be conciliatory and are giving the impression of taking every opportunity to reassure people.

General Kolingba has already explained twice that the regime which he installed on Tuesday was strictly transitional in nature, that he had the firm intention of having personal meetings with the leaders of the various political groups and that he would very shortly send a mission to Paris comprising several members of the Military Committee for National Recovery [CMRN].

Like the Central Africans themselves, most expatriates say they are relieved by the departure of the civilian government. Although some are still showing caution and reservations, all are united in advocating calm and harmony.

Mr Ange Patasse, feared leader of the Central African People's Liberation Movement, is not the last of the oppositionists to make overtures to the military committee. Twice in the space of 24 hours he has declared his readiness to "trust" the army and cooperate with its leaders after cancelling a meeting which his supporters planned to hold in Bangui on 14 September. Mr Patasse, as cunning as ever, alternately making loud statements and giving evasive answers, keeps smiling enigmatically as if biding his time and is behaving as if he intended gradually to take over a movement which is in fact primarily directed against him.

Mr Henri Maidou, leader of the Republican Progress Party, who is tenacious, enterprising, charming and determined, told us on Thursday: "I and my three opposition colleagues sent a letter to General Kolingba on Wednesday to congratulate him on his accession to power.... We are prepared to take part in the task of national recovery as soon as we are asked to do so..." Of course, in passing, Mr Maidou stressed the temporary nature of the committee's existence. But in so doing was he not simply citing the new head of state?

Mr Abel Goumba, absent once again, is in France again as if he expected Paris to come out in his favor. "He is afraid," his opponents say, "just as he was after the disturbances which followed the presidential election in March and after the 14 July attack...." This absence ultimately plays into his rivals' hands and pleases the military, who suspect him of pro-Soviet feelings.

"Failure for Tripoli and Moscow"

Mr Francois Gueret, leader of the Movement for Democracy and Independence, who was sacked from his post as justice minister by the former president because he regarded him as intractable, accepts the fait accompli because, he said, "It was impossible to continue with Dacko."

The representatives of the big Western powers--the only ones who count here--are making no secret of their satisfaction. At present there seems to be less rivalry than cooperation between the Americans and the French. They are especially pleased at the "defeat for Tripoli and Moscow" and at the "thwarting of all those who had come from the East to fish in troubled waters." This is a clear reference to Mr Ange Patasse and his supporters. General Kolingba has realized how much he could benefit from this state of mind and on Thursday requested from France, "which will remain a preferential partner," initial aid of 70 billion Central African francs... "Let solidarity be seen!" the new president also said for the benefit of the African capitals which, in keeping with their traditional attitude, are observing complete silence. Neither Kinahasa, Yaounde, Libreville nor Brazzaville, where there is nonetheless fear of disorder and suversion spreading, has reacted officially.

In any event there is no curfew or martial law here and the atmosphere is relaxed, as demonstrated by the behavior of the main in the street and that of the leaders who usually seek his votes. Although all forms of political activities have been suspended, people have never before talked so freely among themselves or with foreigners on radio and in the streets, even in the days of the multi-party system accepted unwillingly by Mr Dacko. The way in which General Kolingba twice presented his cabinet to the press on Thursday, in a completely good-humored way, is highly indicative of the military's desire to win support. Indeed, there was something rather unreal about the scenes in which some 20 generals and other senior officers in camouflage dress and wearing the red commando beret meekly posed at De Roux camp on advice from cameramen and photographers, to present themselves in the best light.

Nonetheless, that leaves the problem of elections. But there seems to be complete harmony on this point, too. "We'll see about it in 6 months or 1 year," General Kolingba said. "Let's not be in too much of a hurry....Let's be reasonable and adopt interim solutions." Mr Maidou replied, as if echoing the general. Moreover Mr Gueret admitted that "immediate elections would be completely pointless," and he added: "Let's avoid chaos....In short, nobody wants to come to blows on any pretext. Thus appeasement is at present the order of the day, unless the crowds of people in the capital's suburbs decide to take to the streets. But even the most pessimistic observers regard this hypothesis as improbable. In view of the scope of the powers which the army now has--powers which it certainly intends to use, should it prove necessary--it would be absolutely suicidal to give way to the temptation of violent action.

BRIEFS

FAN FORCES CONTROL IRIBA--Paris, 9 Sep (AFP)--The Northern Armed Forces [FAN] have been in control of the Iriba area, about 40 km from the Sudanese border, since 8 September, Mr Afal Ahmed, European representative of Hissein Habre's movement, stated in Paris today. According to this spokesman, 16 of the enemy forces were killed, 27 taken prisoner and a large amount of material seized during a skirmish. FAN's casualties were given as one dead and three wounded. He added that clashes continue in eastern Chad between FAN and Libyan troops and their local allies, especially southwest of Guereda, which FAN claims to have captured on 5 September, in the Dam-Zoer region. FAN patrols, Afal Ahmed specified, have been laying ambush along the road to Abeche and the Biltine region has become a real no man's land. [Text] [AB091534 Paris AFP in French 1509 GMT 9 Sep 81]

FAILURE TO RECAPTURE GUEREDA--Khartoum, 10 Sep (AFP)--Chadian Foreign Minister Acyl Ahmat was wounded in an abortive counter-offensive by Libyan and Chadian forces to retake the town of Guereda on Monday, the Sudanese News Agency, SUNA, reported today. Guereda, in eastern Chad, was reported to have fallen to forces loyal to rebel former Defence Minister Hissein Habre on Saturday. In a dispatch from the Sudanese border town of Geneina, SUNA said Mr Acyl escaped, leaving behind his Toyota car which was seized by Habre's forces together with a BM-16 rocket launcher and two mounted anti-tank guns. The combined Libyan and Chadian forces lost a total of 136 men dead, 58 wounded and 180 captured in the attempt to regain Guereda and in fighting for the town of Iriba, which fell to the FAN [Armed Forces of the North] on Tuesday, the report said. FAN losses were given as five killed and nine wounded, two of them seriously. Mr Habre visited Iriba on Tuesday afternoon after his troops' success and ordered distribution of flour, tea and sugar to the towns inhabitants, the agency reported. The FAN leader had consented to the voluntary recruitment of 461 inhabitants of Iriba to his forces, SUNA said. [Text] [AB101930 Paris AFP in English 1752 GMT 10 Sep 81] Yaounde, 11 Sep (AFP)--Violent fighting continues between the Chadian-Libyan troops and Hissein Habre's Armed Forces of the North (FAN) around the Iriba and Guereda localities in eastern Chad, a few kilometers from the Sudanese border, it was learned in Yaounde today from reliable sources. It is still impossible to obtain confirmation in the Cameroonian capital of the fall of Iriba and Guereda into the hands of Hissein Habre's dissident troops, as had been reported by the Sundamese News Agency SUNA and a spokesman of the FAN leader. Furthermore, there are strong reservations in Yaounde regarding the SUNA news reports that the Chadian minister of foreign affairs, Ahmat Acyl, was wounded during a confrontation with FAN fighters. The Chadian foreign minister is reportedly in Tripoli to negotiate a loan of 1.5 billion CFA francs ($30 million) to pay the wages and salaries of Chadian soliders and civil servants for August. INTERVIEW WITH EPLF LEADER ISSAYYAS AFEWERKI

GF041839 Kuwait AL-WATAN in Arabic 30 Aug 81 p 5

[Report on interview granted to AL-WATAN by Issayyas Afewerki, Eritrean Popular Liberation Front assistant secretary general, in Kuwait--no date given]

[Excerpts] Issayyas Afewerki, Eritrean Popular Liberation Front assistant secretary general, has learned of an initiative Kuwait is preparing on a political solution to the Eritrean problem. He is critical of Soviet strategy in the horn of Africa.

In an interview with AL-WATAN, he said that the Aden meeting of PDRY, Libyan and Ethiopian leaders is a new stage in Soviet strategy to strike at the Eritrean revolution. At the same time, he asserted his Front's firm stand of hostility toward U.S. imperialism.

He noted that the Front's relations with the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine [DFLP] have been broken off and relations with the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine [PFLP] are heading for a severance because of its stand supporting the Ethiopian regime. He said Sudan's recent decision to close the offices of the Eritrean revolution's fronts and to evacuate their military bases was a result of Eritrean Liberation Front forces' leaving Eritrean territory for Sudanese territory following severe fighting with his front which stopped 2 weeks ago and after the military result which he had referred to. [Sentence as published] He expressed support for the cause of the people of Arabistan and criticized the Iranian regime. He also expressed hope for the formation of a balanced government in Iran.

On the Kuwaiti initiative, the Eritrean official said Kuwait holds the political view that there should be a peaceful solution to the Eritrean problem. Kuwait is ready to contact the Ethiopians to convey the Eritrean settlement proposals. During this visit we were asked to submit our proposals in this regard. As for us, we do not have anything new other than the referendum plan that we proposed in November which suggests a referendum by Eritreans to choose between complete independence and federation with Ethiopia with autonomous rule.

The Eritrean official said Kuwaiti officials promised to study this project before contacting the Ethiopian Government to hear its viewpoint. Nevertheless, he believed the Ethiopian Government would listen to Kuwait's viewpoint in the hope that it would win over Kuwait to its side.

The Eritrean official criticized the Aden tripartite meeting in which the PDRY, Libyan and Ethiopian leaders participated, describing it as a new step in Soviet strategy against the Eritrean revolution. He said that, as a basic principle, there is no difference whether the revolution is attacked by 3 or 100 soldiers. He described the Aden meeting as a difference in the size of the massing of troops. He said there is a policy of hostility toward the Eritrean revolution which expands or contracts from one stage to another. In our view, the new step is a continuation of Soviet policy in the region.

He said the Ethiopian regime is currently passing through a military, political and economic dilemma. It is trying to solve its economic difficulties in various ways. For example, it is trying to contact the Gulf countries and Saudi Arabia to get fuel to solve its economic problems. Various ways are being used to maneuver and to gain favor in this region.

Libya has the Chad crisis. There is a Libyan move on the Arab level. Al-Qadhdhafi has his theory for the Arab region and he wants to implement it. In order to implement it, he wants to cancel any political presence that opposes it. Many of Libya's stands prove this fact.

In Chad there is a Libyan presence which is in fact an occupation. This occupation created a problem between Libya and Sudan that is becoming more and more tense. In southern Sudan there is Ethiopia, whose alliance with Libya serves Libyan policies and ambitions in the region.

He said there are many policies and strategies which may not be parallel. The Soviets have their vision and strategy in the region and they are implementing it. Ethiopia has its ambition and vision to establish a great, strong and influential Ethiopia in the horn of Africa. It is employing many methods to implement it. Libya has the same ambitions. As for Aden, it is not part of the equation. 'Ali Nasir Muhammad was charged with engineering this meeting only.

As for us, the Ethiopian move in this respect is the most important because it aims at striking us. This move will insure financial aid for Libya to solve the Ethiopian difficulties, to pay the bills for Soviet arms with Libyan funds, to purchase new arms, to try to achieve internal political and economic stability, and to increase military presence to liquidate the Eritrean revolution.

Commenting on the fact that the Eritrean Popular Liberation Front is the only Marxist organization opposing Soviet strategy in the region, he said: We would like to be friends with the Soviets, but we do not want to be hired agents. If they are against our national cause, we are against this stand. When they support the Ethiopian regime against us, we have to be alert against this stand. The Soviets are present in Ethiopia in a material and massive form. This presence has its justifications in Moscow. However, we do not accept these justifications.

All countries and parties who favor the Soviet strategy used to support us before the army came to power in Ethiopia in 1977 and the Soviets did not object to this. Now Moscow is not only against the Eritrean revolution, but it is also acting and exerting pressure on pro-Soviet countries and parties to take a hostile stand toward the Eritrean revolution.

In this respect he disclosed that there are no relations between the Eritrean Popular Liberation Front and the DFLP, led by Nayif Hawatmah. He said his front had officially asked the PFLP to explain some hostile stands toward the Eritrean revolution that appeared in its literature. He said the front had justified some of these stands and did not try to justify others. He explained that the PFLP still says--in official memos exchanged with it--that it supports the Eritreans' right to self-determination. He said that the front told them in reply to an official query that the communique issued after its delegation's visit to Addis Abbaba did not mean Ethiopia when it mentioned the sovereignty of Ethiopian territory. What was meant by this was Ogaden, "Western Somalia." However, he commented that this may be a convincing or unconvincing justification, but it remains subject to evaluation. He added: Relations with the Democratic Front passed through the same experience of maneuvers before they broke off. He refrained from predicting when relations with the Popular Front will break. He affirmed that his front's relationship with any organization is based on its stand toward the Eritrean revolution. He said his front cannot compromise with anybody at the expense of the Eritrean people's cause.

Asked how the Eritrean revolution will avoid falling into the lap of U.S. strategy in the horn of Africa after it was destined to be in the first voluntary confrontation with the Soviet strategy, he said: Our organization's stand is clear. We are strategically against imperialism, a stand which will not change whatever the changes in the region or in Eritrea may be. After the Soviets embraced the Ethiopian regime, they said the Eritrean revolution had become the agent of the Americans and of U.S. intelligence. This campaign is aimed to justify the Soviet stand of hostility toward us. We do not stand on the side of U.S. imperialism to confront what they call the Soviet threat in this region. We will not be a tool for implementing imperialist strategy in the region despite the fact that we still consider the Soviet Union among our friends. If this strategy does not favor our interests, we will not be informers. We may be moving to establish friendly relations with the Soviet Union, but this does not mean that we will be an instrumnt for carrying out what it requires of us.

He expressed the Eritrean Popular Liberation Front's support for the Arabistan people's struggle to achieve independence. He said the Arabistan cause is similar to the Eritrean cause. He criticized the Iranian regime and hope the Iranian people will be able to establish a balanced government that will fulfill their aspirations of a free and developed Iran.

PAPER CHIDES STUDENTS FOR CONDEMNING UNITED STATES

AB071959 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 7 Sep 81

[Press review]

[Excerpt] GUNSA (Ghana United Nations Students and Youths Association) has described the shooting down of two Libyan jets in the Mediterranean by U.S. planes as irresponsible and an unpardonable violation of Libya's territorial integrity. In a statement, GUNSA called on all people of the world, the OAU in particular, to condemn the attack and it asked the United States to pay full compensation to Libya for the destruction of her fighter planes and apologize to the OAU for what it called the aggression on African soil. The PALAVER described GUNSA's attitude as double stand. The paper wondered whether the association bothered to check whether or not Libya's decision to extend the limits of her territorial waters was unilateral and whether or not the area in dispute was international waters.

It also wants to know what action GUNSA took when Libya was accused of aggression in several African states. The PALAVER joins all African nations in their condemnation of the Reagan administration for its collaboration with the apartheid regime in South Africa. However, this stand cannot be an excuse for wholesale condemnation of the United States for operating in international waters and for defending itself against incursion of Libya. The paper writes:

"It is our view that by its one-sided stand on the United States-Libyan situation, GUNSA is creating the impression that it has allowed itself to be tied to the apron strings of its Libyan master whose voice it re-echoes in the arena of international politics. Such bias and prejudiced views on sensitive international issues without regard to logical international law and human rights is tantamount to a young ugly bear learning to behave like its equally ugly father. The distaste and abhorrence of African states for American imperialism should not be allowed to give way to the blind substitution of Soviet communism either in Africa, for both ideologies are (?archaic) to African way of life. GUNSA should not seek to throw dust into the eyes of enlightened Ghanaians who can intelligently distinguish between ideological propaganda and basic truth on international issues.

RESTORING RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL OPPOSED--The Ghanaian TIMES describes as vain what it calls the pro-Israeli lobbying in Ghana. Those who want a restoration of diplomatic relations with Israel argue that the break is economically disadvantageous to Ghana, that Egypt has restored relations with Israel and that Israel is not racist. According to the TIMES, there was no real evidence that Israel was interested in the industrial growth of Africa. On the other hand, Arab banks for African development and the $100 million loan granted to Ghana for the government for the Kpong hydroelectric project show Arab determination to see to the development of the continent. On Egyptian-Israeli relations, the paper maintains that Egypt was not the only factor when the OAU asked for the break in relations. The TIMES dismisses as ridiculous the argument that Israel is not racist. The UN General Assembly has declared that Zionism is racism. The paper concludes by saying that Israel is out of Ghana and is destined to stay out indefinitely. [Excerpt] [AB100835 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 10 Sep 81]

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS PRICE REDUCTION--The Ministry of Fuel and Power announced that with effect from next Monday, there will be a general reduction in the prices of petroleum products. Premium will sell at 12 cedis 30 pesewas, instead of 13 cedis; regular is reduced from 12 cedis to 11 cedis 30 pesewas; gas oil, from 9 cedis to 8 cedis 50 pesewas; kerosene, from 5 cedis 50 pesewas to 5 cedis; and liquefied petroleum gas, from 84 pesewas to 80 pesewas per pound. The reduction follows the discount of $4 per barrel of crude oil announced in Nigeria, Ghana's main traditional supplier. [Text] [AB041842 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 4 Sep 81]

NYAYO, ANTI-NYAYO POLITICS MAY PREVAIL

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 28 Aug 81 pp 6-7

[Text] It seems that Kenyans can expect a replay of the 1979 electioneering tactics during the 1984 general elections when candidiates were divided into two categories--the nyayo supporters and the anti-nyayo. At least that was the impression given by the minister for home and constitutional affairs, Mr Charles Njonjo, (under whose portfolio falls the supervision of elections) last weekend when he called on Kenyans to return nyayo adherents unopposed in the 1984 elections.

In the 1979 election campaigns, a great deal of political emotion surrounded the issue of whether or not one was a nyayo supporter with every candidate claiming to be the true nyayo man and all his opponents anti-nyayo. Being anti-nyayo meant that one was not a supporter of the government in general or of President Daniel arap Moi in particular, and those accused of being anti-nyayo were vaguely alluded to as subscribing to the change-the-constitution campaign of 1976.

In an apparent effort to keep out the anti-nyayo from the next parliament, numerous legal and political hurdles were created to block the path of those who were suspect. The most important of these was an unprecedented party clearance system and an amendment of the election law to limit both the campaign period and the amount of money a candidate could spend in the campaign. It was the then minister for home affairs, Mr Stanley Oloitipitip, (now minister for local government), who eventually disclosed in public that the desire of the government was to ensure that most of the then sitting members who were supporters of the government were re-elected and that aspiring outsiders who may "give the government a hard time" were not elected.

Coincidentally, Njonjo's new call for nyayo people to be returned unopposed was made at Oloitipitip's constituency at a meeting where Njonjo recommended the people of Kajiado South to return Oloitipitip unopposed in 1984. But unlike in 1979 when the so-called anti-nyayo were referred to as wanting to see only nyayo people returned also varied slightly from those given by Oloitipitip in 1979. According to Njonjo, continued leadership would bring more progress than if leaders were replaced every other election.

POST OFFICE OFFICIALS RESIGN, ARE SACKED

[Article by Mutegi Njau]

[Text]

TWO senior Posts bosses have been retired in the public interest and two others suspended, the Nation learned yesterday.

Those retired are Mr. Timothy P. Kiambi, Director of Telecommunications with the Kenya Posts and Telecommunications Coporation, and Mr. R.G.M. Mutiso, Chief Architect.

Suspended

And those suspended are, Mr. R.E. Measures, chief of Production and Services Improvement, and Mr. J.M. Muriithi, Transport Manager.

Corporation chairman D. Mlamba confirmed the action against the four officials but declined to elaborate.

Said he: "All I want to say is that the board has interdicted two officers and retired two others in the public interest and that investigations are going on."

Highly placed sources at the Corporation's headquarters told the Nation there was a scandal allegedly involving the sale of a Corporation car.

The sources said the car was sold at a drastically lower price than its real value.

Other sources said the disciplinary action had something to do with the awarding of a contract to install telephone lines in Nairobi.

Mr. Kiambi, 36, was appointed assistant regional director of the former East African Posts and Telecommunications in 1975.

Prior to this he was the principal of the Post Office Central Training School at Mbagathi.

He holds a B.Sc. (Hons) degree in electrical engineering and is a corporate member of the Institute of Electrical Engineers of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kiambi has also been a member of the board of directors of the Kenya External Telecommunications.

Mr. Reuben Mutiso studied at Machakos High School before joining the University of Nairobi where he qualified as an architect.

He was recently elected to represent Africa in the supreme council of the International Union of Architects at a meeting held in Katowice, Poland.

He is also the vice-chairman of the Architectural Association of Kenya.

MOMBASA EXPANDS PORT FOR HEAVIER TRADE

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 28 Aug 81 p 35

[Text]

THE port of Mombasa has experienced tremendous growth over the last few years. It has of course remained the port of entry for goods destined not only for Kenyan markets but also for Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi, Zaire and southern Sudan. Similarly, it is the port through which exports from these countries are handled. While some international trade with Tanzania used to be handled through Mombasa, this came to a halt following the closure of the border between Kenya and Tanzania in 1977. Since then, however, a substantial amount of traffic bound to and from southern Sudan has picked up, taking the place of the traffic lost due to the border closure.

However, the years have not all been good. For instance, in 1979 there was a very sharp fall in the tonnage of dry cargo handled by the port primarily as a result of import restrictions. Overall, the total tonnage of dry and liquid cargo handled in 1979 declined by 2.4 per cent. The decline could have been more severe but was moderated by an increase in imports of petroleum.

In comparison, exports did much better over the same period and played a significant part in maintaining a healthy business. Exports during this period rose by nearly 7 per cent, featuring increased loads of soda ash, cement, cement clinker, tea and maize. The number of ships calling at the port declined from 1,613 in 1978 to 1,531 in 1979.

If 1979 was a poor year for Mombasa port, 1980 was the converse. The total tonnage handled in 1980 rose sharply by 26 per cent aided mainly by high cereal imports which were shipped in to preempt a serious threat of famine. Whereas 5,983,000 tonnes of both dry and liquid cargo were landed in 1979, the figure rose to 7,426,000 tonnes in 1980. Dry cargo handled rose by 32 per cent while liquid cargo increased by 21.3 per cent. While the higher volume of business suggests a more buoyant economy, the higher volume was almost exclusively accounted for by imports with goods loaded for export remaining virtually unchanged at 2,036,000 tonnes as in 1979.

Imports of dry cargo alone rose from 1,037,000 in 1979 to 1,990,000 tonnes while bulk liquids rose from 2,822,000 tonnes to 3,400,000 tonnes. However, the number of ships calling at Mombasa port declined still further 1,453. There was a compensatory effect though, with the increasing use of ships with higher tonnages.

The port's development programme continued with the acquisition in 1980 of 72 trailers and 24 tractors for handling' container traffic. Other acquisitions during the same year included stationary container-handling cranes (transtainers) as well as some mobile cranes for yard traffic. During the previous year, the port had acquired two forklift trucks of 35 tonnes for stacking containers in addition to other forklift trucks with tonnages varying from 3 to 10 tonnes. To improve its navigational services, the port also acquired a barge, two launches and two pilot boats which were put in service in 1979.

Other development works in 1979 included construction of berth number 18 besides repairs to berth number 17. In 1980, the port authorities were able to complete the stabilisation work for berths 11, 12, 13 and 14 and commissioned dredging operations which were completed early this year. Currently, talks are still going on between the Kenya government and the European Economic Commission for the funding of proposed improvements to berth number 6 at Mbaraki. If the funds are eventually available, the Mbaraki berth will also be equipped with container-handling facilities to enable it to handle the expected growth in container traffic. The project is also envisaged to leave the other berths, especially berth number 13, with increased capacity to handle more miscellaneous traffic. The port authorities also commissioned the first solar-powered navigational light system situated at Ras Serani in 1980. But the major landmark in 1980 was probably the opening of Bandari College for training of harbour staff which was officially opened on August 26, 1980.

Following the granting of military facilities to the United States armed forces at Mombasa, some of the development work at the port is understood to be aimed at providing more docking and specialised handling facilities for American warships. In line with improved docking facilities, the Americans are understood to be constructing storage bunkers for munitions and other strategic war materials. ■

NO AVIATION FUEL SHORTAGE--There is no shortage of aviation fuel in Kenya, several airline operators told the Nation yesterday. They said the claims that the country was facing an acute shortage of the fuel were unfounded. They said although they had faced no shortage so far Kenya Shell Ltd. had recently told them to expect "some degree of reduction" in fuel supplies towards the end of the year. "We are getting normal supplies of the fuel and there is no shortage to the best of our knowledge," said Mr Z. Boxkovic, chairman of Boskovic Aircharters Ltd. But the price, he added, was "obviously high" although "we can buy as much fuel as we need." On reports about anticipated shortages, Mr Boskovic said: "It would kill us because it would mean we stop flying--and that would follow that we would stop paying our employees." At present, he said, air operators' business was good though slightly below the previous year's level. A Kenya Air Ltd. director, Mr A.F. Nickalls, said: "We have not been refused any fuel at all and we have met all demand for our services." He said there had been no indications so far about supplies being cut down. But about two months ago, he added, Shell had notified them of possible "reduction of fuel towards the end of the year." Sunbird, Ltd. general manager Peter Lucas said fuel flow to his firm was constant and that there was no indication of shortages. He said the firm's aircraft usually faced fuel shortage in Tanzania whenever services were operated to Dar es Salaam and other towns. He said Shell required air operators to pay for their supplies twice a month. In the past, he added, they had to pay for supplies only on the 15th of the following month for fuel consumed in the previous month. Business was steady but below the previous year's level, he added. SUGAR SELF-SUFFICIENCY--Kenya is now self-sufficient in unrefined mill-white sugar, and for the first time she has entered the export market. A Standard Chartered Bank report sas that during the past 17 years £200 million has been invested in Kenya's sugar industry to expand production. This has brought the country a vital saving in foreign exchange. In the sugar-growing areas of western Kenya, one of the most densely populated in the country, the report says, the growth of the industry has provided both employment and cash-earning opportunities on a large-scale. Although sugar cane was widely grown as a subsistence crop in pre-independent Kenya, its commercial development had been neglected, according to the report. In 1964, 67 percent of sugar consumed in Kenya was imported, half of it coming from Uganda. During the first 10 years of independence, sugar consumption rose to an average of 9.5 percent per annum and imports remained at a high level. Consumption fell in response to increases in the retail price of sugar in the mid-1970s, but since 1977 it has again shown an upward trend, the report said. When supplies were no longer available from Uganda, sugar production in Kenya has been progressively increased, according to the report. As a result imports fell sharply after 1974 and now the country is self-sufficient and has a small surplus for export. The report said that agrodindustrial projects, combining the advantages of large-scale processing of sugar with small-holder cultivation of cane, have formed the basis of the expansion programme. Since 1964, the Government has sponsored five such schemes in western Kenya. Muhoroni and Chemelil schemes became operational in the 1960s, each with a planned output of 60,000 tons of sugar per annum. When all the schemes currently being developed are fully operational, Kenya will have a total output of 500,000 tons of sugar per annum, which would ensure self-sufficiency until the mid-1980s. It is estimated that this will represent an annual foreign exchange saving of £90 million. The report added that although surplus sugar is currently being exported, it is acknowledged that a further expansion of the industry will be essential if Kenya is to remain self-sufficient. KENYA-SOMALIA COOPERATION--Mandera D.C.--Mr J.R.O. Ondieki, and his counterpart from Balet-Hawa in Somalia, Lieutenant Odaway Yusuf Farah, have agreed to end any action that may strain relations between the two border districts. The resolution was passed in a good neighbourliness round table meeting held in Mandera County Council Chambers on Tuesday. In attendance from the Kenya side were members of the District Security Committee and eight delegates from the Somali border town. The meeting also resolved that joint patrols be held regularly on both sides of the border to get rid of shifta bandits. Civilians and especially civil servants were allowed to go shopping across the common border without fear of being arrested either by Kenyan or Somali authorities. Speaking at the friendly meeting, Mr Ondieki said Kenya is a non-aligned country and was free to choose her friends either from the West or East. Mr Ondieki noted that if the two sides followed guidelines outlined in the O.A.U. and the U.N. charters, the peoples of Kenya and Somalia would live in peace, love and unity. Balet-Hawa D.C. Lt. Farah in reply observed that as administrators at a common border of their respective countries, they had a duty to see to it that Somali and Kenyan nationals lived in harmony. AVIATION SCHOOL OPENING--Kenya will have a new school of aviation next year. The school is scheduled to open its doors to students from Kenya and other countries by mid-1982, it has been disclosed in a paper presented at the Commonwealth Air Transport Council meeting going on in Nairobi. "This will be a much expanded and well-equipped school offering courses in the field of aviation," the paper presented by Kenya said. The initial setting up is being undertaken with financial and technical assistance from various countries and organisations including the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). To meet the technical challenge, the department of civil aviation has embarked upon the recruitment of high calibre technical staff and the retraining of existing personnel, the paper said. To enhance balanced development, technical committees have been set up. Experts from telecommunications agencies and Government planners will jointly plan, coordinate and monitor the implementation of all projects, the paper said. "This will go a long way in eliminating waste and duplication of efforts for similar objectives," the paper explained. Kenya has urged the council to assist members in setting up research groups for collecting, processing and disseminating technical data in the field of aviation. GOVERNMENT REJECTS TERRORIST BASE CHARGE, DISCUSSES REFUGEES

Denial Matanzima Charge

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 21 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

A Government spokesman this week dismissed as utter nonsense an allegation that Lesotho was being used as a terrorist base against South Africa.

The spokesman was reacting to a speech made by a homeland leader of Transkei, Chief Kaizer Matanzima in Umtata on his return from his state visit to South African on Monday.

Matanzima was quoted by the South African Broadcasting Service (SABC) as having said it was imperative that both Transkei and South Africa took measures to deal with a nearby terrorist base in Lesotho.

The spokesman pointed out that Lesotho would continue to give political asylum to South African refugees who had to flee the apartheid regime in South Africa.

"Lesotho as a member of the United Nations had pledged to provide asylum to refugees, but will not allow itself to be used as a base from which to launch attacks on neighbouring countries."

The spokesman warned Matanzima against making irresponsible statements as an attempt of seeking economic assistance from the South African government.

Expulsions for Criminal Activity

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 21 Aug 81 p 4

[Text] Fifteen South Africans were last week expelled from Lesotho following repeated warning by the Government against continued wanton criminal acts rampant in the country.

It was alleged that some of them had entered the country illegally whilst others masqueraded as refugees.

Commenting on the expulsion, a Government spokesman said some of those declared as persona non grata were regarded as South African agents.

The spokesman reaffirmed Lesotho's obligation to the refugee convention and said that victims of apartheid would always find a home in the country.

They are Emmanuel Liphuko Seeku, Aliaz Bizza, Petrus Thuto Alias Blood, Vincent Motake, Edwin Phallo Nokheseng, Chris Komane Sebodi, Simon Pitso Alias Daddy, Lawrance Lebesa, Elias Sebodi, Moffat T. Boleki, Eisenhower Konote, Jeffrey Mokhotloane, Tlale David Molokoane, Isaac Seboko, Israel Seatholo and Zebulon Tyibilika.

The Prime Minister, Dr Leabua Jonathan, two weeks ago expressed great concern over the increasing crime rate in the country when addressing senior police officers from all 10 districts in Maseru.

The Minister of Interior and Chieftainship Affairs, Morena Sekhonyana 'Maseribane recently warned that refugees involved in criminal acts would face deportation.

Addressing over 800 refugees here, Morena 'Maseribane said some of them appeared to be agents of the South African Department of National Security (DONS).

Meanwhile, 10 South Africans were last week detained for various criminal acts in Botswana. A number of those who masqueraded as refugees have already been deported to their country of origin.

JONATHAN ADDRESSES POLICE; PMU NOW 'FULL-FLEDGED' ARMY

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Tokelo Letsie]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Dr. Leabua Jonathan has asked the country's police force to improve its discipline and organization so that it can prevent crime before it is commited.

Addressing more than 150 senior police officers from all 10 districts at the Police Training College (PTC) in Maseru last Thursday, the Prime Minister expressed great concern over the increasing crime rate, particularly in Maseru.

He said in the past few months he had received alarming accounts of law-breaking from both citizens and representatives of various donor agencies and countries who reside in the nation's capital.

Negligence of duty on the part of the police would reflect badly on the force and on him as Minister responsible for defence and maintenance of law and order, the Premier observed.

Expressing his confidence in the police force which had cultivated a worthy tradition since its establishment during colonial times, the Prime Minister said that confidence would be further strengthened if he observed an appreciable fall in the rate of crime.

The Prime Minister announced that following an act of parliament passed during its last sitting, the Police Mobile Unit (PMU) had now become a full-fledged army.

He said that the army would be responsible for crushing uprisings that threatened the country's peace from outside. This gives you a chance to concentrate your energies on the protection of people's lives and property in times of peace, he said.

Speaking at the same occasion the Commissioner of Police, Major General S. R. Matela, told the gathering that all visitors to a country measured its degree of stability by the courtesy, discipline and efficiency of its police force.

He discouraged members of the force from washing their dirty linen in public as this would further destroy the people's confidence in them.

BOMB INCIDENTS--Part of the Eldorado Hotel, at Sea Point, Maseru, was slightly damaged by a bomb last weekend. The explosion which blew up the toilet section of the hotel operated by Mr Khalaki Sello, occurred at about 9.30 in the evening. There were no casualties. This is the second bomb directed at the property of Mr Sello. The first bomb exploded at his Old Europa house and was accompanied by pamphlets of the so called Lesotho Liberation Army (LLA) denouncing Mr Sello. These pamphlets also urged supporters of Ntsu Mokhehle's faction of the Basotholand Congress Party (BCP) not to have anything to do with the Pan-Africanist Congress (PAC) and the African National Congress (ANC) refugees living in Lesotho, charging that the two South African liberation movements were collaborating with the Police Mobile Unit (PMU). The police are investigating the matter. [Text] [Maseru LESOTHY WEEKLY in English 21 Aug 81 p 3]

SOUTH AFRICAN SUGAR ASSOCIATION--The South African Sugar Association (SASA) in cooperation with the Lesotho Flour Mills will establish a sugar packing plant in Maseru at a capital investment of about M500,000. A spokesman for the Lesothy National Development Corporation (LNDC), said the project would be financed mainly by the Lesothy Flour Mills. It would also provide the technical and commercial management for packing. The sugar packing plant will facilitate the distribution of sugar to wholesalers in the country, but it should be noted that this will not alter the existing prices of sugar. The plant is being established on the site of the Lesótho Flour Mills which has a rail siding to facilitate delivery of the sugar which will be transported in large bags by rail from South Africa. The establishment of this plant was negotiated by L.N.D.C.. It will provide 30 new jobs for the people of Lesotho. [Text] [Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 21 Aug 81 p 2]

MINEWORKERS IN SOUTH AFRICA--A spokesman for the Prime Minister's Office last week reported that his office had been receiving representations from Basotho mine workers in South Africa against an insurance scheme which had been instituted by that country's Chamber of Mines recently. The spokesman said although the Government of Lesotho accepted the principles of the insurance scheme, it would have liked that any such scheme to be discussed with and accepted by miners before its implementation. The mines and the Lesotho Govern= ment have not been consulted before the present scheme was implemented." The spokesman added that following these representations, Lesotho's Minister responsible for Labour, Mr E.R. Sekhonyana, had already been instructed to approach the South African Chamber of Mines against forcing miners to pay their monies into a scheme that is not acceptable to them. [Text] [Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 21 Aug 81 p 2]

RECORD MAIZE, SORGHUM HARVEST--The Prime Minister, Dr Leabua Jonathan, said this year's record harvest of maize and sorghum in the fields under the food self-sufficiency programme was a clear indication that Lesotho would be self-sufficient in food production even before 1985. Dr Jonathan said over Radio Lesotho this week that although harvesting had not yet been completed, the farmers were satisfied with the way the scheme had been successful. He observed that it was an indisputable fact that the programme had been far more successful than any other agricultural project ever launched in the country. The Premier said it was obvious that Lesotho would produce enough food for both local consumption and export purposes under the guidance of experts involved in the scheme. STUDENTS CALL FOR DISCUSSION OF STRIKE ISSUES

AB082024 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 1900 GMT 8 Sep 81

[Text] Students within the Monrovia Consolidated School System (MCSS) have petitioned the PRC [People's Redemption Council] chairman on education, Brig Gen Geoffrey (Gbake) to convene a meeting involving officials of the Ministry of Education, MCSS, and the Parents-Teachers Association to resolve the teachers' strike issue.

The petition, which was signed by all MCSS students representatives, called for an effective discussion of problems related to the teachers' salaries. They appealed to the minister of education to release the teachers' salary checks for August since they have already worked for them. The petition said during the investigation by the ministry, sureties should be formulated along with the (?pay checks) so that they could abide by agreement reached for the implementation of the salary scheme (?endorsed) by the Ministry of Education. They also said their position in the matter was not to encourage the teachers' strike action or to dispute the stand of the Ministry of Education, but to intervene for the betterment of all.

The petition said: "As all of us try to contribute our modest quota to the reshaping of our society in order to build a new class of society and upgrade the Liberian society, we pray that our little suggestions, which we hope will help to ameliorate the situation, will be considered."

Meanwhile the strike by teachers of the Monrovia Consolidated School System went into its second day today, Tuesday, with no apparent sign of reaching a compromise on the issue. The teachers went on strike yesterday in demand for pay increment and promised not to return to school unless their demand was met by government. The strike went ahead in defiance of the Ministry of Education's (?statement) calling on the teachers to return to school while the matter was being discussed or they should face dismissal. Reports in Monrovia today by local news organs said the MCSS teachers' strike is being supported by students of the system. Yesterday the head of state, CIC (Commander in Chief) Doe, in a first public comment on the incident, called on the minister of education to settle the matter as soon as possible to help the teachers return to their classes. The matter is still being handled by the Ministry of Education and there are yet no settlements.

RETURN TO CIVILIAN RULE--Liberians living abroad have been told to avoid pressing for early return to civilian rule in Liberia without first ensuring that the problems which necessitated the revolution last year had been solved. A release from the Foreign Ministry said Foreign Minister G. Bacchus Matthews made the statement recently at a meeting with Liberian students in the United States. Minister Matthews is currently in the United States where he is attending a special session of the UN General Assembly on Namibia. The release quoted Minister Matthews as saying that some hard decisions, which the government would make, would have reference to political, economic and social changes in the country. This, he said, would enable the civilian government which would follow to keep the nation together. [Text] [AB100725 Monrovia Radio ELWA in English 0625 GMT 10 Sep 81]

STUDENTS SUPPORT STRIKING TEACHERS--Monrovia, 8 Sep (AFP)--School students in Liberia have pledged full support for more than 1,000 state teachers in Monrovia who started their second day of strike today in demand for more pay and better incentives, the independent daily OBSERVER newspaper reported. The paper said the students agreed yesterday at a meeting that the demands of their teachers were legitimate and promised full solidarity until the demands were met. The students said that if the teachers interests were not protected, their education would be affected, the report added. They warned the Ministry of Education that they would boycott classes if the authorities carried out their threat to sack teachers who did not work and deprive them of their August pay checks. The National Association of Graduate and Student Teachers has also pledged its support for the striking teachers, the paper added. Meanwhile the president of the Monrovia Consolidated School System Teachers Association, William Kpoleh, said they would continue their strike until their demands were met. FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON RETURN TO BAMAKO

AB101145 Bamako Domestic Service in French 2015 GMT 9 Sep 81

[Summary from poor reception] "The minister of foreign affairs and international cooperation, Alioune Blondin Beye, this afternoon returned to Bamako at the end of a 1-month journey during which he visited the United Arab Emirates, Oman, China, France and Mexico. The word 'cooperation' often came up during all five stages of this journey. On the whole, the results of this journey are encouraging. In an interview with our reporter Laimine Coulibaly, the foreign minister talked about the relations between France and Mali."

[Begin recording] [Beye] It is necessary that we should define the new bases of cooperation between the two countries. "It is also important that we should explain to that friendly country Mali's position on African and world problems." "I have returned very satisfied with the results achieved during this visit to France."

I later joined the delegation of the head of state who was on an official visit to China. "This visit was very successful and I am convinced that it will help strengthen the already fruitful cooperation between the two countries."

[Question] You left Paris while the UN conference on the less advanced countries was going on. "What was the value of that conference."

[Answer] I can tell you that it was not by chance that this conference took place 1 month before the Cancun summit conference. This conference can help to prepare this summit better. It was interesting in many ways.

[Question] Mali has not been chosen to participate in the Cancun summit. How do you explain this?

[Answer] The Cancun summit will be attended by nine heads of state. There will be some heads of state of industrialized countries on one hand, and heads of state of some underdeveloped countries on the other. It is obvious that all the underdeveloped countries cannot be represented at this summit conference. Nigeria, Algeria, Ivory Coast and Tanzania will attend it. "I think these four countries will be enough to express the preoccupations of all the African countries." [End recording]

SWAPO VP'S WHEREABOUTS REMAINS MYSTERY

[Text] Mystery surrounds the whereabouts of South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) vice-president Mr Branden Simbwaye.

SWAPO in Lusaka claims that Mr Simbwaye, who has since 1964 been detained in Namibia by racist South Africa, was still suffering there.

But according to copies of correspondence between the Native Commissioner and Magistrate of Eastern Caprivi and Mrs Gertrude Simbwaye, the SWAPO leader's wife, her husband is understood to have been released in 1969.

"He stayed in Caprivi for about a week after being released but later fled from the country presumably to Zambia. It is thus not possible to supply you with his present address or whereabouts," the Commissioner said in a letter to Mrs Simbwaye dated August 31, 1976.

In another letter dated June 22, 1977, Mrs Simbwaye was advised by the Native Commissioner at Katima Mulilo to re-marry if she wanted to because "this office does not know the whereabouts of your husband and if he is still alive."

"He has been away for 13 years and I doubt if he will ever come back to you," said the letter.

SWAPO has since 1973 known of the disappearance of their vice-president.

In a letter to Mr Peter Katjavivi then SWAPO representative in Britain, Clive Cowley of the "Star Bureau" in Windhoek, Nambia, advised him to establish the whereabouts of Mr Simbwaye, once president of the Caprivi African National Union and lately vice-president of SWAPO.

Mr Cowley said in the letter that Mr Simbwaye was until 1972 "rusticated" on a farm near Khorixas in Damaraland, Namibia. He was then allowed to return to eastern Caprivi, but when a Mr Escher visited the area, he was officially informed that Mr Simbwaye had disappeared.

"The inference was that he had fled the country. I should much appreciate it if you would inform me if you know his whereabouts. If not, it will suffice if you merely confirm that his whereabouts are known to SWAPO," wrote Mr Cowley.

In his reply of March 29, 1973, Mr Katjavivi wrote that SWAPO were carrying out investigations into the matter and they would inform Mr Cowley in due course. Since then, there has been no follow up to the matter.

But when SWAPO expelled acting vice-president, Mr Mishake Muyongo together with eight others from the party last year for advocating and organising the breaking away of eastern Caprivi from Namibia, they appointed Mr Simbwaye as vice president.

Mr Sam Nujoma is president of the Party while the national chairman is Mr David Meroro.

Mr Simbwaye is a former president of CANU while Mr Muyongo was his vice president before the merger with SWAPO in 1964.

Sources close to his family believe he is dead and SWAPO should not have appointed him as vice-president.

"They know he is nowhere to be found and most likely he is dead so what game are they playing?

"SWAPO has never informed the International Red Cross about Mr Simbwaye being detained in Namibia, no international attention has been drawn to his plight or disappearance and the people in Caprivi are bitter about this," a reliable source said.

In her letters to SWAPO ated July 29, 1974 and August 28, 1975, Mrs Simbwaye urged the party to investigate the whereabouts of her husband and if possible make arrangements for her to visit him.

There has been no official announcement from SWAPO to confirm the whereabouts of Mr Simbwaye and if he is alive or dead. But his name still appears on the SWAPO leadership list on the post of vice-president.

BLACKS, WHITES VIEW ANGOLA INVASION DIFFERENTLY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Sep 81 pp 1, 3

[Editorial]

[Text] The perception and interpretation of the raid into Angola during the past few days has been largely presented in the local media as it is seen through conservative White eyes.

As such, the Whites have regarded the action as logical and justified.

Not so with many Blacks, and this must clearly be of concern to moderate Whites in general and the DTA White arm, the RP, in particular.

The DTA is committed to an internationally-supervised election and if it is to take the majority of Blacks with it, it has to win their favour.

Now, the crunch factor with the raid is that while it probably provided the DTA with a feeling of military triumph, the political benefits might well be negative.

The Advertiser conducted a random survey of Black opinion and came up with these findings:

--Many Blacks felt that the nature and magnitude of the strike was considerably more vicious than the provocation;

--Many did not see the raid in terms of the elimination of terrorist bases and installations, but saw it as wholesale slaughtering of their brethren;

--Many saw it as an extension of the colonial arm;

--And many saw it as a means of sabotaging UN Security Council Resolution 435 once and for all.

One moderate Black put the position succinctly: "The emergence of Black rule is more important to the Black man, even if it is under Swapo, than an indefinite continuation of infighting which serves no other purpose than to maintain the privileges of the Whites."

He did not believe that the present constitutional dispensation constituted majority rule; he felt that the legislative bodies were negative offshoots of White officialdom, hence their being labelled as puppet bodies.

The perception is probably wellspread and the DTA is particularly vulnerable to it in the grey areas of support.

Also significant, in interviewing Blacks, many were reluctant to comment, fearing the consequences (mostly imaginary), while others did not want to be identified.

The point that we are trying to make is that while we do not question the need and correctness of the SADF raid into Angola, one should not misread the possible political implications in the local context.

It was precisely on this kind of issue that the Smith-Muzorewa alliance went wrong: military triumphs were wrongly equated with political successes, believing that the only dimension to Black thinking was a respect for strength.

Lets not make the same mistake.

IRAQ, ANGOLA REVEAL SOME SIMILARITIES IN SITUATION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 Sep 81 p 17

[Article by Aida Parker: "Iraq or Angola--The Principle is the Same"

[Text]

ON JUNE 7 this year the Israelis carried out an air strike against a top-secret Iraqi nuclear reactor just outside Baghdad. Israel drew down on itself the immediate condemnation of nearly the whole world.

Their sin, of course, was obvious: they had made it plain they would stoop to anything where self-defence and survival were concerned.

There are striking analogies between Israel's Baghdad raid and what is happening with South African troops now fighting in Southern Angola.

Israel and South Africa are among the few Western nations today which still possess battle-ready armies. In the interests of self-survival, they are also among the very few prepared to use them. With the nuclear reactor, the Israelis knew they had a ticking bomb on their doorstep — and they did something about it. The SADF has done exactly the same thing.

Nor should anyone complain that South Africa did not give due warning that it could be forced into making a pre-emptive strike.

On August 10, Major-General Charles Lloyd, Officer Commanding SWA Territorial Forces, indicated that the 15-year old bush war against Swapo was assuming the characteristics of conventional warfare.

SAM-3 and SAM-6, radar-controlled ground-to-air missiles were, he disclosed, being installed at Mocamedes and Lubango. With these missiles and tracking stations, it appeared that "an air umbrella is being created to help Swapo and to restrict our forces."

General Lloyd then added: "The South African and SWA forces are ready to intensify the war effort and to increase the level of our fighting forces, if necessary. We are preparing ourselves mentally and physically for a more serious war."

LOST

General Lloyd's sombre warning was largely lost in the hysteria generated over the Springbok rugby tour.

Certainly, his announcement that SAM-3 and SAM-6 systems were being strung along the Angola border, under East German supervision, came as a distinct shock to even such well-informed organisations as the prestigious British Institute for Strategic Studies.

The SAM-3 (codenamed Goa) is a mobile, low-altitude anti-aircraft missile widely deployed by the USSR and other Warsaw Pact countries in South-east Asia, the Middle East and Africa.

It is a descendant of the SAM-2 (Guideline), first publicly displayed in Moscow in 1957. Western intelligence agencies generally believe that it was an early version of the guideline that brought down the U-2 aircraft flown by Francis Gary Powers over the Soviet Union on May Day, 1960.

The weapon system has undergone considerable refinement since, and today appears in a variety of versions. The SAM-3 deployed by the East Germans in Angola is mobile, transported on a semi-trailer and operated from a rotating luancher. The system can track up to six aircraft simultaneously, allowing more than one missle to be fired at the same target.

It was this system which was used with such deadly effect against low-flying Israeli strike aircraft in the 1973 Yom Kippur War. Considerable information has been derived from systems captured by the Israelis.

Quite apart from the dangerous SAM systems, there is no question that the East-bloc nations have been turning Southern Angola into an arsenal.

Soviet-built equipment in the area is known to include T-54 and T-34 heavy tanks, PT-56 light tanks, BRDM-2 armoured cars, hundreds of armoured personnel carriers, plus multiple rocket-launchers (Stalin organs) and a wide spread of artillery and mortars.

The air-force strength is believed to include 20 MiG 21s and 18 MiG 17s.

It is generally accepted that between 20 000 and 21 000 Cuban combat troops are still stationed in Angola, plus 1 200 East Germans in a "Friendship Brigade" and 1 600 East German civilian specialists.

PAINED UPROAR

The pained uproar from the West over the South African strike into Angola is, all things considered, quite amazing.

Having captured Angola and Mozambique, having gained massive control of the Zambian Government and now making important inroads in Zimbabwe, Moscow now quite clearly regards everything in Southern Africa as fair game.

An organisation like Swapo, for instance, could not survive unless two requirements were met:

- Support by a major power;
- Base facilities.

In Swapo's case, Angola provides its main base facilities. Massive support – financial, military and diplomatic – comes from the Warsaw Pact countries.

It is no secret, or should be no secret, that the military build-up along the Angolan-SWA border over the past 18 months has had top priority in Soviet planning for a "patriotic uprising" in SWA.

Yet, as things stand right now, the West has the best opportunity yet to retrieve the Angolan prize and roll back the whole Soviet operation, not only in Southern Africa but throughout the continent.

WAR-WEARY

The Cubans in Angola are known to have become war-weary, wondering whether it would not be more profitable to sell rum and cigars on world markets than fighting a no-win bush war far from home and family.

The South Africans are inflicted a crushing blow on the East German-supported Swapo forces on both sides of the Angolan border. And, despite what the propagandists claim, South Africa has by no means exerted its full muscle yet.

It is claimed the SADF pushed 45 000 men into Angola. There were, in fact, far less than half that number.

Between them, Dr Jonas Savimbi's Unita guerrillas and the South Africans could destabilise and defeat the entire Russo/Cuban/East German operation. Will they be allowed to do that?

Not if the endlessly gullible Western Press and politicians have their way. Already the propaganda mills, West and East, are being cranked against South Africa.

British strategist Brian Crozier summed it all up when he said: "Over SWA-Namibia the question they ask is: How can we get the South Africans out, to avoid unpleasantness with the USSR and Black Africa? Whereas the real question they should be asking is: How can we help them prevent still another Marxist takeover on behalf of the Soviets?"

NUJOMA VOICES DEPRECATION FOR BOERS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 Sep 81 p 9

[Article by Gail Visagie: "These Are the Acts of a Dying Horse"]

[Text]

AT PRESENT, all the enemy intensified acts of terror and banditry in Namibia signify the last kick of a dying horse.

These are the words of Sam Nujoma, the President of Swapo and the "Commander-in-Chief" of the People's Liberation Army of Namibia (PLAN) with which he greeted his people on the 15th anniversary of PLAN.

In this message, which seems particularly ironic in the light of the recent follow-up operations in Angola, Mr Nujoma recalls August 1966, when Swapo soldiers clashed for the first time with "the racist SA Army of occupation at Onkulumbashe in north-western Namibia."

Since then, he maintains, PLAN has grown from strength to strength. Nujoma adds "Meanwhile the heroic combatants of PLAN have been inflicting heavy losses on the enemy racist soldiers and their armaments.

"We all know very well that when Swapo started with the armed struggle the Boers were very arrogant and too stupid. They were even saying that it would take them a few weeks to destory completely PLAN combatants. However, later on, when the Boers realised that many Boer-boys were being shot dead in big numbers by the brave Swapo soldiers, the Boer-leaders in Pretoria were forced to hire mercenaries from the imperialist countries and also to bribe those selfish and ignorant Namibians in order to help them in their colonial and unjust war."

One wonders whether Nujoma had his tongue in his cheek when compiling this message, but he continues: "As you know, the Boers used to say that they would never call our country Namibia. On the other hand, the Boers have all along been imprisoning, torturing and killing the patriotic Namibians for alleged cooperation with PLAN combatants.

"The Boers used to say that they would never even talk to "terrorists". But, because of the shining victories which Swapo has been scoring on the military, political and diplomatic fronts the very same racist Boers were forced to swallow their racist pride."

Then, unblushingly, Nujoma adds "Therefore, the Boers went to Geneva in Janaury this year, to talk to Swapo – the same Swapo of course, which they call terrorists.

The punchline follows: "Apparently the Boers have now, at long last, learned the bitter lesson that the freedom fighters, whom they used to call terrorists, for example in Mozambique, Angola and Zimbabwe are today the ruling parties. Whom are the racist Boers still trying to fool?"

He states that the failure of the talks in Geneva was due to the childish behaviour of the "racist Boers" and this clearly showed that the "boers still need some painful lessons to come to their senses."

In the same brash vein Nujoma states that "Meanwhile in Namibia, racist Dirk Mudge is arrogantly going ahead with the consolidation of the unilateral declaration of independence (UDI). We are not surprised at all, because his fellow racist Ian Smith of Rhodesia, who was also fully supported by racist Pretoria, tried in the same way but failed badly.

"So let Mudge remember this, today the brave and victorious Zimbabweans are enjoying their hardwon freedom and independence.

"And when I visited this beautiful country recently to participate in the Week of Solidarity with the People of Namibia, which was organised by our brothers and sisters of this country, they fully expressed their support for our just cause in word and in action.

"Therefore, I am very happy to report to you that Swapo of Namibia enjoys full support from the people of this sister African country, as well as allround assistance from the African continent and indeed, from the whole progressive mankind the whole world over.

POLICE BREAK UP NAMIBIA DAY MARCH

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] An impromptu Swapo march at the end of "Namibia Day' festivities in Windhoek's Black Township of Katutura was dispersed by police on Saturday.

Police, in their vehicles, charged the crowd of about 2 000 and released thunderflashes after earlier appeals to abandon the march failed.

A Police spokesman said the licence Swapo had obtained for the holding of the Namibia Day festivities — anniversary of the first clash between Swapo terrorists and the Security Forces 15 years ago — had expressely excluded any demonstrations outside a designated field.

The crowd of chanting and banner-waving Swapo supporters reformed after the Police charge and continued to march through the township without further incidents until it disbanded just before sunset.

The Namibia Day celebrations began at noon when a crowd of about 3 000 Swapo supporters gathered in Katutura and listened to speeches interspersed with dancing and political playletts performed by Youth League members.

Compared to previous years, the celebrations were marked by the absence of prominent members of the internal wing of the party and was largely dominated by the organisation's Youth League.

"We are here today to bring about the end of the South African occupation of Namibia" one of the speakers said amid chants of "power" and "A luta continua" (the struggle continues).

"If South Africa does not want to learn from the history of Angola, Mozambique and Zimbabwe, it will have to repeat that history" another said.

Attempts by people in a truck equipped with loudhailers to drown out the Swapo speeches with the edge of the crowd led to a brief scuffle at one stage.

Anti-Swapo slogans chanted by the Herero-speaking driver of the truck continued intermittently during the day.

"Swapo should not be allowed to hold political meetings while terrorists killed civilians in the north of the territory," was one of the slogans broadcast by the truck. — Sapa

CHURCHES CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO CIVIL UNREST

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by David Pieters: "Churches Call For Public Inquiry"]

[Text] The council of Churches in Namibia has called upon the Administrator General, Mr Danie Hough, to institute an independent public commission of inquiry into the recent civil unrest in the Orwetoveni township at Otjiwarongo.

Receipt of the Council's written request which was compiled following an emergency session of the CCN's Executive has been acknowledged by the AG's Office which has promised to look into the matter and inform the Council of any further steps to be taken.

Reverend Dr A J Maasdorp, General Secretary of the CCN, said it was necessary to allow people to give evidence before a public commission of inquiry for these reasons:

- Conflicting press reports surrounding the events in Orwetoveni;
- Rumours circulating amongst the residents that the Police acted maliciously;
- And that the real number of deaths had not been established.

Most of the Black people living in the township form part of one of the CCN's member churches, D Rev Maasdorp said, and the CCN was therefore responsible to its people to motivate such a commission.

The letter addressed to the AG by the Council also states that "members of our churches have been directly involved in the occurrences."

The three days of unrest in Orwetoveni during August 7 — 10 and which left an unknown number of people dead and many injured, was sparked by the stabbing of a Damara woman, allegedly by an Owambo man, and led to violent clashes on a large scale between the township's Owambo and Damara communities.

During the upheaval, the house of an Owambo inhabitant in the township was attacked and virtually destroyed by an angry mob, and several people, mainly Owambo men were killed.

The original perpetrators of the stabbing incident have apparently not yet been found.

Reports of unprovoked violence by police and army units who launched a teargas attack and baton charge on the residents of the Owambo compound were quoted in the press at the time.

The Council of Churches states in its letter to the AG that "It is our firm belief that mere inquests will not suffice to reveal the real nature of or causes of these horrendous events "and offers its assistance to a public commission of inquiry and its preparedness to delegate a person to serve on it.

A search of the Owambo compound on the Monday following a weekend of violent clashes between the Damara and Owambo communities, resulted in a truckload of personal weapons being confiscated by the Police.

The Owambo residents of the compound who were congregated outside the compound during the search, were then allegedly attacked from behind by a barrage of teargas bombs numbering about 30, and followed by a baton charge in which White and Black Police and Army units were involved.

It was also reported that most of the Black uniformed men were Damara-speaking.

Rev Maasdorp stressed the Council's sincere interest in the maintenance of law and order in the country, and therefore feels that only a public commission which would afford people to air their grievances, would contribute to the prevention of similar upheavals recurring in the future.

NEEF ATTACKS NARROW GERMAN PROVINCIALISM

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Sep 81 p 5

[Article by David Pieters: "A Scathing Attack by Werner Neef]

[Text] The ministers' Council and the Interessengemeinschaft have come under sharp attack in the columns of the Allgemeine Zeitung with the publication of an open letter written by Mr Werner Neef.

Mr Neef, who resigned from the National Assembly and the Ministers' Council during the last session and who left the IG at the beginning of the year, defended his political position which apparently came under attack during the recent congress of the IG.

Mr Neef stated in his letter that he had not left the political scene in SWA, but might "in a short while show many Germans the way by taking a political step.

"For that I do not need a new party, no pressure group, no swept up emotions, no tenuous relations with Bonn, and other things..."

Mr Neef accused the IG of assuming, incorrectly, that it represents the majority of German-speaking Southwesters, and turning to both the Republican Party and the IG says: "...the RP under the leadership of Mr Mudge as the carrier of concilliation, equal opportunities, as representative of the poorest, the illiterate without guilt and the unemployed, has already missed its appointment with history and destiny..."

Of the IG Mr Neef states in his letter: "If you maintain or suggest that the IG represents the German-speaking Southwesters, then you have already divided the Germans by saying that because there are thousands, yes, Mr Lilienthal, thousands, who don't want to be represented by you or the IG. Examine for yourself if this is correct or not."

Mr K Lilienthal is Chairman of the IG.

REALISTIC

About his own role in German politics in SWA Mr Neef goes on to state that he is "realistic enough and have always been clear about it that I would have divided the Germans by claiming to represent the whole community because I am honest enough to know that probably thousands of German Southwesters do not and did not want to be represented by me."

Mr Neef placed emphasis on the unemployment situation in the country and the negative political implications it holds, as well as criticising the Ministers' Council for its insensitive attitude to the "unemployed proletariat".

He writes: "..."the Minister concerned (an apparent reference to Mr Mudge) does not know until now how many unemployed there in our country, a few hundred, a few thousand, ten thousand or more, or does the Chairman Minister know the number but does not reveal it to his colleagues in the Ministers' Council so that nobody can prove that there is growing unemployment?"

Describing rising unemployment as "our most serious problem", Mr Neef goes on to say that "those of us who are a bit older still know how unemployment in the last 60 years determined the history of Germany, Italy, Spain, Portugal and recently France, with four Communists in the Cabinet. Here as well, you cannot expect anything else but that the unemployed proletariat will turn towards Communism."

Neither the recent RP congress or the IG congress devoted sufficient attention to the problem of unemployment, Mr Neef said.

Mr Neef also reprimands Mr Lilienthal and the IG for their political role amongst the SWA Germans, defending himself from previous attacks within the IG for his "Germanic conservatism."

Mr Neef insists that he struggled for the political rights of the SWA Germans, assisted by others "long before there was an IG or a Mr Lilienthal in SWA. The political landscape was different from then but the struggle for the German language was the same."

During the recent IG congress held in camera, recent remarks were apparently directed at Mr Neef who was accused of "soiling his own nest."

In reply Mr Neef states that the IG "is not the German nest" and concludes by saying that he "does not have a German nest but only a Southwest nest."

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BELIEVES 1981-1982 BUDGET IS BALANCED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 Sep 81 p 27

[Article by Gail Visagie: "On an Even Keel']

[Text]

THIS YEAR'S budget of the Central Government has merit in that, during a year of recession, it is, with a few exceptions, going to keep the economy running at the accustomed pace of the last few years.

This is the opinion expressed in the Chamber of Commerce and Industries of SWA's review on the budget for the fiscal year 1981/82.

The Chamber feels that the economy of the country — the vital aspect of daily life — is being kept intact and ready for the recovery when better world and local circumstances prevail.

"We are confident that we can rely on the time-proven resilience of our people to put our economy back on the growth path, hopefully next year, when the world recession is expected to start easing and provided our drought is broken.

"In the meantime, we can expect our economy to run on a fairly even keel, despite the threatening cloud represented by tighter and dearer money, at least until the end of this year, or even the first quarter of 1982," Mr Harold Pupkewitz, President of the Chamber said.

However, despite this balanced view of the budget, the Chamber still had a number of reservations and arrived at a number of conclusions.

It was felt that the public sector is living above it's means and cannot continue doing so in the medium to long term.

On the other hand, it had to be understood that the Government had a duty to keep the economy going "at best" during a period of political uncertainty, as well as to stimulate the economy activity in order to even out the current effects of world cyclical economic factors in a country such as this which is so vulnerable to world commodity market fluctuations.

In addition the Government also had a duty to put our farming industry on a sounder economic basis to withstand the periodic droughts — in many cases this may mean achieving improved technical efficiency within an economic framework. The Government also had to promote industrialisation in the interests of creating job opportunities requiring a wider range of skills than up till now to satisfy — among other things — the people's aspirations and rising expectations.

Finally, the Government also had a duty to promote greater specialisation and sophistication in commerce which acted as the catalyst to the other economic sectors.

AVOIDED

The Chamber felt that all or most of the Government reserve funds accumulated during the 1960s and 1970s had been used. While there were good reasons for borrowing, borrowing should be avoided in any one year more than five percent of the GDP. This would ensure (bearing in mind the high interest rates) that the interest burden over a period of say 10 years, did not cummulatively exceed five percent of the GDP.

Consequently, when the first year's debt is rolled over after 10 years there is no greater burden t an five percent of the GDP.

Another conclusion reached was that the combined budgets of the first and second tier government should progressively move towards forming a lower percentage of GDP than now.

This must be planned for implementation as soon as a reasonable degree of political certainty had been achieved.

Government capital expenditure must strongly concentrate on improving directly, or indirectly, the income-generating capacity of the economy.

EQUAL PRIORITY

The Chamber felt that expenditure on improving human resources, with emphasis on the working population should enjoy equal if not greater priority compared with physical infrastructure. In this connection, it was felt that adequate sums of money should be voted for sub-economic housing and fiscal means introduced to encourage more housing being provided by owners, if unavoidable, at subsidised interest rates.

TOO MUCH

Too much money, the Chamber said, had been voted on drought relief for 1981/82. A substantial part of it should have been carried forward to 1982/83 "especially as we may have to contend with a second year of drought. The most efficient control must be exercised that the taxpayer's money gets into the hands of the deserving farmers only and to a degree which is fair to the other sectors of the economy from which taxes have been collected."

The time had also come when more money should be so spent on research and development to facilitate the introduction of more and better technology in the economy in general — but with particular emphasis on farming, both in the subsistence and commercial farming regions.

"A five percent to 10 percent cut in all or most of the administrative sections will provide the funds," according to Mr Pupkewitz.

The Chamber felt that there was an urgent need for a sound economic development plan, linked to a wise strategy which would provide for greater wealth creation and more jobs.

Feasibility and viability studies in report of promising projects should be started at the earliest possible date to avoid the rushed (and perhaps unwise) decisions of the past few years.

Finally, a problem that had to be faced fearlessly was that of income inequalities.

"We believe that the answer does not lie simply in developing a programme of increases in services to low income groups without expecting any contribution to the costs of the services from the people concerned. We advocate emphasis on the improvement in the earnings capacity of the lower income groups through the institutions in the market in order to either relieve the burden on the expenditure side of the Government or widen the tax base on the income side — or a combination of both."

Mr Pupkewitz concluded "When all these and other salient factors are taken into account, we will find in time that our tax money is progressively used more wisely in the interests of achieving a gradual better standard of living for all our people.

"We are confident that the authorities are, in all likelihood busy with all or most of the matters mentioned to improve the economy."

The Chamber, he said, was ready and organised to play it's part in liaison, co-operation and collaboration with them.

ANGOLAN REFUGEES ENTERING SOUTH-WEST AFRICA--A total of 267 refugees from Angola have crossed into South-West Africa/Namibia since the recent South African military operation in southern Angola. An Ovambo administration official said 175 refugees crossed into (Ohanguela) in the northern (?zone) last week and a further 92 have now arrived in Osbakati. He thought that many of these at (Ohanguela) would probably return to Angola at some time in the future. The authorities were considering the position of those who wanted to remain in Ovambo. LIBYAN WOOING OF NOMADS--Niamey, 5 Sep (AFP)--The Niger Government, showing its concern over Libyan wooing of this country's Tuareg nomads, has sent special greetings to their annual gathering of the herds at salt licks in northern Niger. The roundup of the nomads' camels and zebus (oxen), which takes place at the end of the rainy season in the Ingall region of Agadez Department, was officially opened by Tahoua Department Prefect (Governor) Major Tanja Mamadou, a former interior minister. He went from camp to camp among the nomads, transmitting the brotherly greetings of Niger's president, Colonel Seyni Kountche. Maj Mamadou spoke on the themes of national unity and struggle against the detractors. Meantime, the official newspaper LE SAHEL reported today the Niger authorities firm determination...to put an end once and for all to crazy rumors spread by certain countries (an allusion to Libya) that Niger has differences with this segment of its people, the nomads. Since the Libyan military intervention in Chad last year, Niamey has repeatedly expressed disapproval at what it sees as Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's destabilizing activities in Africa immediately below the Sahara. Many of the countries of the Sahel Belt--including Niger--are governed by black farming people from the south but have substantial minorities of Moslem nomads in their northern regions at whom they feel Libya is directing an appeal. 'DAILY TIMES' CRITICIZES REAGAN ON NEUTRON BOMB

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 14 Aug 81 p 3

[Editorial: "A Threat to Mankind"]

[Text] There is no doubt that President Ronald Reagan of the United States possesses a hawkishness that is far from statesmanly. His decision last week to add the controversial neutron bomb to his country's nuclear arsenal merely confirms the former actor in his chosen role of the moment.

The "neutron bomb" has evoked a worldwide series of protests and demonstrations ever since its first mention. Former President Jimmy Carter was forced to abandon its assembly, though he permitted manufacture of the components, in an occasional American deference to world opinion. But no so the ideologically dogmatic Cold Warmonger that succeeded him.

The aim of this renewed edition of the Cold War is ostensibly to achieve parity with the Soviet Union. This euphemism for the escalation of international instruments of terror has been the stock excuse of the superpowers in their bid to maintain relative global ascendancy. Yet, each side has always been able to counter the other.

The Third World in particular has been the reluctant witness of the lethal East-West rivalry in the battlefields of Korea, Vietnam, Cambodia and elsewhere. We have seen this mirage of parity play itself out at the United Nations and countless conference halls. It has even translated itself into a struggle for the mastery of outer space.

Yet, there is no visible end to the misguided attempt at a balance of power--or rather, balance of terror--through the attempts at parity since 1953. The fallacy of this attempt has for so long been glaring to the rest of the world, with the exception of the USA and the USSR, and their fellow travellers. The promising Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT) package has been stalled because of their egotism.

The present scare being raised by the neutron bomb confirms once more that technological progress is no more than a double-edged sword. Indeed, the macabre scenario, so well painted in science fiction, of man's technical artifacts one day slipping his control, may well come to pass. Not only the holocausts of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, but even the more recent nightmare of the from America's nuclear reactors on Three Mile Island, demonstrate vividly how a premature Armaggedon is being invited for mankind.

The danger of the neutron bomb is even more highlighted by its stated characteristics. Its radiation effects can cause the mortality of all living beings while virtually leaving intact buildings and inanimate objects. The pity being that there may be no survivors to savour their greed on those material objects so highly prized above human life.

There is much nations which still have a conscience for humanity can do. Pressures must be brought to bear on the United States--and also the Soviet Union--for them to understand that they ought not unduly imperil mankind for their own selfish reasons. There is no known ideology which authorises any of them to do so.

ANC, PAC URGED TO COOPERATE IN SOUTH AFRICAN STRUGGLE

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 26 Aug 81 p 3

[Editorial: "The ANC, PAC Rift"]

[Text] THE existence of factions seems to have become such a familiar feature of liberation movements in Africa, that it would appear almost unnecessary to worry about what really should be an encumbrance to freedom fighting, anymore.

Invariably, the attainment of independence clears the painful memory of schism. In Angola, Guinea-Bissau and lately Zimbabwe, victory over long years of colonialism was seen as the ultimate alixir in the face of which all previous obstacles literally disappeared.

Yet, we find it difficult to be at any ease with the fractious wedges that now divide the liberation organisations of South Africa, if only because of the rather unique nature of the struggle there.

Specifically, the current split centres around the African National Congress (ANC) on one hand, and the Pan-African Congress (PAC), on the other.

The blank between the two rival bodies has hardly been helped by the fact that various member-countries of the OAU support one faction, and not the other.

It is naive to seek a fusion of these groups, since the hostility between them appears to be very deep and abiding. Moreover, there is the danger that such a process will be so tortuous that it could be distracting in the long run.

However, we would want the various participants in the struggle to take note of one basic phenomenon. And it is that the unfolding Drama in South Africa, as already hinted, is radically different from the other conflicts that have taken place elsewhere in the continent. All along, the onslaught had been focused more on colonialism rather than racism. Moreover, the encounter with South Africa has always taken place on a vicarious level.

But now, the issues are being joined with a group of 'verkramptes' who are fanatically devoted to their cause, such that they will do anything to stem the tide of History.

As a matter of urgency therefore, we enjoin the various actors in the struggle to recognise the important cause in which they are constrained to play down any ethnic, ideological or whatever divisions that exist among them. They should allow the objective of overthrowing the enemy to loom largest, in their calculations.

African countries can do a lot to bridge the existing gulf. They should shun being overtly or covertly on either side. We believe that this stance is most auspicious for procuring a meeting point. The Liberation Committee of the OAU should provide the greatest inspiration by helping to catalyse, and if possible pioneer, any co-ordinating ventures between these two groups.

We believe that the demise of the apartheid regime would be hastened by an outlook that combines a recognition of the rights of various liberation groups with a need to harness the similarity of their steam against a common enemy.

MINISTER DENIES INDICATING INTENTION TO SPLIT NLC

Minister's Comment

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 24 Aug 81 p 18

[Article by Jackson Imafidon]

[Excerpt] Mr Adebisi Ogedengbe, the Minister of Employment, Labour and Productivity, has denied that the Federal Government was making moves to split the Nigeria Labour Congress and divide the Nigerian workers in the process.

The Minister was addressing a delegation of Labour journalists in Lagos last week.

He said that he has all along been quoted out of context, that he is quoted to have said that the Federal Government was going to initiate moves to amend Trade Unions Act 22 of 1978.

Mr Ogedengbe added that to the best of his knowledge neither his ministry, the President nor the President-in-Council has indicated any intention of amending the said Acts 22 of 1978.

He, however, said that he was aware that some members of the National Assembly were proposing the Bill. The minister said that if the opinion of his ministry was sought by the movers of the Bill in the National Assembly, professional advice would have been placed at their disposal which could have made them drop the idea.

Nevertheless, he added, the law makers were only doing what they felt was their duty and that the right of forming more than one central labour organisation depended on the Nigerian workers who had their democratic right to exercise.

Mr Ogendengbe said that what he said in his address at the International Labour Organisation conference last June was that the Nigerian government would examine the labour laws, particularly the Trade Union Acts 22 of 1978 and report back at the next conference.

He said that he could not see how he could be interpreted to mean that the Federal Government intended to amend Act 22 of 1978 to allow for the formation of more than one central labour organisation.

Sunmonu at Jos Rally

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 14 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

LABOUR leader Hassan Sunmonu was forced to abandon a rally in Jos, when his audience staged a walk-out.

Mr. Sunmonu, the NLC president, had been whipping up support for moves to oppose a Bill, which would allow a rival central labour organisation to emerge.

About 800 workers had listened as Mr. Sunmonu unleashed attack on the Bill for about one hour.

He explained why the NLC was fighting for a "workers' charter of demand," which, among other things, encompassed restoration of car loans and national minimum wage. Then he delivered another talk on the Federal-initiated "Green Revolution" programme.

And that may have broken the camel's back. For the audience suddenly began to troop out of the hall, at the Jos Cultural Centre.

Minutes later, only about 50 persons were left, many of them NLC officials.

Apparently startled, Mr. Sunmonu was forced to terminate the rally, after singing the "victory song" with the handful.

Earlier, he had told the rally that allegation that the congress had been politicised was baseless, because it was "impossible for any body or political party to manipulate the national executive committee of the congress."

Mr. Sunmonu said the proposed legislation was meant to divide the workers, with a view to enslaving them. And he urged that they must 'demand for their rights and not beg for them."

Civil Service Union Leader

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 13 Aug 81 p 29

[Text]

THE National President of the Nigeria Civil Service Union, Mr. David Ojeli, has condemned the threat by the Nigeria Labour Congress to call out workers on an indefinite strike if the Trade Union Acts 21 and 22 of 1978 were amended.

In a statement in Lagos, Mr. Ojeli described the threat as "an empty boast" and proof that the NLC had no respect for the rule of law.

Mr. Ojeli said the proposed labour amendment was not designed to break the NLC but to reaffirm the Freedom of Association and the Right to Organise (ILO Convention) which the NLC had endorsed.

He wondered why the NLC President, Mr. Sunmonu, should prefer to lead an organisation whose membership was compelled by law and not popularly acceptable to members.

Mr. Ojeli urged Mr. Sunmonu to remember the NLC general strike of May 11 and 12, 1981 which, he said, did not receive the support of the majority of workers.

"If Mr. Sunmonu has not learnt any lesson from the last ill-fated strike, he should call another one and see the result. During the last strike, he narrowly escaped a vote of no confidence, this time, he will surely meet his Waterloo. He has neither the capacity nor the justification for such a strike," Mr. Ojeli declared.

Asserting that Nigerian workers were no fools, Mr. Ojeli warned the NLC to stop mean propaganda, blackmail and political sentiments adding that the congress president would not gain anything by such methods.

"To run from pillar to post, telling lies to please authorities will not save the congress from the disintegration which Sunmonu has brought about through partisan politics and ideological fanaticism." Mr. Ojeli said.

Agricultural Workers Union

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 21 Aug 81 p 2

[Text]

SECRETARY-GENERAL of the Agricultural and Allied Workers' Union of Nigeria (AAWUN), Alhaji Kola Balogun, has appealed to members of National Assembly to disregard the 'baseless cries' of the President of the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) against the passing of the Trade Unions Amendment Bill.

In a statement in Lagos recently, Alhaji Balogun claimed that if the bill was passed into law, it would guarantee basic freedom of industrial trade unions and of the ordinary Nigerian worker.

He described Mr. Sunmonu's opposition to the bill as 'a product of his ignorance as to what are the true bases of workers' rights and freedoms.'

Alhaji Kola, who was recently elected President-General of the Pan African Federation of Agricultural Trade Union (PAFAU), said that the proposed Trade Union Amendment Bill would not split the NLC.

'In fact', he stressed, 'no forces can split the NLC if the generality of Nigerian workers have faith and belief in the continued existence of a central labour centre.'

He accused the NLC leader of 'autocratic tendencies', adding that Mr. Sunmonu should be held responsible 'for promoting and aiding measures that have already destroyed the strong base of love, unity and brotherhood on which the NLC was built.'

Alhaji Kola, however, called on members of National Assembly to delete any provision that could weaken the organisational activities of the labour movement.

NPN ANTICIPATES WORKING AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER PARTIES

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 26 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

THE NPN national chairman, Chief Adisa Akinloye, has said that all other political parties, except the UPN had indicated their intention to enter into working agreement with his party.

Speaking on a weekly television programme in Calabar, Chief Akinloye said that the Mahmoud Waziri faction of the GNPP, the Aminu Kano faction of the PRP and even the NPP had all agreed to work with the NPN — "in the overall interest of the country".

He said that the UPN would not come because of "the confrontational attitude of its leadership".

Chief Akinloye said that from the utterances of the NPP national leader, Dr. Nnamdi Azikwe, he was optimistic that the party would come back.

He said that the reported alignment of the UPN, NPP, PRP and the GNPP to fight NPN in the 1983 elections, was "a ruse". He said that it was like bringing together "incompatibles".

He expressed optimism that President Shehu Shagari's Bills would always sail through the National Assembly.

He urged legislators at the National Assembly to continue to vote according to their conscience and not to be enticed by money from any political party.

CONFRONTATION BETWEEN GOVERNORS, TRADITIONAL RULERS HARMFUL

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 22 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Dangerous Trend"]

[Text]

FROM what we have seen of the relationship between so-called progressive governors and traditional rulers, it would seem as if the governors' article of faith now reads something like "if you can't own them, wreck them."

First not too long ago Governor Bola Ige of Oyo State gathered together traditional rulers in his state and read to them the riot act as if they were some disobedient school children. He would, he said, deal ruthlessly with any ruler who would not obey his government, presumably whether it is right or wrong. Then of course came along his bed-fellow, Governor Abubakar Rimi of Kano State. Never a fellow to be respectful of traditional rulers he has tried to derogate the pre-eminent position of the Emir of Kano by creating more first class chiefs in the Emir's domain. Lately Governor Bisi Onabanjo of Ogun State has been moving surreptitiously to remove the Awujale of Ijebu-Ode, Oba Sikiru Adetona from his throne.

In all these the crime of the traditional rulers has been that they would not do their governors' biddings without any questions asked. It would be dishonest to say that NPN governors too do not have disagreements with traditional rulers. Apparently, however, the NPN governors have been more cautious in dealing with disagreeable traditional rulers. A lot of harsh words may be exchanged when such disagreements occur. But it is all done quietly rather than out in the public eye. This way no body's ego is seen to be bruised, and so no unnecessary tensions are created.

Progressive or no progressive, the fact is that traditional rulers are still held in high esteem. And unless the people can be persuaded otherwise, it would be foolish and dangerous to ride rough shod over them.

PRESIDENTIAL ECONOMIC ADVISER SAYS ECONOMY BUOYANT

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 18 Aug 81 p 3

[Text of speech delivered to the Press by Professor E.C. Edozien, Special Adviser to the President on Economic Affairs, on Thursday 14th August, 1981]

[Text]

Recently, certain quarters have embarked on a campaign calculated to generate doubts about the real state of the Nigerian economy. The latest of such efforts was the address to the people of his state on August 9, 1981 by the Governor of Ogun State in which he sought to point a gloomy picture of an economy that was supposedly destined for inevitable doom.

It is clear now that this campaign is not only ill-advised and politically motivated but constitutes a disservice to the people of this country who are the final victims of the campaign to destroy the economy by instilling a lack of confidence in it both within and outside Nigeria. The most unfortunate element in this campaign is that it has, by manipulating easy facts and drawing illogical conclusion from wrong promises, even citing a timely letter from Mr. president to lend authenticity to its claims, attempted to misinform Nigerians about the true state of the economy. While these acts merit the condemnation of every right thinking Nigerian there is more compelling need to tell the Nigerian people what the real situation is. This is the purpose of this statement and it is hoped that it would also help to make clear that the campaign has been founded on falsehood and inexactitudes.

As part of its unwarranted attacks on the Nigerian economy and its managers, the campaign has claimed among other things that the economy is in a desperate state as a result of some misguided and misdirected policies of the government, that foreign exchange receipts have not only fallen drastically but that our external reserves are dwindling fast and that Mr. President has refused to give Nigerians a true picture of the state of the economy. These statements amount to a deliberate and gross misrepresentation of facts and are not consistent with the performance of the economy as shown by standard econmic indicators.

THE WORLD OIL GLUT AND THE NIGERIAN ECONOMY:

Perhaps the major factor that has given rise to recent developments is the now well-known fact that the world oil market is experiencing a glut which has in turn necessitated some reduction in both the rate of production and export of crude oil from Nigeria. Since Nigeria depends on oil for about 90 per cent of her foreign exchange revenue and an equally high proportion of government revenue, the situation should normally be of concern to any serious minded Nigerian. Nevertheless, it should be clear to any impartial observer that the glut has nothing to do with any alleged mismanagement of the Nigerian economy. Rather, it is the result of several extraneous factors which are not within the government's immediate control such as Saudi Arabia's oil production policy, conservation efforts and reduction of consumption in the industrialized countries as a result of economic recession there and increasing in non-OPEC oil production, all of which have led to a decrease in the demand for Nigerian oil as well as other producing countries.

Inspite of the foregoing, the situation is not grim as the recent campaign seeks to prove. Because oil production and revenue figures for the first quarter of 1981 exceeded the initial estimates, the decline in the second quarter has not had as much negative impact on the economy as the recent developments in the world oil market would have engendered. It was however realized that the unfavourable developments in the in ernational market place for our oil called for prudence and discipline in establishing and adhering to our priorities and Mr. president must responsibly alerted the state governors about this. This is now being misused.

The statement of the financial position of the government of Nigeria as at July 17, 1981 indicates that the external reserves stood at 5.328 billion Naira which, compared with the position as at the end of 1980 figures shows that there has been a net increase in foreign exchange accumulation. The monthly average inflow for the first five months of the year was 1.206 billion Naira compared to 1.139 billion Naira for the corresponding period in 1980. Also, the average outflow for the period January—May 1981 amounted to 1.131 billion Naira which implies that there has been an average monthly increase in foreign exchange reserves by 75 million Naira. Thus, contrary to the claims made in the ill-advised campaign, the external reserves increased by 373.4 million Naira during the first five months of 1981. Infact, the economy experienced net outflows only in January and April and only of such magnitudes that the net foreign exchange position is positive.

Furthermore, it is estimated that even if the present trends continue, there would only be a gradual decline in foreign exchange receipts for the remaining part of 1981 while the outflow may increase because of the import component of various projects outlined in the Fourth National Development Plan and as a result of recent adjustments in wages and allowances which will inevitably gear up effective demand in the economy. It is estimated that all the adverse developments in the international oil market would limit the total inflows for 1981 to 12.442 billion Naira, compared with 14.351 billion Naira for 1980 while the total outflow for 1981 may reach 14.362 billion Naira. Thus, the estimated net decline in foreign exchange position for the year is expected to amount to only 920 million Naira which is small considering the government's policy of import liberalization. These estimates would hold true even if Nigeria's oil is sold at 36.50 dollars per barrel and average lifting is kept at 1.4 million barrels per day. In addition to the 265,000 barrels per day of lomestic oil consumption. It is important to point out that these estimates are based on a rather pessimistic scenario and it is quite likely that the anticipated decline in external reserves may not even materialise if the current trends are reversed in the near future.

Given the foregoing facts, it is unfair in the extreme to accuse Mr. president of not giving a true picture of the impact of the recent developments and magnitude of their potential impact on the economy. These facts bear testimony to the fact that appropriate economic policies are being followed and that the economy can still make progress inspite of the difficult circumstances imposed upon it by the external developments in the international oil market. The observed developments in the economy in the first half of the year should also help to reinforce our confidence in the resilience of the Nigerian economy and its capability to withstand external shocks.

SOME ECONOMIC INDICATORS:

Developments in the Nigerian economy in the first half of 1981 do not give any reason for the statements being made and the doubts being expressed about the state of the economy. The available evidence indicates that there was an increase in the level of economic activity in 1980 campared with 1979. The gross domestic product increased from N33.4 billion in 1979 to N36.1 billion, which represents a growth rate of 8.1%. At the same time. the manufacturing index increased by 10.9% from 237.5 in 1979 to 263.6 in 1980. Along with these, almost every subsector of our industrial sector is said to have performed better in 1980 than in 1979, The momentum generated by these increases in the 1980 level of production have been sustained in 1981 except for a few industries which have suffered more from the damaging effects of smuggling than from bad economic management. If there has been any noticeable decline in the level of economic activity in the first half of the year, it was due to the delay in the passage of the budgets of both the Federal and state governments, apprehension on the part of our industrialists over the issue of a national minimum wage which led to a cautious implementation of industrial expansion programmes that would involve the hiring of more labour, and the ever present evil effects of smuggling on our domestic industries. In response to these, the government has introduced new measures to combat smuggling which, it is expected, would go a long way to curb this nefarious practice. Also, recent measures introduced by government are expected to engender significant increases in industrial investment during the second half of 1981.

The efforts to keep the rate of growth of prices to the barest minimum has continued to yield dividends. From an annual rate of 16.8% in 1978 the rate of inflation as reflect by the composite consumer price index, was reduced to 11.4% in 1979 and further to 10.2% in 1980. The available evidence indicates that this steady decline in the price level was sustained well past the first quarter of 1981. Since the industrial action of May 1981 and the resultant wide publicity given to the new national minimum wage which generated a lot of announcement effect on prices, the rate of inflation may have increased but only slightly. It should however be noted that these developments were the result of money illusion on the part of the workers and lack of realism demonstrated by union leaders rather than bad economic management on the part of government.

The developments in Nigeria's balance of payments have in total been favourable as earlier stated. The most notable factor perhaps is that there has been a significant increase in the rate of importation into Nigeria. Thus, the net increase in the foreign exchange reserves which mounted to ₦373.4 million from January to May 1981 is small compared with the ₦1.227 billion which was earned over the same period in 1980. It is however to be expected that the import level would rice in response to economic buoyancy and as the country begins to implement the capital projects in the fourth national development plan.

The central focus of government's monetary and fiscal management policy has been to use credit restraints and reduce rate of increase of government expenditure to check the growth of aggregate demand in the economy. This is a strategy that helps to ensure that inflation is kept at moderate levels while the pace of the economy's progress is not unduly hampered. Along these lines, the money supply which stood at ₦9.227 billion in December 1980 had declined to ₦8.238 billion in March 1981, which represents a drop of over 6.4% between January and March.

Attempts have also been made to limit the growth of public expenditure. In pursuance of its determination to reduce our dependence on oil, and to reactivate our other sources of revenue to supplement the revenue from oil, the Federal Government decided that only 78.4% of the 1981 budget was to be derived from the oil sector, compared with 83.6% in 1980. Unfortunately, several state governments have failed to learn from the Federal Government's policy of cautious expansion which is instructive under our present circumstances. Rather, many of them have embarked on mammoth spending programmes far in excess of the most ambitious projections of their financial resources. Many of these state governments have made the mistake of allowing dogmatic predonceptions rather than objective and pragmatic calculations to guide their investment decisions. Economists agree that deficit financing may be good if kept within reasonable proportions but to draw up expenditure plans that exceed a state's revenue resources by more than 100 per cent is not only prodigal but is tantamount to fiscal irresponsibility.

In response to the alleged neglect of the agricultural sector, it should be pointed out that an examination of the available evidence bears testimony to government's commitment to the objective of revitalizing the agricultural sector and transforming our financial capital from the oil sector into human and physical capital over time. From only 6.0% in 1978/79 and 7.2% in 1979/80, the government increased the proportion of its capital programme devoted to agriculture to 11.3% in 1980. In the 1981 budget 1.162 billion Naira or 12.7% of the capital programme was allocated to this sector to promote increases in agricultural production and to sustain the gains already being made in such allied areas as water resources, fisheries and livestock production, in furtherance of the government's Green Revolution Programme. Those expenditure proportions are far in excess of the proportion of their budgets which the campaigners have allocated to agriculture in their own states.

We have used the foregoing standard economic indicators to show that inspite of the difficulties arising from the oil glut, which Nigeria in concert with other OPEC countries which are experiencing similar difficulties in trying to resolve, the economic situation in the country is not critical. The oil glut cannot be permanent. Every respectable projection confirms this. Unification of prices will take care of the glut. While we may not attain the pre-glut level of production and prices and, therefore revenue, we will have enough revenue to pursue our policy of catering for the basic need of our people. We will, however, have no room for wasteful expenditure which the present administration from its inception has sought to eliminate, and which Mr. President has enjoined the state to emulate. We, have irrespective of what our detractors may say, laid the foundation for the self-sustaining growth of our economy. As a great economist, Alfred Marshall once said, nature is not given to making jumps (natura non facit saltum). The effects of policies aimed at structural changes in an economy do not show instantaneously. In our case we are confident that the results will show before the day of reckoning when the hollow cries of current panic mongers can only be heard dismally in the wilderness.

In conclusion, the recent attacks on the management of the Nigerian economy is not justified by the facts as the recent developments both in the international oil market and in the domestic economy have not had the impact which the ill-motivated campaign has tried to claim. The president in his letter to the state governors merely gave a warning signal which if heeded would alleviate short term problems of the oil glut. To misconstrue it as an admission of the economy's impending doom is simply an example of high-powered mischief making.

FOOD DISTRIBUTION METHOD TO BE CHANGED

[Article by Tony Ikhile]

[Text] Essential consumer goods like rice, stockfish, milk and sardines will be on your door steps, come October.

By then, the new method of distributiing food items will be in force at the local government level.

Under a new policy by the Nigerian National Supply Company (NNSC), there will be 10 distributors in each local government area. They will be fed from the 38 NNSC depots now being run in various parts of the country.

Disclosing this in Lagos yesterday in an exclusive interview was the marketing manager of the NNSC, Mr Chris Audu.

Mr Audu emphasised that the new system would ensure that essential food items were evenly spread to minimise monopoly.

Applications

Already, he revealed, 10,000 applications had been received from those who wished to be distributors for the company.

The NNSC executive said that the 3,000 applicants who would qualify for the distributorships would be selected at the end of next month.

Mr Audu described the new system as a "revolution," which would lead to a better distribution system.

He contended that the NNSC was the only company of its type which, by next year, would hit a yearly turnover of N200 million.

This would be raised to N300 million in 1983, he said.

On other advantages of the new system, Mr Audu emphasised that it would eliminate malpractices because the distributors would be known.

"We will get better organised and will be dealing with fewer people, unlike now when thousands of people besiege our offices," he said.

Mr Audu maintained that "these unscrupulous people" collected and sold documents meant for purchasing the essential items. And in the end, prices went up.

He said that, apart from the consumer items, the NNSC would also channel building materials, like cement and galvanised roofing sheets, through the distributors.

Meanwhile, the NNSC has opened a retail shop at the Tafawa Balewa Square, Lagos.

GENERAL JEMIBEWON TOURS NORTHERN AREAS OF RESPONSIBILITY

Soldiers Awaiting Discharge

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 20 Aug 81 p 16

[Text]

THE General Officer Commanding the 1st Mechanised Division of the Nigerian Army, Major-General David Jemibewon has directed that all soldiers awaiting discharge on any grounds should vacate their barracks accommodation by October 1st this year.

The order was given at Zuru when the GOC was addressing troops of the 7th Mechanised Brigade who are now under his Division as a result of the new army re-organisation.

He told the troops that the authorities gave them the option of staying in the barracks and drawing their emoluments until their discharge benefits were computed and paid..

In return for those concessions, they were to continue performing thier military duties, he said.

This privilege, according to General Jemibewon has been abused as the affected soldiers have become a cog in the wheel of military discipline.

Speaking on other issues, he praised the troops for their efforts in contributing to the afforestation efforts in the area. Trees, he said, would not only beautify their surroundings but would also guard against storm hazards which are a predominant feature of the area.

General Jemibewon extolled the soldiers for their excellent performance in Lebanon and expressed regret over the losses suffered during the shelling of their location by the Israeli-backed militia of Major Saad Haddad but urged the soldiers to take consolation in the fact that those who died have not died in vain but in the interest of world peace.

The GOC further commended the excellent relationship between the troops and civilians in the area and reminded them that all Nigerians and their properties were part of the territorial integrity of the nation which they have sworn to protect.

General Jemibewon's familiarisation tour later took him to Birnin-Kebbi and Sokoto where he paid courtesy calls on the Sultan of Sokoto and the State Governor, Alhaji Shehu Kangiwa.

Meeting With Sokoto Governor

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 19 Aug 81 p 20

[Text]

GENERAL Officer Commanding the First Mechanised Armour, Kaduna Major-General David Jemibewon, has observed that it was not the pattern of any government which matters but the person heading it.

He was commending the Sokoto State Governor, Alhaji Shehu Mohammed Kangiwa when he paid him a courtesy call at Government House last weekend.

According to him, there had been much improvement in Sokoto State, adding he was satisfied with the current public/ army relationship in the state.

He said, "if there was no Sokoto State there would be no Seven Mechanised Brigade, therefore, the soldiers are to protect the civilians and porperties."

The G.O.C. informed Governor Shehu Kwangiwa that he had been to Birnin Kebbi and Zuru thereby visiting the remaining members of the Seven Mechanised Brigade under his division. He said the army was undergoing re-organisation in which the divisions were being re-organised such that their authority would cover new areas of jurisdiction.

General Jemibewon also said the Brigade headquarters had proposed to move away from its shooting range away from some kilometres along Sokoto—Kware as it had constituted security risk.

He said the army was more concerned about the individuals that the villages would be notified of the soldiers shooting activities through the use of either the red light at night or a red flag in the afternoon.

Governor Shehu Kangiwa told the G.O.C. that his administration had proposed to evacuate the villagers which could have been expensive but later decided to advise and assist the soldiers to build another higher and safer shooting range.

He expressed delight that the soldiers thought it better to leave the area which had been a cause for concern.

Governor Kangiwa recalled that at the height of the soldiers activities in the area, a committee was set up which came to the conclusion that the zone was open to danger.

COMPLIANCE WITH RULES ON EXPATRIATE COMPANIES URGED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 26 Aug 81 p 5

[Article by Frank Akinola]

[Text]

STATE governments that have defied Federal directives on the Nigerian Enterprises Promotion Act have been told to comply in the interest of all.

The call was made yesterday by the chairman of the Enterprises Promotion Board, Mr. Minso Gadzama, while addressing state chairmen and secretaries of state enterprises committees in Lagos.

"There are several state governments and newbreed politicians that have invited expatriate companies to undertake contracts or what they call special assignments."

These, he said, were not provided for in the Enterprises Promotion Act.

"I am confident that only the Federal Government is vested with the powers of exempting a company from the provisions of the Act."

He advised the various chairmen to go back and search their territories thoroughly to ascertain which companies were complying and which were not.

Control

Mr. Gadzama pointed out that the Indigenisation Act was not enacted to exclude expatriates from taking part in our economy, but rather to let "Nigerians and foreigners partake in developing the economy."

He noted that the country could only boast of independence if Nigerians were prepared and able to control the country's economic destiny.

Mr. Gadzama disclosed that 75 per cent of the affected business organisations had complied with the law.

He pointed out that the belief that the indigenisation law was a ruse was unfounded.

He said before any enterprise was accorded compliance status, the purchase considerations must be checked, bank statement revisited, to ensure that the transactions were made and 10 per cent workers equity granted.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY LOSING MARKET TO SMUGGLING

Labor Minister's Comment

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 25 Aug 81 p 5

[Excerpt] Smuggling operations have led to the sharp rise in the unemployment figures in Nigeria, the Labour Minister, Mr Adebisi Ogedengbe, has said.

He said the victim in this case was the textile industry which altogether had lost its market and might soon lay off more than 60,000 workers.

The minister revealed this during a programme ("Labour Forum") organised by the Labour Writers' Association of Nigeria (LAWAN).

He stressed that in an industry that had lost 50 percent of its market to smuggled goods "you can never expect such industry to break even."

The Labour Minister said that he was aware that some of the textile companies that had closed down in Kaduna had involved 10,500 workers and "right now we are forced with the possibility of more textile workers being laid off.

Reactivation Kano Company

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 Aug 81 p 17

[Text]

A SUM of 5.6 million Naira will be spent to reactivate the Kano State Government owned Textile Printers Company Limited.

According to the Deputy General Manager of the industry, Alhaji Abdullahi Maikano Umar, plans have been completed to carry out the reactivation exercise in two phases.

Alhaji Abdullahi who was briefing the state governor, Alhaji Mohammed Abubakar Rimi, on plans for the reactivation said that the first phase of the programme would involve the complete reactivation of the existing machinery and equipment and the installation of 104 picanol looms.

The governor was on a visit to the industry to see things for himself.

Alhaji Abdullahi said the first phase of the exercise was envisaged to raise the total out-put of the industry from the present 1.5 million metres of textile material per year to 6.1 million with a potential sales turn-over of about seven million Naira.

The general manager said the second phase of the reactivation would involve the purchase and installation of 40 Sulzes machines which would further raise the total out-put of the industry to 9.8 million metres of textile materils with a potential sales turn-over of 11 million Naira.

He informed the governor that the Kano State Investment and Properties Limited has assured the industry of providing the necessary funds required for the reactivation adding that the process has been set in motion to recruit weaving experts, a production manager and engineers for the company.

Alhaji Abdullahi said that the Desai and Associates Industrial and Management Consultants have been commissioned to undertake a complete reactivation of the machinery and to produce a comprehensive operational study in areas of marketing, sales, engineering and financial control.

He said the industry has a potential of becoming one of the biggest textile industries in the country.

He attributed the inefficiency of the company since its incorporation in 1968 to lack of sufficient funds to make additional investments and tap the potentialities of the unutilised building spaces.

Alhaji Abdullahi said that about 300 workers of the factory have been retrenched to allow for the reactivation programme.

PROBLEMS OF OIL INDUSTRY DISCUSSED

High Cost of Production

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 Aug 81 pp 1, 11

[Article by Moses Olorode]

[Text] Nigeria spends ten times more than what it costs any other oil producing nation to produce a barrel of crude oil.

Chairman of Senate Committee on Commerce and Industry, Senator Dr David Dafinone, said this situation was responsible for the comparatively low earnings from her crude oil exports.

Senator Dafinone, who was speaking at an interview with the New Nigerian in Lagos, emphasised that Nigeria spent by far the highest amount in producing a barrel of oil.

He frowned at the entire set-up of the oil industry and called for drastic reforms to enhance the optimum utilisation of our oil resources.

He said he had nothing against the Nigerian National Oil Corporation (NNPC) or its management but with the originators who failed to ensure that there was a built-in system of public accountability.

The senator, who is also an NPN top-notcher, believed that if the country's oil resources had been properly and efficiently managed, the current hardship being experienced as a result of the global glut could have been avoided.

He said even if Nigeria was producing only one million barrels of oil per day, the earnings from these could still be sufficient to pay for the country's recurrent and capital expenses.

He then suggested some diversification in the oil industry, adding that the country's heavy dependence on crude oil exportation was responsible for the jolt it received when prices fell.

Senator Dafinone contended that if all our existing oil refineries were expanded and additional ones built, "we should then be able to refine enough oil, not only for our local consumption but for export to neighbouring African countries as well."

He stated that any amount of oil left unrefined could then be sent overseas, adding that when prices of crude oil fell, we would then be able to fall back on the revenue from the refined oil.

He stressed that diversification was necessary "even in the oil industry itself," adding that by refining much of our oil, we would be creating employment for our people, improving their technology and also earning foreign exchange in the process."

He reiterated his call for a policy council for the oil industry which would formulate corporate objectives and strategies to be adopted by the industry to facilitate better and effective performance.

The council, when set up, would comprise the Chairman of the NNPC, senior civil servants, representatives of trade unions and would be headed by a president to be appointed by the Federal Government, he further suggested.

He explained that contrary to misconceptions in certain quarters, the council would not have a large number of supporting staff "rather only two or three secretaries would be sufficient to run the office of the president of the council."

The senator said the council would also establish performance criteria appropriate to individual oil companies.

Kaduna Refinery Phase-in

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 18 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Tunde Thompson]

[Excerpt]

A FEW days ago, an executive in one of the oil firms spoke about a controversy between the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) and oil marketing companies over the production of base oils for lubricants in the country.

According to the executive, the NNPC had given the oil firms only a month's notice for the testing of the base oils from the heavy processing unit at the Kaduna Refinery when, in fact, these tests required nothing less than six months, especially as they could not be done locally.

Furthermore, it was alleged that the pipelines to receive the imported heavy crude from the supertanker into the storage tanks at Warri for subsequent pumping to Kaduna, were not ready, and the NNPC had been using barges and coastal vessels to shuttle from the super-tanker to Warri at a colossal sum.

The General Manager of the NNPC's Project Engineering Division, Mr. A. Kufeji, explained that there were literarily two refineries in Kaduna—one producing just fuels (petrol, kerosine, gas, fuel oil and liquified petroleum gas), and the other the lubricating oil refinery, which produces all the above, in addition to lubricating oil, asphalt, bitumen, wax and sulphur.

"To produce the quantity of the lubricating oil, asphalt and bitumen, we need to import crude oil. To import the crude oil, we need some facilities. These are not as simple as people may imagine, because they involve construction of pipelines in very deep waters; it is not as easy as laying pipelines on land," Mr. Kufeji said. Noting that the right season had to be watched and that September to March of another year was the only construction season, the General Manager declared that all the contracts which needed to be awarded on the pipelines projects had been awarded, and that progress on it was very satisfactory.

"There was a contract awarded which had to be re-awarded and it was this re-awarding that put the project out of phase with the Kaduna Refinery. To be able to minimise the period of inoperation of the Kaduna Refinery's lubricating oil section, we tried to evolve a new programme whereby we could bring in crude oil through a temporary solution", Mr. Kufeji went on.

A cost-benefit analysis showed that from the view-points of capital, revenue and the saving of foreign exchange, it was in the country's best interest to continue spending money on the temporary solution, involving bringing in the crude oil from abroad with the normal super tankers. "However, instead of berthing the supertanker in Escravos to use the facilities for the pipelines of the permanent solution, we would berth it somewhere in Bonny and use small barges to move the crude into a storage at Warri. There is nothing the NNPC is doing in this respect which is not known to the President-in-Council," Mr. Kufeji stressed.

PROBLEMS IN AJAOKUTA PROJECT SETTLED IN USSR TALKS

Minister's Report on Visit

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 19 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Moses Olorode]

[Text]

NIGERIA's steel project at Ajaokuta is to receive the best in Russian steel technology.

Soviet President, Mr. Leonid Breshnev gave this assurance in a discussion with Minister of Steel Development, Malam Mamman Ali Makele.

The minister, who has just returned from a visit to the USSR, told the New Nigerian at an interview that all equipment and machinery to be installed at the Ajaokuta Steel Complex would be of the best quality.

'I have seen where the equipment are being manufactured in Czechoslovakia', he said. He dismissed as unfounded, speculations that the Russians were planning to dismantle old steel plants in their country and reassemble them at Ajaokuta.

He said it was difficult, if not impossible to dismantle steel plants and reassemble them elsewhere.

Asked to state the objectives of his trip, the minister said the main purpose was to discuss with the Russians and identify problems that might impede the realisation of the 1985 deadline for the entire integrated steel plant.

Suitable accommodation, he said was one area in which the Russian engineers and technicians felt deeply concerned, and explained that after telling them that contract for 7,000 housing units had been awarded, as well as an 838 million Naira contract for civil works, 'the Russians believed that we mean business'.

'By that, we have shown or demonstrated to them that after 23 years on the drawing board, we are now prepared to take off, he said.

Malam Makele also disclosed that one of the outstanding problems he succeeded in resolving with the Russians was the handing over of drawings in the Russians' possession to the civil works contractors.

'The issue of laid-down procedures for the issuance of visas for the over 7,000 Russians who would be at Ajaokuta at the peak period has been resolved', he said. Also settled was the issue of how to deal with the pre-shipment inspection of over 600,000 tonnes of equipment, machinery and structures being manufactured at Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic.

The minister disclosed that arrangements were also concluded for the exploration of more mineral resources to be used for the steel mills.

To this end, he said, 15 Russian experts would soon be in the country to start the exploration exercise with their Nigerian counterparts.

Asked to comment on the quality of Russian steel technology, Malam Makele said the hue and cry over its so-called poor quality was the handiwork of the western propaganda.

He wondered why Nigeria could not seek partnership with the Russians if the Americans themselves could co-operate with them in space exploration.

'Moreover, the Soviet Union is the largest producer of steel in the world today and all the steel plants I visited there are fully automated', he noted.

Malam Makele said the Russians could not afford 'to toy with our steel project because their honour and prestige is also involved'.

GDR, Czechoslovak Assistance

SOME of the problems connected with the development of the Ajaokuta Steel Project have been solved by the Federal Government.

A statement issued in Lagos recently, by the Steel development, Department of the Executive Office of the President stated that some of the problems include accommodation, immigration procedures and inspection of plan and equipment.

According to the statement, discussions were held between federal government officials and a Russian government organisation, Tiajpromexport, at recent visit to the USSR by a Nigerian delegation led by the Minister of Steel Development, Malam Mamman Ali Makele.

The statement said that Malam Makele held series of discussions with the Chairman of the USSR Committee on Foreign Economic Relations, Mr. Skatchikov, and the Minister of Heavy Industries and Mettalurgy.

The statement added that the solution of those problems would further accelerate the Ajaokuta Steel Plant Project. It pointed out that the Minister delivered a special message from President Shehu Shagari, to the Chairman of the Supreme Soviet, Mr. Leonid Brezhnev, on the need for the timely completion of the plant.

The statement further stated that Malam Makele visited the German Democratic Republic and Czechoslovakia and that both countries were willing to allow engineers from Ajaokuta Steel Plant to familiarise themselves with the machineries being used in their billet and rolling mills with a view to making the engineers understand their operations and maintenance.

USE OF LOCAL COAL FOR STEEL INDUSTRY TO BE STUDIED

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 21 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Don Ekpunobi]

[Text]

THE Ministry of Mines and Power is to appoint consultants to carry out a feasibility study of a possible utilization of Nigeria's coal in the country's Iron and Steel Industries.

These facts were disclosed by the Minister for Mines and Power Mr Ahmed Hassan at a news conference in Enugu.

Discarding the notion that Nigerian coal might not be suitable for the steel project, the Minister said that an American industry has established a devise in converting all form of coal into cooking coal.

"The statement that the steel industry will have to import all its coal requirements when it takes off is mere speculation and unfounded" he declared.

He said that in order to ensure sufficiency and steady supply of raw materials for the iron and steel project, the Federal Government has concluded negotiations for importing iron ore from Guinea adding that about N4.4 million had so far ben invested.

Mr Hassan disclosed that the government of Guinea had accepted to increase Nigeria share hold of her iron ore from the present 13.5 per cent and that arrangements had been concluded with a company in Liberia ALCO to transport the iron ore from Guinea to Nigeria.

On the reconstruction of Oji River Power Station, the Minister stated that work on the project will take off as soon as feasibility studies were concluded.

He regretted that coal, which he said is in great demand by so many industries, including the proposed Oji Power Station is not produced in large quantity adding that the short fall accounts for lack of fund in the mining industry.

He announced that plans are underway for his ministry to further render financial assistance to the Coal Corporation to enable it stand on its foot.

In answer to a question, the minister said that what delays the tapping of mineral deposits in some parts of the country is the time factors in exploring the economic viabilities on such projects.

He said that though mineral deposits abound in different parts of the country, not all of them are economically feasible.

Mr Hassan said that state government could embark on mineral explorations with economic potential provided such states get clearance from the ministry to engage in such projects.

The minister was accompanied on the vist by Guinean Minister of Mines and Geology Mr Ismael Toure, Guinea Ambassador to Nigeria Mr H.E. Aly Bangoura and some top officials from the Ministry of Mines and Power.

ALIENS IN DOCK INDUSTRY--Seventeen thousand and five hundred aliens work in the dock industry in Nigeria. The total registered membership of the Dockworkers Union and Nigeria is about 35,000. Mr Jonas Abams, the General Secretary of the DUN disclosed this in Lagos while briefing labour journalists. The secretary pointed out that the aliens enjoy the same conditions of service like their Nigerial counterparts in the industry. He explained that the number has to rise as much because Nigerians shun dock jobs, first because the work is considered too dirty and hard and secondly because the wages paid are not commensurate with the hazardous nature of the jobs. OPPOSITION TO ALIENS REGISTRATION--An atmosphere of uncertainty is now prevailing in Sardauna Local Government area of Gongola State following the registration of some people suspected to be aliens in the area. The state's National Population Commission has, however, declared the exercise illegal and unconstitutional. Most of the people in Gembu, the local government headquarters and environs are now living in perpetual fear that they might be deported to the neighbouring Cameroun Republic. The people affected, who are said to be mainly Fulani, Kambu, Kakka and Panso asserted that the registration exercise had political motives. They have petitioned the Federal Government over the controversy about their nationality. The chairman of the local government council, Malam Salihu Dodo, told a group of journalists in Gembu that the state government had instructed that a list of aliens resident in the area be compiled so as to check the influx of some undesirable people who might constitute security risk to the state and the country. Malam Salihu asserted that the exercise which was conducted with the assistance of district and village heads had not made any major headway because some people have refused to co-operate with the enumerators and indicated that if the situation did not improve the police might be called to assist the officials. But in a swift reaction to the story, the state Resident Commissioner for the National Population Commission, Alhaji Sa'adu Gurin, declared the exercise illegal, null and void and advised the state government to contact the proper authorities for necessary action. STEEL MILL TECHNICIANS--Twenty-five technicians with the Katsina Steel Rolling Mill have ended a five month intensive training at the mill's site. The project coordinator, Mr M. K. Bello, made this known at a cocktail party organised in his honour by the graduates at the company's guest house. Mr M.K. Bello said the company had already interviewed another batch of 287 workers out of which 37 would be selected to undergo a similar training at the site to enable them to fully acquaint themselves with the job. Mr M.K. Bello disclosed that the company had also sent 24 students to its training centre in Japan and hoped to send another batch of 24 students soon. DECLINE IN TIN PROFITABILITY--The Federal Government realises 25 million Naira from tin production annually. Announcing this while conducting the Minister for Mines and Geology from the Republic of Guinea, Comrade Ismail Toure, at the Alamgamated Tin Mines (ATMN) in Jos, the Minister for Mines and Power, Alhaji Mohammed Ibrahim Hassan, said although Nigeria produces about 4,000 tonnes of tin annually the production has fallen by 10 percent. Alhaji Hassan said this is due to operational and running cost as well as the general reduction in the prices of tin in the world market. In his welcome address earlier the ATMN Chairman, Alhaji Ahmadu Malle Dan Iyan Jama'are, said that before the advent of oil, tin and columbite used to be among the foremost of Nigeria's leading foreign exchange earners. But in recent past he said the tin industry has witnessed a degree of setback as a result of a number of influences which have adversely affected the profitability of the tin mining company. These influences the chairman said, are products of official policies on importation, exportation, taxation and mandatory wage increases, the application of which is fast drifting the tin industry into a position of non viability. CHINESE DELEGATION--If the Chinese delegates to the last Sino-Nigerian dialogue were to be taken as a reflection of what Chinese at home are, then old age in China is an asset, rather than a curse. The Chinese delegation to the talks was composed mainly of people with decades of experience behind them. They were articulate and often elusive on tough issues that might force acceptance of contradiction in some Chinese policies. The leader of the Chinese delegation was Professor Fusan of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. However, Madame Wu Qing appeared the most authoritative member of the delegation. Madame Wu has a wide knowledge of West Africa, having visited most of the states. Dr Bolaji Akinyemi, who was chairman of the talks, set the pace on the opening day "You are once again welcome to Nigeria." He then went straight to the business of the day--the Sino-Nigerian dialogue, recalling briefly the first July 1979 dialogue in Peking and its significance towards an understanding of each country's position. He was, however, quick to point out significant changes in the international arena since then, most notably the renewed tension all over globe since President Reagan's ascendancy in the US. In response, the leader of the Chinese delegation agreed with his Nigerian counterpart that Africa and China were today faced with the increasing problem of defending their national independence, sovereignty and economic development. It was therefore, very important for China to send the delegation to Nigeria at the invitation of the Nigerian Institute of International Affairs (NIIA). LAGOS STEEL MILL PLAN--Lagos State is to have a N26.6 million steel mill built by its government. It will be a joint venture with the American firm of Messrs. Pennsylvania Engineering Corporation--PEC. Trade and Industry Commissioner Ganiyu Oshineye announced this at a Press briefing in Lagos yesterday. He said: "The state government is entitled to 64 percent (N3.2m) of the N5.5 million equity share capital, while PEC is to have 36 percent (N1.8m)." The mill, proposed for Shala, in Epe Local Government area, was coming late of delays in Federal guarantee to the foreign loan, said the commissioner. He revealed that the government had budgeted about N10 million for a pharmaceutical industry. A N5.5 million factory, which can produce 20 million red bricks every year, is also under consideration, it was said. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 20 Aug 81 p 32]

WAGE BILL PASSAGE--The Wage Bill has been passed into law with a proviso that workers won't get arrears. The House of Representatives yesterday unanimously passed the N125 National Minimum Wage Bill as amended, taking effect from "the day it is assented to by the President" and not "July 1 this year" as originally contained in the bill. The Speaker, Mr Edwin Ume-Ezeoke, explained that the Constitution did not support any retrospec the bill. In a statement later, the Speaker said the House would now "urgently" treat nine Bills during the remaining part of the session. These include the Federal Electoral Commission Bill, the Association of National Accountants of Nigeria Bill, the creation of New States Bill and the Income Tax Bill. Others include the NNPC Bill, the Court of Appeal and High Court Bill, Nigerian Television Authority Amendment Bill, and the Code of Conduct Bureau Bill. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS LAW--A new food and drugs law is now in the making. When in force, the law will make it impossible for new food, drugs, and cosmetics to be imported into the country without clearance from the Federal Government. Procedures for obtaining importation approval for such food and drugs would be clearly spelt out, the Minister of Health, Mr Daniel Ugwu, told the inaugural meeting of the reconstituted Food and Drugs Advisory Council yesterday. Mr Ugwu emphasised that "the use of generic names for pharmaceutical preparations or the need to have a list of essential drugs based on disease patterns in the country need urgent consideration." The Minister pointed out that there was need to ensure that no layman had adcess to poisonous or dangerous drugs. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 13 Aug 81 p 1]

OGUN-OSHUN RIVER BASIN DAM--The Ogun-Oshun River Basin Development Authority will supply about 100 million litres of water per day for irrigation when civil work on the dam is completed in March next year, the authority's General Manager, Dr Lekan Are has said. Dr Are told a correspondent of the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in Ajaokuta that the dam would also supply 600 million litres and 200 million litres of water to complement water supply to Lagos and Ogun states respectively. He stated that the authority cultivated a total land area of 11,100 hectares during the first half of this year, of which 1,062 hectares were used for the cultivation of rice. He also said that the area would produce about 1,300 tonnes of rice every planting season. Dr Lekan Are said that the contract for the hydro-electricity aspect of the dam which, he added, was awarded in January this year at the cost of 8.5 million Naira would be completed in 35 months and when completed, he further said the dam would generate nine megawatts of hydro-electric power. He further stated that displaced people in the area would benefit from power to be generated. (NAN) [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 12 Aug 81 p 11]

MINING COOPERATION WITH GUINEA--Minister of Mines and Power, Alhaji Mohammed Ibrahim Hassan announced in Lagos on Sunday that our country's steel industry would benefit Africa. He stated this while exchanging views with Guinean Minister for Mines and Geology, Mr Ismael Toure who arrived with a five man delegation in Lagos on Saturday on a one week visit to the country. Alhaji Ibrahim contended that it was the belief of Nigeria that other African countries would gain from the steel industry. He called on the Guinean government to increase the country's share in her iron ore mining venture adding that this would further strengthen relationship between both countries. Presently Nigeria has 13.5 percent share participation in Group J Partners, the single largest share holder. Alhaji Ibrahim told the visiting minister that the iron ore project was very important as far as Nigeria was concerned because of the country country's steel industry. PORTS BACKLOG--A large consignment of cars is now waiting to be cleared at the Lagos ports. The importers are understood to be facing financial problems over customs duties and other freight charges. As a result, they have found it difficult to bring in the cars, some of which have been waiting at the ports in the last one month. Altogether, 17 ships, carrying cars, are waiting to berth at the ports for lack of space. This was revealed at a Press briefing in Lagos yesterday by the Minister for Transport, Dr Umaru Dikko. The Minister declared that altogether, 31 ships were waiting to berth at both the Apapa and the Tin Can Island ports as against 100 ships recently reported by a Lagos newspaper. Dr Dikko said: "At no time since 1976 when Nigeria solved the problems of congestion at the Lagos port have we ever had 50 vessels waiting to berth not to talk of 100." He said the problems of the NPA was to convince importers to use ports other than Lagos. "The two ports in Lagos are capable of handling 65 ships at various discharge points at any given moment," Dr Dikko declared. Meanwhile, 60 days have been given to the importers within which to clear their vehicles or face the consequences. [Excerpts] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 13 Aug 81 p 1]

CABINET MEETS, RATIFICATION DECREES ADOPTED

AB101326 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 9 Sep 81

[Excerpts] The cabinet met yesterday. The president of the republic ratified the instrument relating to the conditions of execution of the project known as the Diama Dam. This instrument was adopted in Paris on 11 December 1979.

In accordance with article 5 of the agreement creating the Senegal River Valley Development Organization, the resolution adopted by the heads of state conference concerning the execution of this dam project is binding on all the member states which undertake to ensure the implementation of the project.

The cabinet also examined and adopted a decree authorizing the president to approve the cooperation agreement between the Senegalese and Moroccan Governments in the field of personnel which was signed in Marrakech on 20 March this year. As everyone knows, the cooperation between both countries continues to grow stronger in conformity with the traditional bonds of fraternity and solidarity between their respective peoples.

The cabinet also adopted a decree authorizing the president to ratify the agreement of economic, commercial, technical and scientific cooperation between the governments of Iraq and Senegal which was signed in Dakar on 25 April this year. The two parties will exchange experts, consultants, teachers, senior officials, trainees, research workers and specialized missions. They will also grant each other necessary facilities for the promotion of trade, in the context of respect for their respective laws and regulations. To achieve these objectives, the two governments have decided to set up, in accordance with the terms of this agreement, a joint ministerial commission which will meet once a year in Dakar or Baghdad.

CONFEDERATION WITH GAMBIA VIEWED--Dakar, 6 Sep (AFP)--AFRICAN UNITY, journal of the Socialist Party in Senegal, considers that the proposed confederation between Senegal and Gambia is a step toward a more strengthened union, be it a federation or integration into a unified state. In an article the journal asks if the future of the confederation will simply consist of placing Gambia under the umbrella of Senegal's security and waiting for time to work things out, or if it will seek to integrate all problems which face the two states in their bilateral and international relatons. A confederal formula, however perfect it might be, cannot totally integrate all problems and in all aspects. However, seeking to hide these from the beginning will amount to locking oneself up in a way that will condemn to failure any unionist initiative. The confederal formula appears ridiculous, in spite of or due to its flexibility, AFRICAN UNITY says. It also feels that the confederal stage will only be of historic value. SOCIALIST PARTY DELEGATION TO GAMBIA--A delegation of the political bureau of the ruling Socialist Party has left for the Gambia where its members will accompany President Dawda Jawara on his nationwide tour. The Gambian head of state has chosen to hold dialogue with the rural populations and will begin his second political and economic tour of the interior with a meeting. During this tour of the interior, President Jawara will be accompanied by the Socialist Party delegation invited by the People's Progressive Party, President Jawara's party. The Socialist Party delegation, which includes Fadiga Mbodj, Amadou Ndiaye and Lamine Sarr, hopes to create fraternity among the two political parties and contribute to the desire of Presidents Abdou Diouf and Dawda Jawara to unite Senegal and Gambia into a Senegambian confederation. INTENSIVE TRAINING OF PIONEERS REPORTED

[Text]

TWO spokesmen for the 75 future Pioneer leaders from schools all over Mahé, Praslin, and La Digue now undergoing two-weeks of intensive training at the Anse Boileau School, have outlined its aim and importance.

According to 14-year-old Dorothy Furneau of Bel Ombre School, who also took part in last year's camp-out at Anse Royale, this one is much tougher and demands a lot of hard work and endurance.

"Almost every minute is taken up with some activity, and we can just manage to catch up with everything", she said.

Holden Philoé, of Mont Fleuri School, agreed that this is the toughest training so far and explained that during the past week they have had several talks on the role and importance of a Pioneer.

"We have been taught what to do and what to say when we eventually find ourselves before a group of Pioneers less experienced than us. One has to know how to catch somebody's attention and we have been taught all this", Holden said.

The Pioneers have also visited the National Youth Service Village and expressed admiration at the way it is run. A number of them said they hope to join the NYS when the time comes.

"Imagine a whole village belonging to all young people who wish to take part," exclaimed Holden.

Apart from the NYS visit, the young militants have already had visits from the Minister of State responsible for Youth, Mr. Esme Jumeau, and several senior officials from the same department.

The camp itself is run by a camp leader appointed by the rest of its members. It is divided into three companies, each supervised by a company leader helped by two section leaders.

DEFENCE MINISTER VISITS SPDF UNITS

Victoria NATION in English 22 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

WITH the aim of finding out ways of improving the effective defence of the Seychellois people and their revolution, and also to discuss the progress, roles and problems of the Seychelles People's Defence Forces, the Minister of Defence and Chief of Defence Forces, Colonel Ogilvy Berlouis, is this week making his annual tour of the country's military units, camps and installations.

Already — accompanied by his Chief of Staff, Director of Operations and Training and of Logistics and Administration, the Political Commissar and a military adviser — the Minister has visited the Pointe Larue and Union Vale Seychelles People's Liberation Army Camps, spending a day at each.

Yesterday he called on the Seychelles People's Navy.

Visits to the Coetivy Military Training Centre, the SPDF Headquarters and all police stations on Mahé, Praslin and La Digue will follow.

The Minister hopes to meet with the People's Militia some time later.

In all these visits, the delegation is meeting with commanding officers and soldiers alike, with a special eye on the changes necessary to improve the country's defence capabilities, the Defence Minister told the Information Services.

Colonel Berlouis said that the soldiers' questions showed growing political consciousness and increased awareness of the SPDF's role under the direction of the SPPF.

On the issue of discipline, on which much emphasis is being placed, the Chief of Defence Forces said that in general he was satisfied with the progress, although there was still room for improvement. The soldiers were responding more and more to a greater understanding and appreciation of their role by the public they were sworn to protect and help, and the political education which is an important part of their training was proving a considerable help there.

PREPARATIONS FOR TEACHING CREOLE REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 22 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE Department of Education and Culture's preparations for the teaching of Creole as a proper language in the country's schools next year are right on schedule and the pupils and parents can expect a considerable improvement in literacy once the Creole programme is in effective operation.

This was the optimistic message the Principal Secretary for Education and Information, Mrs. Danielle d'Offay, had for educationalists, parents and students alike, amid the hustle and bustle of the translation of school text books, the revision of teaching programmes, and the preparation of Creole courses for teachers.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mrs. d'Offay said, in an interview over Radio Seychelles recently, that a special committee was on schedule translating and revising teaching programmes and text books for crèche and Primary One pupils for January. "By the end of the year everything will be ready," she said.

At the end of the year, crèche and P1 teachers will attend special courses to introduce them to the Creole that will be taught in the schools. The teachers, who later on will be followed by those of senior classes and school principals, will master the Creole grammar, study the language's vocabulary and the best teaching methods of the mother tongue. "Everyone involved has to be aware of what is going on if we are to go in the right direction," the Principal Secretary stressed.

ORTHOGRAPH

Meanwhile, over the next few days, the new Creole orthography was being finalised, she went on. It was being made as simple as possible and would resemble the Creole of other Creole-speaking countries, enabling us to enjoy the literature from across the seas.

So, in January, 1982, Creole will be taught as a language and be used as a language to teach in P1. In P2, the second national language, English, will be introduced orally before going on to reading and writing and using it as a medium of teaching. By then the children are expected to be able to read and write Creole properly.

Once the English has been mastered, the third national language, French, will be introduced. However, throughout, Creole will be used as a medium for teaching certain subjects.

ADVANTAGE

Mrs. dOffay used the unacceptable rate of poor reading and writing among students to illustrate the main advantage, education-wise, of introducing Creole into schools as a subject.

The Principal Secretary said that the main reason for this problem was that the children were learning to read and write in a language that was not used extensively in their daily life, especially at home and in their social life outside school hours. Even at school English and French was used only during lessons.

MOTHER TONGUE

Now, Mrs. d'Offay continued, with the introduction of Creole, the mother tongue, into the curriculum, the children could learn to read and write in this language first, much faster than in any other tongue which was not spoken habitually. According to research in other countries trying to solve the same problem, she explained, once a child has mastered his own language and got into the rhythm of deciphering and composing words and letters, it would be much easier to move on to another tongue, however foreign. "Reading and writing is the key to learning," Mrs. d'Offay emphasised.

RAISE STANDARDS

The new move would also definitely raise the general standards of education as the children, freed from the constraints — and embarrassment in the case of those who cannot speak or write another language well — of having to express themselves in an unfamiliar language, would participate more in the lessons. It was natural that they would feel more interested and comfortable with their own tongue, she pointed out.

"Our battle to attain an efficient system of education will just about be won with this," Mrs. d'Offay added confidently.

REVISION OF SPPF DOCUMENTS--Seychelles People's Progressive Front branches all over the country are seriously revising the Front's Constitution and policy statement, "Onward to Socialism." This is in line with the SPPF's belief that the revolution is eternal and is in perpetual metarmorphosis. One of the Front National Congress' resolutions last month directed the Central Executive Committee to appoint a working committee to update the two SPPF documents. The committee is chaired by the Front's Organising Secretary, Mr Ogilvy Berlouis, and includes the Publicity Secretary, Mr James Michel, the Political Secretary, Mr Jacques Hodoul, the Deputy Secretary General, Mr Matthew Servina, and the Deputy National Treasurer, Mrs Rita Sinon. Each of them has met a group of branch committees to explain the role of the working committee and to request the branches' suggestions and proposed amendments. "The branches are being given as much time as possible for careful reflection on the issue," Mr Berlouis said, "but the working committee's final report has to be submitted to the Central Executive Committee by the first week of November." Meanwhile, the members of the working committee are ready to go back to the branches if requested, to give additional help, advice or clarifications. POLITICAL REASONS FOR STRIKE ACTION--Freetown, 11 Sep (AFP)--Strong political motivations are believed to have been behind the last-minute refusal of Sierra Leone's labor congress leaders to call off a general strike launched 11 days ago, the ruling party's officialpaper WEYONE said here in its mid-week edition. It said plans had been discovered to set up a Movement for Progress in Africa (MOPA) in the wake of the strike. In preparation for the launching of MOPA, membership cards in green had already been printed with the lion as its symbol astride a map of Africa with its front paws resting on the map of Sierra Leone, WEYONE reported. It said MOPA's six stated aims are now being carefully studied, only one of them relating to the development of Sierra Leone. All this, political pundits argue, sets the motif behind the strike call and confirms the view taken by the government that the action of the congress was not an industrial action, the party newspaper declared. UNANSWERED QUESTIONS IN PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 5 Aug 81 p 8

/"Perspective" column by Willem de Klerk: "Clear Policy and Question Marks"/

/Text/ It is true that in his policy address to parliament the prime minister got into all of the important matters. Clear guidelines and assurances were given and there is no possible misunderstanding with respect to policy framework.

True also is the fact that there were no announcements of new and sensational reforms.

Moreover the fact that he did not say everything that could be said, that there is still vagueness and that there are unanswered questions, is also true.

Why was the minister not more explicit?

There are a number of possible answers to this question.

Strategy

It may be that all the planning work such as that of the Presidential Council and of other committees has not yet been completed. Negotiations regarding certain matters have not yet finished.

It may also be that the prime minister is following the strategy of first having the lower structures become a reality, instead of carrying on a fruitless debate on how the final product is to be like.

There does not appear to be any truth to P.W. Botha's being on a trip without knowing where he is going, or that he may be treading on water, or that he has been rendered powerless by pressure groups. He said so himself that he "is not spunkless," or "a numb individual being pushed around by everybody," or that he is "following a middle course."

I believe him, because it is against his nature and against the idea of his vocation that he and nobody else is the one who will have to cut through this knot. He knows that history will never forgive him if he now bungles opportunities.

Framework

In summary the framework of the policy which he offered repeatedly is the following:

The availability of large-scale financing, initiative and attractive opportunities for area development (probably development of the heartland in the black states and at the border) so as to counter the absorbing power of the metropolitan areas;

Besides the constellation of states, which is more of an economic collaboration concept between states, confederation is the policy of binding together the black states and the republic through interstate structures for common purposes. This confederation is to be a loose union and states can withdraw from it if they have reasons to do so;

The urban blacks will not become a part of the republic, but will be politically bound to their own states and this tie is to be further elaborated as it is put into practice. Their municipalities are to be built on a firmer basis through financial, administrative and technical aid, with negotiating machinery for getting together with other authorities on matters of local interest;

South African citizenship for blacks is not the policy, but a sort of common passport and the retention of certain advantages which such a document or the likes of it provides is held out as a prospect;

The republic's constitution, which must accommodate the whites, Asians and coloreds must uphold self determination for each group and the recommendations of the Presidential Council shall also be presented to the electorate in a referendum via a Nationalist Party congress. Through an interim proposal there will be a policy for local government for the three groups and for their collaboration. The Presidential Council, as an elected body, can become a mixed permanent consulting body.

Questions

The framework has been presented and within this framework things will have taken place in a drastic manner. In other words, five fundamental principles have been set down, but the structure which must be built upon them will be the test as to whether reform will actually take place.

Our people must stop being perplexed about the policy...this is unnecessary. However, the fact that we can still do a lot of reasoning with respect to its elaboration is certain.

I can, as an example, come up with four questions:

1. Will the confederation structure succeed as a settlement model if it does not also provide a clear expression on matters of common interest and obtain a political context?

2. Can a union succeed if common citizenship advantages (besides the various states citizenships) are watered down too much?

3. Is the disposition of the urban blacks' political rights in their own land sufficient, or must they be also represented in the confederation?

4. As a representative consulting body between whites, coloreds and Indians, is the Presidential Council the closest thing which can be obtained in the right to have a say?

There may be answers to these questions, or perhaps they can still be found, or could be left to an evolutionary process. But the fact that this must remain on the agenda is certain.

ADVANTAGE OF NAMIBIA-ANGOLA POLITICAL SOLUTION DISCUSSED

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 3 Aug 81 p 8

/Editorial: "South-West Africa--Angolan Tragedy"/

/Text/ While in the course of the past few days there has again been a wave of accusations and counteraccusations with respect to the South-West Africa--Angolan problem, Gen Charles Lloyd, the commander of our forces there, has reemphasized that the answer to the problem lies in the political area.

It is clear that our armed forces have hurt SWAPO badly and continue to do so. In so doing our forces are being helped by terrible conditions being endured by the terrorists.

Hunger, probably the greatest enemy of Africa, is driving many of those people over the border into South-West Africa.

Moreover, it is also true that, though it can display impressive ornaments of an independent state, Angola is still a badly divided country. The MPLA minority can rule only with the help of the Russians, East Germans and Cubans there.

Only they are preventing the MPLA (which is getting support from basically one of the smaller tribes) from being overthrown by the greater UNITA movement and by other groups.

It is therefore in a torn and actually pathetic part of the world where South Africa must try to help to bring about some sense in one way or another.

This has to be a political solution. However, it is also clear (and this is getting to be all the more urgent) that such a solution must be one which will bring a new order for an entire region of Africa.

It will not be of much help if South Africa will be the only one to be forced to withdraw, as the Organization of Africa Unity insists.

If such a withdrawal is not accompanied by a fitting system and guarantees then the only thing which will happen is that the Angolan tragedy will spread further south.

If we take a look at how communist powers exploit this sort of situation it will then become clear that the ultimate result will simply be an even more unhealthy infestation of the continent.

INTERIOR MINISTER ATTACKS PFP'S POLICY, EXPANDS ON NP'S POLICY

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 6 Aug 81 p 14

/Editorial: "Citizens' Rights"/

/Text/ In the course of the censure debate Interior Minister Chris Heunis lashed out against the Progressive Federal Party (PFP) opposition for its unrealistic policy, the impracticability of such a policy and most of all that party's misconception of group rights. He took the PFP to task for its Western liberal philosophy of individual citizens' rights within the framework of a unitary state.

But at the same time Heunis spoke positively regarding the basis of the Nationalist Party (NP) policy with respect to these matters. He said that the NP's constitutional development plan is founded on the realities of South Africa's population groups. The political and juridical problems of the country's inhabitants must therefore be tackled on a group basis. "Citizens' rights in South Africa must be managed on a group basis in just the same way as political rights, otherwise there will be chaos and everybody's rights will be endangered."

It is with this point of departure that the South African multinational jigsaw puzzle can make any sense.

As we all know, full citizenship means full voting rights, therefore there must be separation. Moreover, the situation of existing independent sovereign states of South Africa cannot be reconciled with a single citizenship.

As for passports or travel documents for citizens of independent national states it is possible to conceive temporary plans while these states are not recognized abroad. So it is quite possible that citizens of these states can travel with South African documents. It is a question of mutual arrangements.

Minister Heunis then presented a logical expose of the citizenship situation in South Africa in which separate sovereign states look after their affairs and their citizens' interests. It is basically a normal view of the situation such as can be expected in such a system. It is both a reasonable and acceptable solution and in a multinational South Africa of sovereign states it is clearly also the only solution for this thorny problem.

CHIEF OF ARMY SAYS STRONG WILLPOWER FACTOR AGAINST INSURGENCY

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 6 Aug 81 p 14

/Text/ Of the two forms of modern conflict insurgency, or terrorist warfare, is the prolonged type and this requires willpower, the spirit of endurance and faith in the public; so writes the chief of the South African Army, Lt Gen J.J. Geldenhuis, SSAS, SD, SM.

Conventional war is usually of short duration, because war machines and ammunition have become terribly expensive and few or no countries at all can afford to sustain it for a long time. In this sort of warfare destructive force is concentrated against the enemy at the right time and place with decisive effect so as to bring the conflict to an end.

But in an insurgency struggle it is a matter of exhausting the opponent. The war is therefore a prolonged one and violence is employed in rather small attacks over a long period of time. The objective is to force people to lose their will to resist. The people must therefore be able to display a spirit of endurance.

However, the terrorist leader also has problems. It is relatively easy to unchain a revolution, but keeping it up for a long time is another matter. The longer the struggle keeps going the more difficult it becomes for the terrorist to maintain the motivation of his followers.

We have already noted this all around us. For us in South Africa this means that we must cultivate a special approach to the prolonged nature of insurgency warfare. Our enemies are familiar with this strategy and will do everything in their power to break our will to win.

Understanding of the duration and type of this conflict on the part of all sections of our population is therefore very important. Ability to endure and unflinging faith in final victory over terror is the most important attribute that a terrorist afflicted community must possess.

DRAFTING CONSTITUTION TERMED SLOW PROCESS; SABRA CRITICIZED

Colored, Indian Participation

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 8 Aug 81 p 10

/From My Political Pen column by Dawie: "Two Questions Are Now in the Forefront in the Constitutional Debate"/

/Text/ This week's discussions about a new constitution for South Africa which were conducted in parliament and in the Presidential Council have not only sketched out the future trend more clearly, but they have also raised two important questions.

The first of these is: How fast can a new constitutional order be established, as, understandably, there is a great deal of impatience about this in certain circles. The second question is: What assurance can there be that the proposals will be acceptable to whites and coloreds.

The Cord's End

The making of a constitution does not consist of compiling a number of slogans in accordance with a jiffy recipe. There are many pains in drafting a constitution and thereafter it is subjected to a long process of evolution.

It will not be any different in South Africa. If the Presidential Council has not yet come up with proposals it is not because it has not given this matter its greatest dedication. It is because there is so much hard work being done in finding the cord's end in order to unravel the knot.

Delicate Mood

For the time being there may be two ways of reasoning. One of these is that it will be necessary to wait until there is sufficient clarity in this matter so that the picture can be presented in its entirety. As the argument goes, if A is defined, then people will have to be told precisely where they stand with respect to B.

It is obvious that there will be problems if clarity is required all the way up to Z. Perhaps it is precisely the Afrikaner's delicate mood that prompts him to want an outline of the details extending into the distant future...otherwise he remains skeptical.

Yet experience has taught us that often mistakes are made in projecting a future policy. After 20 or 10, or even after just 5 years things will appear to be quite different than expected. Then it will be necessary to think things over in every instance and to make corrections.

Fights

The second argument is then simply that it makes no sense not to talk about the distant future with respect to the future generations, to make decisions binding them in detail. Thus big fights arise over an imaginary future while our own present calls for action. There is much to be said about the need for seeking a point of departure and building upon it if in principle a course has been decided upon. If there is reasonable consensus as to what is to take place at a certain level of government, should not this be done first and the range of questions left aside?

Thus some say that people of other color ought to get a chance to gain experience in governing the country. In so doing an important contribution can be made in improving the general climate within the country before solutions for the really difficult problems of the country are tackled.

It is between these lines that in the months to come the Presidential Council will have to find its way.

But what if, after all this effort is made and plans are worked out they are then rejected by the people for whom it was all intended? There is no other answer to this than that of taking all possible obliging actions and counting upon the reasonableness of the people.

Their Help

The best guarantee of obtaining these peoples' collaboration is to get their help in formulating plans. The government has done this by taking coloreds and Indians into the Presidential Council and by asking these groups to come up with proposals. In addition high-level contacts between the government and nonwhite leaders are increasing steadily.

Moreover, it is a foregone conclusion that if the government deems it necessary to go to the white voters for a referendum on the new proposals it will necessarily have to do the same with regard to other groups affected by the proposals. They too must have the right to consult with their people.

Final Test

It is here that the final test will take place and it is here that there is a question mark as to the role which the official opposition and its newspapers will be playing.

Will the leftist forces boycotting the Presidential Council give their support in bringing about a new system of reconciliation in the country or will they try to scuttle the efforts to bring this about?

Put differently: Will the people who want peace in this country succeed in preventing their plans from being torpedoed by others?

SABRA Out of Step

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 13 Aug 81 p 16

/Editorial: "Dead as a Doornail"/

/Text/ The fact that spokesmen of an organization such as SABRA /South African Bureau of Racial Affairs/ can speak in favor of a plan which amounts to nothing more than "homelands" for the coloreds and the Indians during their testimony before the Constitutional Committee of the Presidential Council is dumbfounding. We were under the impression that such thoughts had become as dead as a doornail long ago.

In his testimony Prof Carel Boshoff made it apparent that he (and SABRA) still cling to thoughts of complete area separations in South Africa. Have they not then ever accepted the validity of those arguments which demonstrate how unattainable is such a separation plan? Do they fail to see that the settlement and distribution of whites, coloreds and Indians in South Africa differ completely from those of black people?

Up until now the proponents of the colored homeland plan have vaguely referred to the northwest portion of Cape Province as a possible homeland for these people, but such references have seldom been taken seriously. Now Professors Boshoff and W.H. Oliver are coming up with the absurd proposal that this must be the Western Cape. In their testimony there were no indications of possible borders, but could anyone come up with a proposal that places such as the Cape Peninsula and the Western Province must become part of a separate colored state?

But where would Professors Boshoff and Oliver establish the white "homeland?"

Years ago the Nationalist Party and its congresses set forth pronouncements with respect to this matter. A colored homeland was straightforwardly rejected (there was never any talk about an Indian homeland) and there was acceptance of the fact that the whites, coloreds and Indians must jointly share the same country and form a nation. Whatever say each of these population groups must have within the same nation is the very important question which the Constitutional Committee of the Presidential Council is now considering.

The two professors themselves and SABRA, for whom they spoke in their testimony, have rendered no service in the eyes of serious and informed students of South Africa's constitutional problems.

DEFENSE SPENDING INCREASES DRAW COMMENTS

Warning to Enemies

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 13 Aug 81 p 9

/Text/ A dramatic increase of more than 30 percent in the defense budget, amounting to 2,465 million rand, was announced yesterday in the Capetown Parliament by Finance Minister Owne Horwood during his budget address.

As in the case of last year the defense budget for the financial year 1981-82 is the largest single budget item provided for. Last year the budget amount was 1,890 million rand.

These figures ought to make it clear, for South Africa's enemies as well, that the government is serious in its commitment for the proper defense of the country, so stated Minister Horwood.

"In the insecure inimical world in which we live today, unfortunately we hardly have any other choice than to do everything in our power to increase our defenses against the threats coming from beyond our borders."

Minister Horwood expressed his appreciation to South Africans of all races and faiths who have invested millions of rands in government bonds.

In view of the recent developments in and around southern Africa defense must remain one of the most important choices and therefore he proposes that an amount of 172 million rand from the 1980-81 budget be transferred over to a special defense account.

This includes an amount of 160 million rand for repaying a debt carried over from previous years and 12 million rand for compensating for the sale of certain supplies of stored fuels. Provisions for the transfer of these amounts will be made later in the finance act during the parliamentary meeting.

Defense Spending Comparatively Small

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 Aug 81 p 27

/Text/ The 30 percent increase in the defense budget to a sum of 2,465 million rand is not too high. This is what Lt Gen W.J. Berg, chief of staff of Finances, said yesterday at the Nedbank/Ou Mutual's budget forum.

Although the increase in the budget was given as 30 percent, in a practical sense, this amounts to 15 percent. An increase in prices and in salaries must also be taken into consideration and the actual increases in defense spending are minimal if these factors are considered and the increase is compared with the rate of inflation.

It is important that certain matters in the budget must enjoy priority. Defense is one of these. The economy cannot be placed on a healthy basis if there is no peace and tranquility in the country and its inhabitants feel secure.

Mr B. Kantor

Lieutenant General Bergh's defense expenditures, especially the extraordinary costs, can be financed through defense bonds. These types of investments play a very important role in the procurement of extra incomes for the armed forces.

Actually the real allotments to defense have leveled off during the last 5 years; but according to Lieutenant General Bergh there is no reason for concern over the leveling off of expenditures for defense.

Mr B. Kantor, of the Department of Economy of Capetown University, said that actually defense expenditures are very low. They amount to only 3.5 percent of South Africa's gross national product and this is an indication of how low defense expenditures are.

According to him more money can be allotted to defense especially in making urban areas safer.

According to Director of Finances Dr J.H. de Loor it is up to the government to determine priorities. Those matters which must enjoy priority are first of all defense and second education. Although there are other priorities these two must have preference.

NEW IMMIGRATION BILL PUBLISHED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 28 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

A NEW Immigration Bill has been published and may be presented in Parliament by the Deputy Prime Minister, Senator Ben Nsibandze sometime before the end of this year.

Under the terms of the bill there will be ten classes of entry permits and where a person, other than a prohibited immigrant, has made application in the prescribed manner for an entry permit of a particular class he will be issued with such a permit if the immigration officer is satisfied with the information supplied.

If any person who has applied for an entry permit of any class, as provided for in the bill, is aggrieved by a decision refusing him such an entry permit may within the time prescribed appeal against the decision to the Minister in charge of immigration.

The Minister's decision will be final and will not be questioned in any court. The Chief Immigration Officer may vary the terms and conditions of any entry permit issued under this Act and may with the written consent of the Minister cancel such a permit.

An entry permit will cease to be valid if the person to whom it has been issued fails to engage within 14 days in the employment, occupation, trade, business or profession in respect of which that permit was issued.

The permit will also cease to be valid if that person has engaged in any employment, occupation, trade, business or profession whether or not for renumeration or profit, other than the said employment or occupation.

The presence in Swaziland of a person whose permit will have ceased to be valid will be unlawful. The Minister may by order in writing direct that any person whose presence in Swaziland was, immediately before the making of the order, unlawful under this Act, will be removed from and remain out of this country either indefinitely or for such a period as may be specified in the order.

Before making such an order the Minister will seek the advice of the Immigration Advisory Committee to be appointed by the Prime Minister, but will not be bound by its advice.

The person to whom the order has been made will be removed to the place from where he came or to another country where he belongs or to any place to which he consents to be removed if the government of that country consents to receive him.

He will be kept in custody until his departure from Swaziland and while being kept there will be deemed to be in lawful custody.

The captain of an aircraft, the guard of a train or the person in charge of a vehicle arriving from or leaving for any place outside Swaziland, or the owner of or agent for such aircraft will if so required by an immigration officer, furnish a list of all people on the board.

Where any person conveyed to Swaziland in an aircraft is refused permission to enter this country on the ground that he is a prohibited immigrant, the captain of the aircraft will if so required take that person into his custody and ensure that he is removed from the Kingdom.

The bill also provides that any person other than a citizen of Swaziland or a person in possession of an entry permit or pass, who having been deported from any country enters Swaziland on his way to his final destination, may be arrested without a warrant of arrest and detained as long as is necessary for arrangements to be made for his departure from here.

ENERGY PLAN TO ENCOURAGE SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 20 Aug 81 p 2

[Text]

THE MINISTER for Commerce, Industry, Mines and Tourism, Prince Nqaba, has told a United Nations energy conference in Kenya that Swaziland intends establishing an energy masterplan based on the available sources of energy here particularly coal, hydro, wood and molasses.

The UN conference on new and renewal sources of energy opened in Nairobi last week Monday and continues until this Friday.

Prince Nqaba told the conference yesterday that coal, although non-renewable, has a good potential as an energy source for Swaziland in the domestic and commercial sectors.

Known saleable reserves of coal he said are equivalent to 60 times the annual current total energy consumption of the country.

He also disclosed that plans of utilising coal as a new source of energy in Swaziland include investigations that may lead to the installation of coal-fired electrical power generating stations, coal gasification and liquification potential.

The plans are also designed to encourage the community to step up the use of local coal as a substitute for the expensive imported sources of energy in both their domestic and industrial requirements.

Prince Nqaba also told the conference that the unregulated harvesting of wood by the rural domestic sector has been reinforced by what he called steeply rising prices of alternative fuels.

Besides hydro-electricity and wood, he said, also under consideration was energy from molasses and sugar juice for conversion into ethanol which he told the conference would reduce the country's imported energy and result in a single significant foreign exchange saving.

"Other areas which are being investigated include renewable sources of energy such as wind power, geothermal, solar, and the conversion or organic waste biogas," he said.

EYADEMA SPEECH TO SEMINAR ON FOOD MARKETING

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 7 Aug 81 pp 3,5

[Speech given 6 August 1981]

[Excerpts] Four years ago it was right here that we launched the Green Revolution campaign together, which was above all intended to make our people self-sufficient in food production. This campaign for self-sufficiency was no vain slogan. It was a real gamble, a solemn commitment, a profession of faith, one which aroused your enthusiasm and gained your unanimous and complete support.

You recall that at that time the price of grains--which are the basic staples in our diet--had reached record levels, and we saw the price of a bag of corn or millet sell at 19,000 francs.

Having heard and understood our appeal, you went courageouly to work, and the results were not long in appearing, since after only a year prices came back down to their normal level, or about 5,000 francs for the same bag of corn or millet. Strengthened by that experience, we decided to continue with the effort, in order to be completely secure against unexpected reverses.

At the opening of the seminar of 7 March 1977 I told you this: "If we are powerless in the face of imported inflation, we must do everything possible to struggle against the skyrocketing of prices for domestic production."

Comrades, this policy of food self-sufficiency would be nothing more than a delusion if, despite all the continuous and sustained efforts we are making in the agricultural domain, the Togolese were still unable to eat their fill, and especially if they were unable to dispose of their own agricultural production for themselves.

By means of the Green Revolution, we decided together to produce more, in order to depend less on the outside. This assumes that our own production must first of all meet the needs of domestic consumption, before any surpluses could be exported. In order to reach this objective, the party and the government have established a number of institutions responsible for organizing the peasants and organizing production on a new, more modern, and more profitable basis.

Thus, TOGOGRAIN, TOGOFRUIT, ONAF, CNCA [National Fund for Agricultural Credits], SRCC [National Soceity for the Renewal and Development of Togolese Cocoa and Coffee

Resources], and the other entities were set up to this end. In order to encourage the peasants, important steps were taken to help them. Prices for all cash crops, such as cotton, coffee, and cocoa, were raised. Every year the state provided subsidies of more than 1 billion frances for the purchase of fertilizers and pesticides for the growers. Since 1975, all peasants have been exempted from civil taxes.

We have organized fairs and agricultural expositions, in order to sensitize and mobilize the rural and urban populace, so as to improve their agricultural yield.

These efforts are supported by the financial allocations made to the agricultural societies so they can intensify their activities and diversify their operations.

The CNCA has opened an office in each region and even in some prefectures, in order to provide peasants and employees the financial resources necessary to operate traditional family farms as well as large fields. With the large amount of plowing implements, tractors, and modern land-clearing machinery which the state has acquired and put at the disposal of the peasants, all the conditions exist for giving our Green Revolution every chance of success.

Take Rigorous Measures

Today, we can say that the policy of food self-sufficiency has yielded highly encouraging results, which would have already enabled us to attain our objectives, if speculators--fishing in troubled waters--were not sabotaging our policy by illicit trade, by which only they profit. This is why, for the time being, while we are confronted with this network of speculators who conspire to subjugate our country economically, and deprive our hard-working people of the fruits of their labor, it is imperative that we take rigorous mesaures to supervise the trade in food commodities more effectively.

It is often said that to govern is to foresee. In our country where the food deficit is tied not only to the insufficiency of technical resources but also to climatic vagaries, we must exercise constant vigilance in order to be prepared when hard times come, especially drought, which is already at our borders, and whose consequences are always catastrophic for our agricultural production.

In order to prepare against these difficult times and guarantee the peasants a reasonable price for their food products, the party and the government created TOGOGRAIN, the national office in charge of purchasing, stocking, and marketing of foodstuffs.

The office disposes of 15,000 tons of storage capacity, but because of speculation and illicit trade, which is rampant in the grain market, TOGOGRAIN'S silos are empty.

If we are not careful, in this situation, there is a real danger that in the months to come we will be forced--despite the very favorable climatic conditions we have enjoyed this year, which augur abundant harvests--to have recourse to hard currency in order to import corn, millet, sorghum, and Chinese yam, which are the staple foods of our people.

Therefore, all political and administrative officials must join hands to prevent our production from leaving the country illicitly, while our compatriots are unable to find the products they want at an affordable price.

The peasants, too, should build up the necessary reserves to feed themselves and their families, and avoid yielding too readily to the temptation of a quick profit, which is the bait held out by the speculators.

MINISTER DISCUSSES SAUDI LOAN, IMF TALKS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

OFFICIALS from the Saudi Development Fund are expected in the country in two weeks to sign the K50 million loan being negotiated, Minister of Finance Mr Kebby Musokotwane said yesterday.

The money the construction of the Mansa-Kasama road, the Chembe bridge and maize storage sheds.

Mr Musokotwane who has just returned from a two-day visit to Taif, Saudi Arabia, with President Kaunda said a Government delegation has remained in Riyad, the Saudi capital to give details of the projects to the fund.

He said lack of feasibility studies on the projects and other economic ventures made it difficult for Zambia to ask for foreign aid, but this bottleneck would soon be summounted.

He said the Government would soon issue a statement on talks held with officials from the International Monetary Fund on the K800 million the IMF gave Zambia last May.

The IMF team which visited Zambia last month was led by Mr Edwin Bourneman. The nature of talks Mr Bourneman and his team held with Government officials were not disclosed.

Speaking in an interview in his office last night, the minister said that he was going to issue a statement after hearing from the IMF board of directors and reporting the same to President Kaunda and the Cabinet.

Mr Musokotwane however reported that there had been delays by the IMF in releasing the first instalment to Zambia because it had to borrow funds from other countries like Saudi Arabia to re-lend to other nations.

ZAMBIA-ZAIRE PERMANENT COMMISSION MEETS IN KITWE

Zairian Delegation Leader's Statement

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

DELEGATES to the Zambia-Zaire permanent commission meeting in Kitwe yesterday split into committees to study problems mentioned by Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi on Monday.

Provincial permanent secretary Mr Jordan Munkanta, briefing the Press said a joint communique would be issued at the end of the deliberations.

The committees were analysing problems raised by Zambia and the answers given by the Zairean delegation leader Mr Mandungu Bula Nyati.

The meeting is expected to end tomorrow and the Zairean team is expected to leave for home on Saturday.

Speaking at a reception on Tuesday night hosted by the district council for the delegates, Mr Nyati said Africa cannot hope for unity unless its countries avoid border confrontations which could be used by enemies to disrupt peace and stability.

Mr Nyati, who is Shaba province governor and political commissioner said Africa's enemies were determined to create disunity on the continent.

"These people want to divide us. They want to exploit us. They can use any means to achieve their goals, unless there is African unity our enemies will succeed. This is why we should avoid border confrontations."

Mr Nyati said the commission was formed to tackle "family problems".

"Most problems that may have arisen between Zambia and Zaire are those of a family nature. Even in a family one expects problems. Others have come up because of lack of proper communication and personal contact between the two countries."

His delegation was keen to find solutions to the problems.

"On the same lines, if there is no peace in Zambia there can be no peace in Zaire."

Zambian Plan To Ease Tension

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA has suggested a four-point plan to Zaire to help ease the tension at Kasumbalesa and Mokambo border posts.

These are:

- Zaire should control the influx of criminals into Zambia;
- Stop the smuggling of essential commodities into Zaire;

End the harrassment of travellers along the Pedicle Road;

- And control the influx of foreigners from Zaire into Zambia.

In a frank speech delivered at the opening of the annual general meeting of the Zaire/Zambia permanent commission in the Kitwe district council chamber yesterday, Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee Mr Alex Shapi said Zambia had been worried about the increase in crime.

He told the Zairean delegation led by Shaba Province governor and political commissioner Mr Mandungu Bula Nyati that the Zairean government should act to solve crime, smuggling, movement of foreigners and stop harrassing Zambians on the Pedicle.

The need to solve the problems he had outlined could not be overemphasised and appealed for frankness in the talks.

The problems affecting the two countries were on the increase.

He was aware there were common problems which were of great concern such as the issue of the ex-Katangese and the international border dispute at Kaputa which the meeting could discuss although these had been approached at higher levels.

Mr Shapi said crime was not insurmountable because he recalled at one stage when Zairean President Mobutu Sese Seko "personally tackled the matter and there was jubilation in Zambia."

The visit to Zambia by the Zairean delegation should be able to produce similar reaction from Zambians.

"It is in this vein that whatever resolutions are passed by this meeting should be implemented to go a long way in solving these problems and make lives of the two countries' peoples easier to realise," he said.

He had information that some Government and private vehicles stolen in Zambia at gun-point by Zaireans had been seen in Zaire.

The owners of the vehicles and the Party and its Government were eager to have them back. "This meeting is asking the government of Zaire to use its good offices to retrieve the vehicles in question and deliver them to the Zambian authorities."

Mr Nyati agreed that some of the problems highlighted by Mr Shapi existed even before the two countries got their independence but appreciated Mr Shapi's frankness and sincerity in approaching the issues.

Spirit of Session 'Gratifying'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

IT IS gratifying that both Zaire and Zambia have taken the session of the Joint Permanent Commission in Kitwe seriously: instead of ending yesterday with the usual "friendly communiques" it will now extend into tomorrow.

That is the spirit wanted if neighbours who are faced with problems between themselves have to live in peace and not in a love-hate atmosphere as is the case at present.

We are glad that the Zaire delegation leader Citoyen Nyati has not taken offence to the down-to-earth observations by his Zambian counterpart Mr Shapi when the meeting opened on Tuesday.

Mr Shapi was brutally frank (he did not use the hackneyed diplomatic phrases) when he put it to his guests that most of the border problems resulted from non-action and seeming indifference from the Zairean side.

He came out openly saying Zaire was actually the source of the majority of weapons being used to stage hold-ups and commit violent crime in Zambia.

Citoyen Nyati did not follow his other Zairean leaders who have been here and who, even when they had the facts before them, denied the truth.

Cross-border robberies, murders, smuggling, Pedicle road tortures, gun-running and illegal immigration are but a few of the problems that face the people. That is the task for Mr Shapi and Citoyen Nyati.

We must accept the fact that our border with Zaire, like the others with Angola, Malawi, Tanzania and all our neighbours are artificial and therefore that our people are one.

The colonialists drew the boundaries between "possessions" fortuitously sketching lines through uncharted terrain like mountains, rivers and other natural beacons.

They cut straight through kingdoms and tribes and then sliced up their own bits for administrative purposes. But since at independence we inherited such arbitrary boundaries it is for the good of all of us not to open up old wounds.

That is why Zambia has been cautious enough in her approach to issues of which piece of land belongs to which neighbour.

We have seen what happens in other parts of the world over border disputes — Somalia versus Ethiopia over Ogaden desert; Somalia versus Kenya and Djibouti; Morocco V Algeria or Mauritania over Western Sahara; India v Pakistan over Kashmir; the list is long.

We learn from such conflicts that instead of the meagre funds we have being spent on development they are given back to the former colonial masters for shipments of arms to defend boundaries.

Meetings of the Kitwe kind should not confine themselves to defending petty jingoism; they must consider matters on a wider perspective.

SENIOR POLICE OFFICERS BACK ALLEGATIONS OF NEPOTISM IN FORCE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

SENIOR police officers in Kabwe have come out in full support of their colleague Mr John Mang'watu over allegations of nepotism and have called on the Government to appoint a commission of inquiry to prove their case.

Mr Mang'watu, who is central division deputy prosecutions officer, charged on Tuesday that he was a victim of nepotism allegedly practised by officers responsible for administration at Force headquarters in Lusaka.

Mr Mang'watu said he was answerable to his senior man who had been moved to North-Western Province, leaving a vacancy for a divisional prosecutions officer.

Instead of either promoting him to that post since he had been in the Force for more than 20 years or bringing another senior man, a junior man had been sent there to be his boss.

"I refused to work under this man because it would have meant me reversing his decisions. When I complained at Force eadquarters in Lusaka, the man in charge of administration said I would be transferred to Kasama in the same capacity.

"When I asked why they were doing this to me, this man who is related to the junior man brought to Kabwe said I should resign if I did not want to go to Kasama."

He wondered why he was being transferred in the same capacity instead of upgrading him when he had not been disciplined before. "This is pure nepotism," Mr Mang'watu said and vowed not to move to Kasama in his present capacity.

Central division police chief Mr Oscar Phiri has declined to comment on the matter as it was not for "public consumption."

But some officers-in-charge of stat ons within Kabwe agreed with Mr Mang'watu and said the practice had "killed" the police force.

The officers, who asked not to be named, said there were "roadblocks" between divisions and the office of the Inspector-General Mr Fabiano Chella.

"As a result wrong information is fed to him by those who are close to him."

They added that many hard working officers had become frustrated and their morale was low.

Intelligence officers are not putting in their best because of frustrations.

FAO DONATED TRUCKS' DISAPPEARANCE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

MYSTERY surrounds the whereabouts of 80 Fiat trucks donated to Zambia by the Food and Agricultural Organisation to transport this year's expected bumper maize harvest.

The trucks were supposed to have arrived in the country in July from Italy after the signing of a K1.8 million agreement between the Government and FAO, but nobody is prepared to say what has happened to them.

Yesterday the Ministry of Works and Supply and FAO which signed the agreement and the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development which was supposed to use the trucks refused to say where the vehicles were or when they would arrive.

Speaking through his secretary, FAO acting representative to Zambia Mr Jan Winderick refused to comment and referred inquiries to the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development who "should know better" what happened to the trucks.

A spokesman at the ministry said he had not seen the trucks since the agreement was signed in June and directed enquiries to the Ministry of Works and Supply which he said was responsible for procuring them.

The ministry spokesman could not say whether the non-arrival of the trucks in the country would affect the transportation of maize.

Ministry of Works and Supply permanent secretary Mr Vincent Siwale refused to discuss the issue and instructed his secretary to inform a Times reporter: "Tell him I have no time. I am very busy."

DECISION TO SEND DRIVERS TO DAR ES SALAAM FOR VEHICLES RAPPED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 4

[Excerpt]

Your man of focus does not want to be vindictive. But his camera shows that one of the stories which made sad reading last Sunday was over the importation of Romanian Aro vehicles now being used by the Zambia Police Force.

It has been reportedly computed that this poor country paid over K3.7 million in unrequired foreign exchange transfers just to transport the 1,000 Aros from Dar es Salaam to Lusaka.

This is reportedly because the management of the Mechanical Services Department refused to accept expert advice on how cheaply the vehicles would have been brought in from the port.

This raises crucial questions for both the MSD and the Romanians who supplied the vehicles. That single commodity agreement on which the vehicles were supplied gives imperialism adequate ammunition to effectively defeat the assumption that aid from socialist countries is comparatively better.

After the agreement for the supply of the vehicles was concluded a number of Zambians left on February 2, 1980 for Romania to be vetted in the running and maintenance of the vehicles.

These were mechanics. They returned home on April 4 of the same year. But while in Romania it became evident to them that the so-called experts who were assigned to train them were below expectation in their performance.

Was that deliberate or not? As we focus we note that during the Romania National Day on August 21 this year an embassy spokesman said the Aros were very suitable to Zambia.

He said the model was chosen from among many others by a team of 30 police officers who visited that country for that express purpose. But we focus on the following questions:

- The vehicle's engine being for Italian Fiat diesel,
- The gear-box being of combined French-Italian model,
- The injection pump being made under licence from British Cav and German models, and
- The vehicle itself being assembled under licence, is that the most suitable police vehicle available in Romania?

Why did the Zambia Police Force not go straight to the British, the Germans or the Italians, instead of going to a factory which makes the cars under licence?

Questions can also be raised on another level: the way the vehicles were to be delivered to Zambia.

One assumes that the negotiators, from both sides, took into account that Zambia was a poor country which needed the vehicles as cheaply as she needed them urgently.

Having agreed on the purchase price, it was to be expected that they should have made adequate arrangements on how the vehicles would finally get to Lusaka.

But documentation at the relevant government office shows that the Romanian freightliners offloaded the Aros at the port of Dar es Salaam and left it to the Zambians to fend for themselves.

In the process the Mechanical Services Department made a complete muddle of the whole show. That is putting it mildly.

In the self-same way that something seems to have gone amiss in the manner the purchase arrangements were concluded, it is evident from documentation that the MSD "sabotaged" the nation.

As we focus with our wide angle lens we see that there is a danger of loading the blame for whatever happens on the army officers, under the thenColonel Tom Fara, as these were in command of the MSD at the time of the negotiations.

Your man of focus has conclusively taken a picture which shows that in fact Brigadier-General Fara had vehemently argued that the Aros should be brought in from Dar es Salaam by the cheapest means possible, and this being:

- Tazara had offered exceptionally low rates at K326.13 per vehicle.
- Motor Holdings offered K450 per vehicle, inclusive of insurance.
- Vehicle Delivery Limited offered same terms as Motor Holdings.

For the 1,000 Aros which had been ordered this would have meant a bill of about K300,000. In the case of the Motor Holdings and Vehicle Delivery, the money would be paid in local currency, Kwacha.

For Tazara, Zambia would have paid only half of that since it is owned jointly with Tanzania.

What was the alternative to this transportation arrangement? Our camera shows that Brigadier-General Fara and his team fought for this arrangement and threw out the other alternative.

But somewhat, some people had their way. Fara was removed from MSD prematurely and sent back to the armed forces.

And ultimately what happened was:

The MSD sent drivers to Dar es Salaam, which in the end meant that each vehicle cost the nation K4,000 in foreign exchange to move from Tanzania to Zambia.

This meant that Zambia had to pay K4 million foreign exchange for an exercise which should have cost no more than K300,000.

Your man of focus learns that the cost analysis which strongly militated against this waste of money had been sent to the permanent secretary, Ministry of Works and Supply; the Auditor General; the Tender Board; and the assistant secretary in charge of finance, at the Ministry of Works and Supply.

Such disastrous running of a Government department involving the burning of K3.7 million foreign exchange at the officials' own pleasure should be worse than even the Kanyama disaster funds scandal.

Since the Government is aware of all this, will it keep quite just like over the Kanyama scandal?

Then people will be saying, what is all this talk about conserving foreign exchange if they can be playing with such large sums of money themselves?

Like in the Kanyama scandal, the public will be speculating as to who the culprits are in the aregate.

Your man of focus can only help narrow the field of speculation by confirming that the wide angle lens shows that the army officers under Fara had fought against "powerful forces" which eventually carried the day. That's the way to run a Government?

Indeed those who did the cost analysis for the mechanical services department are shocked that even after their compelling documentation, the MSD went ahead to spoil public money — more than enough to build one hospital.

Says the documentation: "It is surprisingly very stunning to see that with all these odd arrangements mentioned, the MSD management opted to send drivers to Dar es Salaam to retrive vehicles.

"Eve with whatever variation, the exercise of sending drivers would certainly be more involving and expensive than sub-contracting to retrieving agencies.

"At this moment, when foreign exchange is very difficult to get, decision by opinion as shown by MSD management could only be termed as sabotage and definitely not in the interest of the nation."

Who will own up for the scandal at the MSD...?

What answer will the Romanians have for the propaganda they have created for imperialism that socialist aid is second rate and against the aspirations of the poor countries?

But above all, we focus on the question: How much of this goes on in the corridors of our Government ministries and departments?

BRIEFS

PLANNED FERTILIZER PRODUCTION INCREASE--Prime Minister Mundia is to witness the signing of a banking consortium agreement with the Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia involving K31.5 million in Lusaka today. A spokesman for Barclays Bank said yesterday that the money would help Nitrogen Chemicals increase production from 50,000 to 200,000 tonnes of fertilizer per annum. When this is achieved the company would produce 80 percent of Zambia's annual fertiliser requirement, he said. The project was the biggest Zambia has ever undertaken since Independence and was now approaching K300 million provided by all commercial banks and other financial institutions. INCREASE IN CATTLE BREEDING--There has been a steady increase in cattle farming in Zambia over the past ten years, the Herd Book Society of Zambia has said. Not only has there been an increase in the number of cattle farms and ranches and the size of operations, but farmers have tried successfully to improve the quality and functional performance of their livestock. This review of the society's performance is in the latest edition of Productive Farming, the official journal of the Commercial Farmers' Bureau. The society was established in 1972, mainly through the efforts of the late Mr Angus Loggie and is now an association of cattle breeders who have come together to stimulate interest in their breeds, and to share the know-how. The breeders are there to record their Pedigree cattle and promote the distribution of the breeding stock they produce throughout Zambia. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Sep 81 p 2]

OFFICIAL WARNS CIVIL SERVICE 'REBELS'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 6

[Text]

CIVIL servants and parastatal bodies working against Government policies will be dealt with, the Deputy Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi, warned yesterday.

Opening the Serima Co-operative Society at Matizha business centre in Gutu, the deputy minister said:

"I am informed there are certain people in the civil service and parastatal bodies who are going about telling people to be individualists in their approach to development and not to listen to the Government," said Mr Mahachi.

"These unscrupulous people are said to be refusing to provide assistance to any form of producer co-operatives. They are enemies of the people, enemies of our revolution and, above all, enemies of Government.

"We must co-operatively get ready for them as soon as possible. Watch out and report them to us."

Mr Mahachi said that over the last 90 years the individualist approach to farming had resulted in exploitation, and civil servants and parastatals "still advocating the decadent system did not have the interests of the masses at heart".

However, the deputy minister made it clear the Government would not force people into co-operatives. A successful movement could be initiated only by the farmers themselves through their political leadership and active party cadres.

The cornerstone for the development of communal areas and resettlement schemes was co-operatives, said Mr Mahachi, adding that projects formed voluntarily would get financial and technical assistance.

"The establishment of co-operatives, with special emphasis on producer co-operatives, is Government policy," he said.

"All Government ministries, parastatal organisations and civil servants who are involved in development have a duty to assist every co-operative.

"It would be ridiculous if parastatal bodies and civil servants resent providing assistance just because they are opposed to the idea and use their position to frustrate development programmes.

"The Government will leave no stone unturned in advising people to be organised."

KANGAI EXPLAINS RULES FOR DEMOBILIZATION

Training Organized

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

ONLY members of the Zimbabwe National Army, including those people in assembly points, are eligible for demobilisation training and pay, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said yesterday.

"I don't decide who's eligible," he said in an interview. "The army will send me lists of the people being demobilised and we will then take over.

"We'll ask them what they want to do, what their interests are, if they want to go back to school or if they are interested in agriculture or whatever. We'll then organise their training and help them find a job."

Asked about confusion among some ex-combatants, especially in Bulawayo, of who was eligible for the $185 a month gratuity for up to two years, he replied: "The word demobilisation implies you are mobilised and are leaving the army.

"The army will find the people who want to be demobilised. They have all the lists and the lists of people in the assembly points. I don't know what people mean when they ask where they can register.

"They know exactly how many people are still in the assembly points awaiting integration and perhaps eventual demobilisation.

"If someone I fought with comes into my office and asks for demobilisation pay there is nothing I can do, no matter how much I want to, if he wasn't sent by the army.

"We have ministers and secretaries of ministries who fought in the war. It would be ridiculous to pay them another $185 a month when they have demobilised already."

Mr Kangai said the monthly grant of $185 was intended to support the demobilised soldier while he found his feet in civilian life, was trained and found a job.

"I don't see any problem finding work for these people." He did not know when the first men would be demobilised or how long the exercise would take. "That is up to the army. We can handle as many as they send us as fast as they send them."

The demobilisation directorate, headed by Mr John Shoniwa, was given $43 million in the Government estimates for grants and forms and booklets have been printed and are now being distributed to army units.

The booklet explains the men will be given enough time to apply for demobilisation and that all members of the national army, no matter what force they fought in during the liberation war, are eligible for demobilisation.

'HERALD' Comment

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 10

[Editorial: "Avoiding Scandal"]

[Text]

THE Government expects to spend about $116 million by the time its massive demobilisation exercise of the national army is completed, probably in two years.

In this financial year alone, $43 million has been allocated to the Ministry of Labour and Social Services, under which the demobilisation directorate falls.

In a country virtually in the throes of economic belt-tightening, this is a lot of money. The Minister of Finance, Senator Nkala, has recently spoken of tough measures to seal up loopholes which some unscrupulous would-be emigrants may use to get money out of the country.

Evidently, we need all the money we can lay our hands on. So the demobilisation exercise, under which those wishing to opt out of the national army will be paid $185 a month for two years, must be handled very carefully indeed.

The ex-combatants who are entitled to this largesse ought to be genuine ex-combatants, not people who are trying to cash in on a system that may be susceptible to abuse.

Last year, there was chaos in the assembly points as people not eligible to receive allowances were somehow allowed to. The charge of fraud was bandied about.

The ex-combatants deserve the attractive conditions offered to them to opt out of the army, but unless the Government is absolutely ruthless in its screening of claimants, it could have another scandal on its hands.

SEKERAMAYI ATTACKS CRITICS OF COOPERATIVES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 12

[Text]

THE Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeramayi, has dismissed as "malicious and subversive" allegations that co-operatives are intended to lure people into forced labour camps.

"People cannot be forced to co-operate in a democratic society like Zimbabwe," he said in reply to questions. "They co-operate for their own good and mutual benefit.

"The intending co-operators themselves choose the type and extent of co-operation they prefer — from marketing and supply service co-operatives and elementary co-operatives to fully-fledged collective producer co-operatives.

"Alarmists have been spreading false stories designed to scare the masses away from this approach of collective endeavour. This malicious campaign is not only stupid, but subversive.

"I must emphatically state that the policy of co-operatives is based on the principle of people voluntarily joining in the formation of co-operatives," the minister said.

"Co-operative members are their own masters and, by the same token, must be free to withdraw whenever they no longer want to belong to a co-operative."

The minister said there was a strong case for having an educational campaign to make the masses aware of the virtues and benefits of co-operatives through a well trained cadreship.

The Government, he said, was aware that the policy of co-operatives was a long term programme, calling for extreme patience.

"We do not dream of achieving it overnight," he said, adding that Zimbabwe should evolve its own concept of co-operatives which people could understand.

The minister appealed to people to make a careful study of the three basic models on which the Intensive Resettlement Programme is being implemented.

● Model A involves an intensive village settlement programme with individual arable allocations and communal grazing. Settlers are allocated a residential plot of about 0,2 ha within a village, where amenities such as boreholes and vegetable garden plots may be provided.

Each settler gets about 5 ha of arable land and grazing for four to 10 livestock units depending on the region's carrying capacity.

● Model B is an intensive settlement scheme with communal living and co-operative farming. Activities are based on the community with co-operative structures and management.

Farmers opting for a co-operative have to identify with each other, organise themselves and present their structure to the Lands Ministry to ensure that the basics of the organisation's structure and management are fulfilled.

They must also present a constitution and register with the Registrar of Co-operatives to be allocated a farm by Government.

Dr Sekeramayi stressed that to avoid a situation where everybody went around bargaining for farms, a Government evaluator would do that job.

● Model C is an intensive settlement with a centralised estate farm to which farmers will contribute labour.

Arable land and livestock are individually owned outside the central core and grazing is communal.

The central estate will have its own resources of arable land, grazing and livestock.

In all the models settlers are given three permits to enable them to reside, cultivate crops and pasture livestock.

Only the Minister of Lands can revoke the permits on the grounds of non-residence and misuse or under-utilisation of resources.

Settlers are urged to set up their own committees and each project provides a settlement officer who will act as the focal point of local administration.

The officer is employed by the Lands Ministry to help settlers meet their goals and mould their local government structure. Specialists in extension, co-operative and veterinary services would be provided, as would teachers and medical staff to go with schools and clinics, he said.

Growing large quantities of agricultural produce would attract the establishment of depots.

HEALTH PACT WITH MOZAMBIQUE SIGNED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 11

[Text]

ZIMBABWE and Mozambique yesterday formally signed an agreement ensuring wide co-operation in many fields of health care.

The pact was sealed when the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, and his Mozambican counterpart, Dr Pascual Mocumbi, signed a statement of accord at Dr Ushewokunze's office, marking the end of a three-day inter-ministerial workshop.

Terms of the agreement include:

- Co-operation in training;
- The restructuring of the pharmaceutical sector;
- Organisation of national health services
- And medical vigilance concerning malaria, sleeping sickness and other widespread diseases.

Other areas of co-operation include control of occupational diseases, and ensuring medical care for border populations, regardless of their nationality.

The ministers also agreed on the exchange of scientific publications and the methods whereby health data would be collected and analysed.

There would also be exchanges of undergraduate and postgraduate medical students, health workers and tutors.

It was also agreed that the next health workshop between the two countries would be held in Mozambique next year.

After the signing of the accord, Dr Mocumbi said drug co-operation would be centred around quality control, and would be kept at an inter-enterprise level.

Asked if Mozambique would be importing Zimbabwean drugs, Dr Mocumbi said: "We publish international tenders for our drug imports. If Zimbabwe wants to sell, it must submit a tender."

HIGH AFTER-SCHOOL UNEMPLOYMENT REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

MORE than 80 000 school-leavers are being refused jobs in Zimbabwe cities every year, the national education seminar at the University of Zimbabwe heard yesterday.

Delegates at the international gathering were told that figures on school enrolment in Zimbabwe indicated that vast numbers of young people were entering the labour market each year.

Dr Herbert Murerwa secretary for the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development, said that of all children enrolled in Grade I, 60,94 percent completed Grade 7; 14,51 percent enter Form I; 9,27 percent completed four years of secondary schooling and only 1,07 percent finished the secondary school cycle.

Rapid expansion of formal schooling gave birth to "educated unemployment" in other African countries because their economies did not expand fast enough to absorb school leavers, he said.

"Education must prepare our young people for the world of work. With appropriate skills and knowledge young people could organise self-employment programmes for themselves in the informal sector.

"Policy-makers in Zimbabwe must now begin to plan for the potential implications of this expansion in school enrolment."

A Ministry of Education and Culture official, Mr Taka Mudariki, told delegates about the need for a mass literacy campaign.

He said the Government had the enormous task of waging the battle against "illiteracy, low levels of production and ignorance among the millions of peasants and workers in Zimbabwe".

"Literacy programmes have to be designed to undo the effects of decades of physical and mental exploitation of peasants and workers.

"A very conservative estimate by the Zimbabwe Adult Literacy Organisation is that more than 1,9 million adults are illiterate," Mr Mudariki said.

STRIKE AT MEIKLES HOTEL ENDS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

MORE than 500 workers at Salisbury's Meikles hotel went on strike yesterday demanding the dismissal of the general manager, Mr Kai Hansen.

The strikers were persuaded to resume work by the combined efforts of the workers' committee, Ministry of Labour officials, and Mr Albert Mugabe, secretary-general of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions who negotiated with the hotel management for more than three hours.

The strike started at midday, worker representatives said, after Mr Hansen allegedly dismissed an employee who had been arguing in the hotel with his (the worker's) wife.

The sacked worker complained to the workers' committee, who appealed to Mr Hansen to reinstate the man. Mr Hansen is said to have refused, and workers then stormed into the hotel's basement saying they would not work until Mr Hansen had been dismissed and their colleague reinstated.

After three rounds of talks the workers secured the reinstatement of the dismissed man. A report-back meeting between the staff and their representatives will be held today.

The workers' demand that Mr Hansen be dismissed was still under negotiation, Mr Mugabe told the Herald yesterday.

"He is an important man, with a high position, he cannot just be dismissed."

The hotel had also provided a $1 000 bonus to be distributed equally among the 500 workers, Mr Mugabe said.

Meikles staff said yesterday that the hotel was almost fully booked. Service was discontinued after the strike had begun at midday, and non-striking chefs were required to load foodstuffs before they prepared light meals for the evening.

Meikles management declined to give a statement.

FUEL CUTS THREATEN COFFEE CROP

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

COFFEE production in Chipinga is being disrupted because of the diesel shortage, the president of the Gaza Chamber of Commerce, Mr Ernest Odendaal, said yesterday.

He said the situation was critical and that more than $7 million of coffee — a prime foreign exchange commodity — was in jeopardy.

Last night the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni, ruled out fuel rationing. The situation was not critical, he said.

The Grain Marketing Board estimates that coffee production in the area could yield 4 482 tonnes with top grade selling at $1 600 a tonne.

"Unfortunately the coffee crops have been late and now coincide with the acute diesel shortages," Mr Odendaal said.

"Coffee is a big foreign currency commodity, especially because of good prices this year since Brazilian coffee has gone for a loop in heavy frost which cut harvest estimates by 45 percent."

There was also a serious petrol shortage in the area. Buses had been halted for more than three days, disrupting trade in Chipinga.

The only four petrol outlets in the town were fast running out.

"We have had situations where only one service station had petrol. But it has generally been on and off because petrol tankers need diesel to get here."

Interviewed on ZBC, Dr Makoni said the country's fuel and diesel reserves were at a very low level but the situation did not warrant rationing.

The shortage of fuel was the result of transport problems, for which he blamed South Africa. The Government was convinced that the Pretoria regime was trying to use its economic muscle to force Zimbabwe to change its stand over Namibia and its attitude to the policy of apartheid.

Ziana reports that several filling stations in Salisbury yesterday began a self-imposed petrol rationing scheme.

Limiting

No official directive has been issued, but some garages are limiting motorists to 10 or at most 20 litres a customer.

In a statement yesterday the national secretary of the Motor Trade Association, Mr Tony Cox, said reports of diesel and petrol shortages had been received.

Last week thousands of motorists bought massive quantities of petrol as a hedge against a feared reintroduction of petrol rationing.

"The Motor Trade Association has discussed this with Government and have been assured that any shortages of petrol that exist are of a temporary and isolated nature resulting from transportation problems.

"The availability of diesel fuel will continue at its present level until additional measures to restore normal holdings arranged by Government become effective.

"Similarly, while there is no restriction on the sale of petrol, and it is not intended to introduce rationing, dealers have been asked not to create an unusual demand in petrol by filling large containers," he said.

The measure was designed to assist the Government in restoring normal stock levels as soon as possible.

PM REPORTS BUILDING OF MORE GRAIN DEPOTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] The Government is to build several grain depots near the people throughout the country to ensure that all maize is bought and collected before the rains, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has said.

He said he could not understand why some planners failed to finish Government projects in time. He told the large gatherings here that a lot of money allocated to the Ministry of Education last year had not been used because the planners had failed to complete projects.

"These people are saboteurs, who want to cause chaos in the country," he said.

They wasted a lot of time touching here and there as if they were working on a plan such as the Monomatapa Hotel. Their aim was to make people feel the Government was neglecting them.

He said the only solution was to have more black planners and builders to handle Government projects. "We cannot rely on people we fought to be honest with us."

Mr Mugabe told cheering crowds at Sadza and Nharira that it was the wish of the Government to buy all maize produced this year. "If it gets rotten in our hands that will not be your problem. We do not want the money to get rotten in your hands."

'Produce More'

He urged the people to produce more crops during the coming season to earn the country foreign exchange to buy machinery, vehicles, and other goods which were not made locally.

"Our dollar cannot buy anything from outside. We have to use the American dollar or the British pound."

It was the wish of the Government to build more schools, hospitals, roads and provide other services, which were necessary to uplift life in the rural areas.

The $1 billion raised from ZIMCORD would be used mostly for rural development. Some would be used to establish factories so that people could export finished products.

Mr Mugabe urged peasant farmers to start producing crops such as cotton, tobacco and wheat so they could earn foreign exchange.

To achieve the Government's goals there was need for unity in the nation. With unity they would be able to defeat the enemy as they had during the liberation war.

COOPERATION AGREEMENT WITH DUTCH SIGNED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

ZIMBABWE and The Netherlands yesterday signed a co-operation agreement for the allocation of over $8 million in aid pledged at Zimcord for rural development, reconstruction and resettlement.

A delegation from The Netherlands has been in the country since August 28 to discuss financial and technical co-operation between the two nations.

Mr Thomas Mswaka, secretary to the Ministry of Economic Planning and Development, said he was pleased to sign the agreement as Holland had offered its strong support to Zimbabwe before and after independence.

He said The Netherlands was assisting in the improvement of the Mozambique ports. "It is a very important aspect of our transport system and a very important aspect of our development."

Mr Mswaka signed the agreement on behalf of Zimbabwe and Dr Roel Harkema, head of the Southern Africa Division (development co - operation), represented the Dutch Government.

Dr Harkema said the purpose of his team's visit was to make a follow-up on the visit of their Prime Minister and to translate into practice the promises and commitments made during Zimcord.

"When I look at the list of projects which will be financed with our aid, I think we may congratulate ourselves at these projects and programmes in the fields of rural development, reconstruction and resettlement.

"With all the projects we are funding we think we are right in the top priority of the Zimbabwe Government. I hope that many people in Zimbabwe will quickly benefit from what we have been doing during the last few days, especially those in the rural areas, who need our help very much," he said.

The aid agreement consists of a grant of about $4,3 million and a soft loan of about $4,5 million. The loan carries an interest of 2½ percent and is payable over a period of 30 years with a grace period of eight years.

The grant will be used for the reconstruction of schools, which have been allocated about $3,7 million; the funding of the Dombodema Intensive Resettlement scheme in the Plumtree area, and another sum for contigencies.

ELECTRIFICATION OF RAIL LINK OFF TO HUMBLE START

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 11

[Text]

GWELO.

ALTHOUGH temperatures were near freezing point it was a heart-warming occasion for men of the National Railways of Zimbabwe in the bush, near Gado, Que Que, yesterday.

The start of construction for the electrification of the Salisbury to Gwelo line marked the realisation of more than two decades of railway effort and planning.

Ever since the late Fifties the electrification of the railways has, in the words of the chief electrical engineer Mr W. Gilman "absorbed, inspired, frustrated and involved a very large number of railwaymen".

The contract, which is worth $21 million went to B. B. Zimbabwe (Pvt.) Ltd, a subsidiary of Balfour Beatty Ltd of Britain. They have completed their initial design programme and started work on Wednesday on installing foundations for the steel masts which will support the overhead equipment.

During this programme, which is due to be completed in two years, about 8 100 foundations will be installed at a rate of about 650 a month.

By the end of the overall contract B. B. Zimbabwe, whose parent company has carried out railway electrification projects throughout the world, will have completed one of the most ambitious programmes yet undertaken. They will have also employed a peak labour force of 300 trained by a small nucleus of British staff.

The contract involves 457 single track kilometres to be electrified. More than half of the materials are being supplied from within Zimbabwe and this will involve 35 local companies.

The project involves the line between Dabuka at Gwelo and Salisbury. Why then have they started the construction at a remote spot some 60 km from Gwelo? Mr A. D. Hevey, the contract engineer, explained

"Dabuka is the priority end of the line but if we started there — with a complex yard with multitracks and different sizes of structure to be handled — we would be throwing ourselves right into a very complicated area."

"We are training people and it is best to start in a straightforward area, an open route with a single track where we can build up our skills to be better able to deal with the more complicated areas later.

"Also, we want our design engineers to get as far ahead of the construction team as possible so that they have a clear run."

The construction team will work back to Dabuka and when that is done will go back to Gado and then on to Redcliff and Que Que and eventually Salisbury.

Mr Gilman, who, amid cheers pulled the handle to start the pouring of concrete that formed the first foundation, said that electrification was more than a logical development of the railways.

"It is a significant, vital and fundamental change of direction in the course of any railway," he said. "It represents the biggest single change that the railways have ever undertaken."

He believed that electrification was essential if the transport systems here and in neighbouring countries and on the subcontinent as a whole were to be realised properly, efficiently and effectively.

BRIEFS

DUAL HOME OWNERSHIP--Bulawayo--People who owned homes in both urban and rural areas were criticised yesterday by the Minister without Portfolio, Dr Joshua Nkomo. Dr Nkomo, who was speaking in Pumula, said the unplanned settlement in the rural areas as well as in the newly acquired farms poses a danger to the land and made it difficult for the Government to provide efficient services to the people. "Government is trying to discourage dual home ownership. Unless people realise the danger of the way we settle we will find it difficult to solve problems of settlement," the minister said. He said houses were built in an unplanned manner, leading to a few people occupying large expanses of land. "You find scattered huts with the intervening land between them lying unutilised." The minister said it was necessary to provide "stimuli which will draw people away from the urban centres." He noted that Salisbury and Bulawayo were growing rapidly. It was necessary to stem the tide of migration in order to keep the cities of a manageable size. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 3]

BEEF QUOTA--Beef rationing is expected to ease slightly during the next two months, and allocations for the week starting next Monday will be increased by 10 percent. Announcing this yesterday, the general manager of the Cold Storage Commission, Mr Don Collen, said: "While allocations of beef from the CSC to butchers will continue at their present level of 70 percent of the butchers' quotas during September and October, it should be possible to increase these allocations for short periods at a time." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 1]

NGANGAS' 'MIRACLE CONTEST'--A healing competition involving ngangas and spirit mediums from six southern African countries will be held in Gwanzura stadium, Highfield, Salisbury, tomorrow. The contest will be among "genuine ngangas" from Zimbabwe, Botswana, Malawi, Zambia, Mozambique and Angola. They will perform their feats, free of charge, from 8 am to 5 pm. The Zimbabwe True Spirit Mediums' and Ngangas' Association of Central Africa, which is organising the competition, expects the Minister of Education, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, and other government leaders to attend. The association president, Dr Green Ntopa, urged people to attend "to witness miracles performed by genuine ngangas." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 1]

MUGABE APPEAL--Belingwe--The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday called for an end to strikes because they were harming the country. He said he saw no reason why people should strike when they could report their grievances. The Prime Minister told a huge rally at Murengwa district council in Belingwe that the Government would be reviewing the wages of workers in order to raise them. He warned employers who were not paying the minimum wage that this would not be tolerated. He warned civil servants that those who refused to work in the rural areas would have no jobs. He urged them to co-operate with the people when implementing Government's projects. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 3]

YOUTH COUNCIL--An interim National Youth Council was announced by the Minister of Youth Sport and Recreation, Mr Ernest Kadungure, last week. The council consists of 12 members to allow as wide representation as possible. It will be headed by Mr Tichaona Jokonya of the Ministry of Youth Sport and Recreation. The other members are: Mr E.T. Mudariki, Community Development and Women's Affairs; Dr F. Madzonge, Manpower Planning and Development; Mr J.M. Chamboko, Labour and Social Services; Miss Sheila Macheri, Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development; Mrs E.M. Sawyer, Voluntary Youth Organisation; Mr H. Moyana, higher learning institution at Seke Training Centre; Brother Fidelis and Dr Chitsike from a church organisation; Mr J. Mupfumira, Mr M. Chidzonga and Mr T. Todzo, Youth, Sport and Recreation. The council will remain interim until ratified by an Act of Parliament. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Sep 81 p 11]

YUGOSLAV CREDIT AGREEMENT--Zimbabwe and the Bank of Yugoslavia today signed a credit agreement under which Zimbabwe will receive Yugoslav goods worth $50 million. Speaking at the signing ceremony this morning, the minister of finance, Comrade Nkala, said he hoped the signing of the agreement between Zimbabwe and the bank would be the beginning of a long and worthwhile association which will lead to the consolidation of the solidarity between Zimbabwe and Yugoslavia. AFRICAN LEAST DEVELOPED COUNTRIES ASK FOR AID

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 4 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] Paris, 3 Sep--Tanzania, Chad, Benin and Ethiopia have all made please before the United Nations conference on the world's least developed countries (LDC's) for increased aid for themselves and their 27 fellow LDC's.

The economic situation in the LDC's is bleak, and the situation is worsening as purchasing power declines, said K.A. Malima, Tanzania's minister of planning and economic affairs.

In 1973, five tons of tea bought one tractor, Mr. Malima said. Today, it takes 17 tons of tea to buy the same tractor.

This year, Tanzania predicts that it will spend 60 per cent of its export earnings on drastically reduced oil requirements, he said.

But for Tanzania the biggest task was increasing food production. A similar point of view was put forward by other African LDC countries. Of the 31 poorest countries in the world, 21 are in Africa, and they account for about half the 280 million people who live on average incomes of only 183 dollars a year.

Aboubacar Baba Moussa, Benin's minister of planning, statistics and economic analysis, complained about a worsening balance-of-payments situation in his country.

"To raise the material and cultural standard of living of our people, there must be a fair redistribution of the benefits of economic growth in the world," Mr. Moussa said.

Improved Quality and Quantity

Mr. Moussa said that Benin needed 4,000 million dollars, of which 3,000 million was being sought from outside the country, and he called for aid donors to provide the assistance on the most beneficial terms possible.

Hailu Yimenu, a member of Ethiopia's Central Planning Supreme Council, said that previous United Nations Development targets had not been achieved and that international events could not be allowed to detract from the plight of the LDC's.

The world's poorest nations were facing substnatial food deficits, soaring inflation, problems with the servicing of debts and energy-related difficulties, which had to be dealt with by the international community, Mr. Yimenu said.

He also called for an improvement in the quality and quantity of aid, which he said should be assured, predictable and free from discrimination based on non-economic considerations.

Chadian Planning and Reconstruction Minister Tahir Souleyman estimated that his country needed 100,000 million CFA francs (333 million dollars) in aid over the next three years to deal with Chad's pressing problems, including an illiteracy rate of 80 percent. (AFP)

ZIMBABWE, ZAMBIA, BOTSWANA DISCUSS RAIL PROBLEMS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 6 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] WIDE-RANGING talks about mutual rail transport problems are taking place between Zimbabwe, Zambia and Botswana.

The Minister of Transport, Mr Josiah Chinamano, announced yesterday that the talks covered action to be taken to mitigate the present shortage of locomotives and the need to recruit artisans.

A delegation led by the Botswana Minister of Works and Communications, Mr Colin Blackbeard, arrived in Zimbabwe last Wednesday and left on Friday.

The Zambian delegation, headed by Minister of Power, Transport and Communications, Mr Raja Kunda, arrived last Monday and is due to leave this week.

A second meeting between Botswana and Zimbabwe is planned for October.

● The general manager of the National Railways of Zimbabwe, Mr Nigel Lea-Cox, says the shortage of locomotives and other problems are affecting services.

Commenting on the prevalent passenger train delays, Mr Lea-Cox said: "We acknowledge that at present time-keeping is very poor. This is caused almost entirely by our problems with locomotives."

The shortage was being compounded by some ageing and unreliable locomotives in the fleet and by a limited number of artisans to repair them.

Because of this and of the fact that Zimbabwe runs a single-track system, longer delays to other services were caused if a locomotive broke down inbetween sidings.

"Until our locomotive position improves, I am afraid these delays are going to continue. But each delay is investigated," Mr Lea-Cox said.

Security staff had contained the problem of illegal shebeen operators on the Salisbury-Bulawayo passenger trains since this was brought to the attention of authorities by an article in The Sunday Mail.

"Our security staff mounted special operations with a view to apprehending illegal sellers of opaque beer and these operations, carried out in conjunction with the police, have proved successful. We will continue," he said.

The number of train derailments, he said, had decreased from 62 in the 12 months up to June 30 1980, to 41 in the year ended June 30 this year.

OVERVIEW OF FRENCH POLICY IN AFRICA

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3343, 24 Aug 81 pp 1919-1921

[Text]

FRANÇOIS MITTERRAND is freer than many French Presidents before him in that he has a comfortable majority in the National Assembly. His policy on Africa is beginning to take concrete form — he has already received leading African statesmen at the Elysée and his team of Africanists recently visited various countries; Mr. Jean-Pierre Cot, the Minister for Co-operation and Development visited Cameroon, Ghana, Senegal and Nigeria. Guy Penne, the senior adviser on African affairs at the Elysée visited Niger, Benin, Gabon, Congo, Angola, Mozambique, Zambia and Djibouti.

Mr. Cot's visits to Ghana and Nigeria may mark a move towards greater co-operation between France and the Anglophone African countries. President Limann of Ghana, in talks with Mr. Cot, said that he was pleased with the French Government's understanding of African and Third World issues. The Bui dam project — which also concerns the Ivory Coast — was discussed and Mr. Cot said that France is "determined" to help Ghana solve her economic problems. It was emphasised, however, that France will not relinquish her special ties with the Francophone countries.

It is worth pointing out that of the West African countries in Mr. Cot's portfolio with which France has a "special ties", ten (Benin, Cape Verde, CAR, Guinea Bissau, Upper Volta, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Chad and Zaire) are listed by the World Bank as having a Gross National Product (GNP) per capita of less than $300, and that four (Cameroon, Equatorial Guinea, Senegal and Togo) are listed with a GNP per capita of less than $700. The two relatively wealthy Francophone States (Gabon and Ivory Coast) are the two with which the "special ties" are strongest.

Relations with Chad have been improving steadily since the Transition Government of National Unity (GUNT) President, Goukhouni Weddeye, invited President Mitterrand to "normalise" the situation between N'Djamena and Paris. Chad's Foreign Minister, Mr. Acyl Ahmet, recently went to Paris, and a team of experts from Mr. Cot's Ministry is presently in N'Djamena studying the possibilities for rebuilding the infrastructure in the city. Following President Omar Bongo's talks with President Mitterrand in Paris, the Gabonese Head of State was present at a meeting between President Weddeye and Mr. Penne in Libreville.

French aid to Chad has previously been tied to the condition that Libyan troops leave the country. This condition now seems to have been lifted. The aid asked for would include "military advisers and instructors, the material and financial means to train the army and to regroup the dispersed forces throughout the country." The problem with this demand is that it is difficult to distinguish between "advisers" and an "army". President Weddeye has said of the French assistance: "Chad does not need another foreign force because we already have the Libyan troops". Reconstructing N'Djamena with French technical assistance is one thing; two sets of military advisers is another. It remains to be seen whether renewed French co-operation indicates a tacit acceptance of Colonel Gaddafi's troops in Chad or renewed "interference" by the French.

The French troops in Chad were withdrawn under pressure from Goukhouni Weddeye and Colonel Gadaffi at the height of the civil war, in May 1980. The French diplomatic mission was moved from N'Djamena and was kept to a minimum. This was followed by several military successes by rebel Defence Minister Mr. Hissene Habré, calls for peace from Giscard and the OAU and finally the "merger" of Chad and Libya, enforced by Libyan troops and planes. Giscard's reaction, which was described by observers as inconsistent, was to strengthen the French military presence in neighbouring CAR; those troops are still mainly concentrated in the town of Bouar, close to the border with Chad.

The French Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. Claude Cheysson, is on record as having said (France) "will not intervene alone again" . . . (French involvement in Chad) "would have been completely different had it been in conjunction with an inter-African force, however small this latter was". So perhaps this is to be the justification for intervention under Mitterrand; intervention is permitted as long as it is supported by one of the pro-French African leaders (Bongo, Houphouët Boigny . . .).

Mitterrand has said that France will "remain loyal to the arrangements that she has already established with African countries". Thus, the "Barracudas" who led the coup d'etat in the Central African Republic against "Emperor" Bokassa are to remain, albeit under the new name of "operational assistance units". The situation in the CAR highlights the French dilemma; President Dacko was put into power by Giscard and however undemocratic or repressive his actions are, intervention would lay President Mitterrand open to charges of Giscardian hegemony. The CAR opposition has been actively campaigning against President Dacko (although Mr. Idi Lala, whose party claimed responsibility for the recent bombing, was prevented by the French authorities from holding a press conference), but Mr. Cot has said that there is no question of the French ousting President Dacko.

Thus far then, three months after President Mitterrand took over the keys and the nuclear secrets of the Elysée Palace, there has been nothing particularly "Socialist" about his African policy. The prudence shown in Chad and the CAR, the supply of arms to Cameroon following the border dispute with Nigeria and the continued delivery of arms to Libya are, if not "Giscardian", hardly a radical departure from Giscard's policies. Changing the name of the Ministry for Co-operation to the Ministry for Co-operation and Development looks at the moment like a rather pointless gesture.

In a commentary on the direction of French Africa Policy since President Mitterrand, Radio Nigeria said recently: "During his last campaign for the Elysée Palace, French President François Mitterrand gave the developing world a flurry of hope. Among other things the Socialist, as the presidential candidate, promised to increase French economic aid to the Third World. He also pledged to impress on his colleagues in the industrial West the need for a more equitable distribution of the world's wealth, which at the moment is unjustifiably concentrated in the hand of a few industrial nations."

In fact, at his inauguration last April, President Mitterrand rightly observed that there could be no real international community as long as two thirds of the planet must sacrifice their labour and goods against hunger and humiliation. On Africa, Mr. Mitterrand stated his intention to relax French military presence on the continent. He was quoted as saying that he would favour the imposition of sanctions against apartheid South Africa. Judging by his own personal efforts and the calibre of his Cabinet, most leaders of the Third World, especially Africa, felt that for once there reigns in Paris a leader who could champion the world's oppressed peoples.

Recent events have, however, given people cause for concern at the direction in which French policy in Africa is taken. For instance, reports have confirmed that President Mitterrand has given approval for the delivery of a 900m. watts nuclear reactor to South Africa. Although one realises that the reactor programme is one of the agreements inherited from his predecessor, the decision to execute the project is certainly a departure from the political and ideological path which the socialist President pledged to uphold. In fact, there are many people who cannot explain this action in any way other than that French economic interests was the motive behind the decision. But, in fact, we could say here that African leaders cannot but see continued mutual co-operation with the racist regime as a direct threat to the security of the continent.

One other factor which has attracted African concern is France's refusal to withdraw her troops currently stationed in some parts of Africa. The official argument is that the troops are there to maintain internal security and protect French citizens abroad. One would ask, however, whether it is only in Africa that French citizens reside outside their homeland.

The only question people have often asked is whether or not military cohesion can ever bring the desired peace and stability. In fact, the whole issue of sovereignty always becomes hypocritical when the majority of many independent states are not allowed the means to shape the destiny of their countries by choosing their leaders through popular and democratic processes. Africa's problems are more related to the raising of the standard of living of the people, and this is why France has to make some impact by way of co-operation with our African countries for the execution of viable economic projects.

By stationing troops in Africa while at the same time executing nuclear projects with the racists in South Africa amounts to double standards. But all said and done, it may be premature to write an account of Franco-African relations of Mitterrand's era. This is because three months into a seven-year term of office can certainly not present a complete picture. One can only hope at this point that François Mitterrand will take another look at his previous pronouncements and channel the course of his country's foreign policy to reflect these stated objectives."

FRANCE MAPS OUT COMPREHENSIVE AFRICAN POLICY

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 1 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Marie Joannidis and Bertrand Rosenthal]

[Text] Paris, 21 Aug--The first set of formal visits to Africa in the past month by France's senior new foreign affairs officials illustrates the Socialist government's determination both to take in the continent as a whole and to act rapidly to contribute to settlements of its acute problems.

The first aspect was highlighted by Co-operation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot when he got back from trips to Cameroun, Ghana and Senegal in mid-August. "Africa must be taken as a unit," he affirmed.

He added that it was his intention, on each of his visits to various French-speaking countries, to include an Anglo-phone or Portuguese-speaking country on the itinerary.

Accordingly, his second trip just over a week ago was to Nigeria, and an East African tour has already been scheduled for early next year which was take Mr. Cot to Kenya, current chairman of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU).

In tandem with a new development strategy, France wanted to provide a stimulus to the Euro-African ensemble, the Minister explained.

Also on safari this month was President Francois Mitterrand's Afro-Malagasy affairs adviser Guy Penne, who went to Niger, Benin, Gabon, Congo, Angola, Mozambique, Zambia and Djibouti. With him on some stops was the president's international affairs expert, Regis Debray.

Trouble Spots

Regarding the second stand of the policy, concerning the continent's trouble spots, Namibia was one of the main topics in the talks with African leaders.

"The Namibian business is utterly crucial," Mr. Cot said. He warned that it would be "tragic" if there were a collapse of the efforts to get an independence settlement being undertaken by the Western 'contact group' (the United States, Britain, France, West Germany and Canada).

In this connection, informed sources here said France wished to play the part of Africa's spokesman in the contact group. The sources said that the French government would no longer use its veto in the U.N. Security Council if sanctions were sought against South Africa over the Namibian issue.

Mr. Cot said there was no more official French investment in the territory, and that the government was "discouraging" private investment there.

That approach was an example of concern for elementary respect of human rights, he commented. The government might rethink its relations with any country which failed to respect certain limits in that field, Mr. Cot added.

Chad was another problem areas where France was unsparing in its diplomatic efforts to expedite the withdrawal of Libyan troops and the formation of an inter-African peacekeeping force, as stipulated by the OAU summit in June.

The minister said France was unconditionally ready to take part in the country's reconstruction--though he ruled out any military co-operation--and "if Chad recovers its independence," he said, political conditions could then be established to permit a resumption of diplomatic ties.

In the Central African Republic, however, France would keep its military contingant there, given that it had not been asked to withdraw it.

President David Dacko had done the right thing in lifting the state of siege declared after a cinema bomb attack in Bangui in mid-July, and in authorising the main opposition parties to operate once more after suspending them at the same time, Mr. Cot remarked.

With regard to economic matters, France planned to be very active, as one of the world's main industrialised countries, at the UNESCO-sponsored conference for Least Developed Countries (LDC's) opening here for two weeks this Tuesday, Mr. Cot promised.

It was going to be a difficult task finding measures adaopted to the situation of the LDC's. At the same time, there should be no going back on the global negotiations being conducted in the North-South context.

Paris will also be the venue at the end of October or early November for the latest Franco-African summit, affording President Mitterrand the opportunity of initial contacts with a certain number of African heads of state, the Co-operation Minister noted.

Coming after the North-South relations summit scheduled for Cancun, Mexico, it is expected to be an occasion for talks extending beyond just a review of political and economic matters. (AFP)

INTERNATIONAL ALL-AFRICA HEALTH EDUCATION CONFERENCE OPENS

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 4 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] Lagos, 2 Sep--An International all-Africa conference on Health Education sponsored by the World Health Organisation (WHO), which will last five days and be attended by about 500 delegates from 28 African countries, four Western countries and one South-East Asian country, opened here Tuesday.

Speaking at the opening ceremony on behalf of the Nigerian Minister of Health Daniel Ugwu, Minister of Science and Technology Sylvester Ugoh said that primary health care demanded a "multisectoral" approach, including factors such as adequate drinking water, basic sanitation, better nutrition, immunisation against major diseases and health literacy.

WHO African regional director Comlan Quenum of Benin stressed the need for African countries to establish a Health Education Council to define policies and obtain support for the implementation of regional and global strategies for primary health education.

Dr. Quenum also suggested that African countries should give priority to the formulation of strategies on health education which should take cognisance of the traditions, customs and way of life of the people.

The WHO regional director said that for such a strategy to be meaningful it must take into consideration the traditional methods of health care.

Abdel Razik, an Assistant Executive Secretary of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU), said the OAU was currently undertaking joint projects in traditional medicine in various parts of Africa.

Mr. Razik said that 85 per cent of the African population used traditional medicine for their health care, adding, "this inherited wealth of knowledge should be taught to new generations."

Mr. Razik called for the introduction of courses in traditional medicine at universities and other institutions of higher learning in the continent. (AFP).

ECOWAS DELEGATION TOURS SOUTHEAST ASIAN COUNTRIES

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3343, 24 Aug 81 pp 1923-1924

[Article by Gudrun Dalibor: "ECOWAS Goes East"]

[Text]

A DELEGATION from the Economic Community of West African States has just returned from a first official visit to countries belonging to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN). The five delegates who met officials in Indonesia, Singapore, Thailand and the Philippines were accompanied by representatives of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. UNCTAD had helped this study tour as part of its programme to promote more technical co-operation among developing countries.

The aim of the visit has been to study ASEAN as a grouping of Third World countries: "we are the only two Third World economic groupings that are functioning well," claimed Dr. Akapo, one of the delegates from Nigeria. "The results of the discussions are very encouraging. They are much better than could have ever been expected. We have now realised that there are various possibilities of co-operation."

At the same time, he emphasised that contacts between the two economic communities were only in their initial stages and that co-operation in certain areas would have to be seen as a longer-term development. It was vital that the present contacts should be developed further at higher political levels.

The mission identified three areas of possible co-operation amongst the two economic blocs. Firstly, as both have similar commodities they are looking to the possibility of a common position on commodity policies. The most pressing issue for both is that of commodity pricing. Secondly, there are possibilities for exports of finished industrial products between the two regions. And thirdly, there could be an exchange of technical know-how. Singapore, for example, is far ahead in technology and banking.

Dr. Akapo is also very keen on the idea of bringing together Filipino and Indonesian technical know-how in construction, Singaporean expertise in hotel management and Arab finance to develop hotel management and tourism in West Africa.

Dr. Akapo emphasises that ASEAN is the area to watch for the future. But there has to be a combination of the natural resources of some of the countries and the technical know-how of others. "A little bit more co-operation and they will be flying," he says.

The ASEAN region is exceptionally rich in natural resources. It is the principal world supplier of rubber (80 per cent), tropical hardwoods (75 per cent), tin (68 per cent), palm oil (60 per cent) and coconut (50 per cent), as well as being a significant producer of oil, copper, sugar, coffee, tobacco and rice. All the governments in the region regard rapid industrialisation as a key to the growth of exports, employment and income. All are heavily promoting the inflow of foreign investment. And ASEAN has now become the fastest growing area in the world.

But ASEAN is still a long way from becoming a Common Market. In this respect ECOWAS "is much more advanced," says Dr. Akapo. "By 1984, for example, we should have a common tariff. The ASEAN countries are not even thinking about a customs union," he says. One of the biggest problems the ASEAN countries are facing now is competition. Competition against each other will be detrimental to all their economies. Dr. Akapo is convinced that they therefore have no choice but to become an economic community.

The Nigerian Government, in particular, is now looking beyond Africa in its search for new economic partners. At present, a Nigerian trade mission is visiting Korea, Taiwan, Japan, Hong Kong, Thailand and the Philippines to find out what can be done in terms of economic co-operation. This month a Nigerian parliamentary delegation is also visiting Indonesia. Since the establishment of Nigerian Embassy in the Philippines in December last year, relations between those two countries have become better and more co-operation is likely. "It makes me happy that people are waking up," says Dr. Akapo.

AFRICAN PRODUCERS SEEK COFFEE SALES SUPPORT

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 28 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] Brasilia, 27 Aug--Ivory Coast appealed here today to non-African coffee producers to make a sacrifice on behalf of African growers to enable them to sell more of their commodity on the world market.

"We (the Africans) have a lot of coffee and we do not manage to sell it because of quotas," explained Denis Bra Kanon, Ivory Coast Agriculture Minister and President of the Intra-African Coffee Organization (ICO).

He said he had come to Brazil and would then go to Colombia to make those two countries aware of "the problems of the African producers, who are smallholders (with two to 100 hectares or about five to 250 acres)". "These small producers are not in the coffee industry or in transport and they get all their income from the raw material, which is not the case here", he said, stating that the frosts in Brazilian plantations had not had "an enormous effect."

"They ought to have a positive effect on prices, but prices are dominated by speculators. Now that the United States has spoken about the frosts, I hope that Brazil's statements will be believed," he added.

The ICO groups are Angola, Benin, Cameroun, Congo, Ivory Coast, the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, Liberia, Malagasy, Malawi, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda, Zaire and Zimbabwe.

Negotiations between producers and consumer countries are to begin in London next month. (AFP)

MOST S. AFRICAN ARMS IN ANGOLA REPORTEDLY MET

Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti]

[Text] The number of Soviet advisors and military instructors stationed in Angola being generally estimated at 2,000 men, it is not inconceivable that some of them were captured during such an important and minutely planned operation as the South African Army prepared.

The support of SWAPO by the USSR is common knowledge. Already, last year, two Soviet "civilian" pilots had fallen into the hands of UNITA while they were flying a resupply mission in the center or the southeastern area of Angola.

It is possible that the Soviets were entrusted with radar coverage in southern Angola. A reliable source informs that the South African operation has already succeeded in putting out of commission the Angolan control system of the air space in the province of Cunene bordering on Namibia, where destruction reportedly is considerable.

If the South Africans--because of the vigorous international reaction--gave up their ultimate objective, which was probably to attack the region of Lubango 300 kms north of Namibia where Cuban forces are stationed, they nevertheless succeeded in creating a veritable no man's land on the Angolan side of the Namibian border. These results should both facilitate the movements of local South African agents and reinforce the rear bases of UNITA, while at the same time complicating SWAPO guerrilla operations in Namibia.

At the international level, if the South Africans succeed in proving the presence of Soviet military men in southern Angola, the United States will use this as an argument to justify its veto on Monday at the UN Security Council against the resolution condemning the South African attack. Washington will thus find still another reason for maintaining the dialgoue with Pretoria in order to counter "Soviet interventionism" in Southern Africa. Finally, Moscow would be placed in a delicate situation, which the lack of a reaction on its part seems already to denote.

MULTIPARTY POLITICS 'LUXURY'--Nairobi, 2 Sep--Kenya cannot afford the "luxury" of having two or more political parties, the ruling Kenya African National Union (KANU) Party National Treasurer Justus Ole Tipis said last night. He told a reception hosted by the KANU branch in Nyeri, 75 miles (120 kms) north of here, in honour of four women leaders of Zambia's ruling United National Independence Party (UNIP), who are on a one-week tour of Kenya that two or more political parties would invite foreign ideologies into the country, which would confuse the masses. Mr. Tipis said that although the formation of another political party was not prohibited by the Kenyan constitution, Kenyans found they had "no need" of it. Kenya has remained a de facto one-party state since 1969 when the Opposition Kenya People's Union (KPU) party was proscribed by the late President Jomo Kenyatta and its entire leadership detained. JOINT PATROLS WITH SOMALIS--Nairobi, 27 Aug--Kenyan District Commissioner for Mandera J.R.O. Ondieki and his counterpart Lieutenant Odaway Yusuf Farah from Somalia's Balet-Hawa district have agreed to bring to an end any kind of provocation that might strain relations between the two border districts, the official KENYA NEWS AGENCY (KNA) has reported. The agreement was reached following a neighbourly round-table meeting held on the Kenyan side of the border yesterday which resolved to have regular joint patrols on both sides of the border so as to get rid of shiftas (armed ethnic Somalis). Civilians, especially civil servants, would be allowed to go shopping across the common border without being molested either by Kenyan or Somali authorities, KNA said. The meeting was attended by the commander of the Kenyan Army camp in the district, Major P. K. Kotut and the Somali counterpart Lt. Col. Sukri Hassan, both of whom expressed their wish for the intensification of joint patrols in a bid "to finish once and for all the shifta bandits who were a shame to both governments." Relations between the two countries have often been strained due to activities in Kenya's Somali-populated North-Eastern Province by the shiftas, who fought a bloody secessionist war with Kenyan troops between 1963 and 1967. However, there has been of late a marked improvement in the two countries' relations following last July's meeting between Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi and Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre after the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) heads of state summit in the Kenyan capital. IMPOUNDMENT OF GOODS--Nairobi, 29 Aug--Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi has ordered that all goods destined for Zaire, Rwanda, Burundi and Uganda currently being off-loaded at the Kenyan Indian ocean port of Mombasa should be impounded until proper identification and clearance has been obtained from the authorities of those countries. Speaking at the official opening of the Mombasa agricultural trade fair yesterday, Mr. Moi directed the provincial administration, customs officials and police to crack down on apparent importations of taxable textiles into the country under the pretext that such goods were destined for Zaire, Rwanda, Burundi and Uganda. "I want to see that all papers and importation documents relating to such goods have been properly checked, even if it means that I have to talk to the leaders of those countries before the goods are released," President Moi warned. He said the government has been losing millions of shillings through this "racketeering" and ordered immediate action to be taken to save the country from a drain which, he said, involved Kenyans as well as people from other countries with resulting flooding of upcountry markets with illegal imports. MONJA JAONA RETURNS TO NATIONAL FRONT

Party Leader Named to CSR

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 8 Aug 81 pp 1,2

[Excerpts] Yesterday the news was made official: Monja Jaona, the national president of the MONIMA [National Movement for the Independence of Madagascar] Ka Miviombio party, has been named to the Supreme Rrevolutionary Council [CSR], following his return to the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution [FNDR], which was announced Tuesday, 10 March 1981. We recall that Monja Jaona's party had left the FNDR in June 1977. Since then, Monja Jaona had constantly demonstrated every time that the peasants, the workers, or others had asked for his support--to such an extent that he was kept under house arrest near Ihosy, after the 28 November 1981 [sic] demonstration strike against hunger and corruption.

Once released from house arrest, Monja Jaona held, on 2-5 April, the 10th special congress of the MONIMA Ka Miviombio Party, which insisted on the preservation of national unity, of the powers that "should hold the majority," of the struggle which should be waged by all active forces against those who waver and long for the old days, against all enemies of the revolution and all those who are practicing corruption, the cattle stealing, and the black market....

National Unity Above All

National unity was the watchword on the lips of Monja Jaona. Despite differing points of view, he has struggled only for the "total independence" of Madagascar, "relying only on his own forces," as is said in President Ratsiraka's "Boky Mena."

Now that he has been named to the CSR, Monja Jaona is still the same. "I do not want a seat just so I can sit back and be quiet; if President Ratsiraka names me a member of the CSR, that does not mean that I will keep quiet when I see the suffering of the people."

The tribulations, the harassment, the incarcerations, the periods of exile from the colonial days, and even the loss of his eldest son in the 1971 conflict--none of this has been able to shake his determination and his faith in a better future; the colonialists tried everything, fomented trouble, and made all their endeavors in vain: Monja Jaona was unshakeable.

"I have never been 'lucky,'" he says, "my hair did not turn white from worrying about money."

The CSR had just welcomed Monja Jaona. In the beginning, there were 18 members. Sixteen remained after the disappearance of Mampila Jaona and Maro Raymond. Now with the arrival of Monja Jaona there are 17, strengthening President Ratsiraka's "sacred unity."

Monja Jaona Press Conference

Tanamarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 11 Aug 81 pp 1, 2

> [Text] Sincere support for Ratsiraka, but also firmness and strictness on "relieving the suffering of the people" and "correcting the ills that beset the country."

Monja Jaona has not had the opportunity to hold many press conferences. In reality, the MONIMA leader is more accustomed to questions, the answers to which he knows perfectly well, than he is to lend himself to the dispassionate exchange of questions and answers. Old Monja, in fact, puts as much fervor and conviction in answering the most ordinary of questions as he does in bringing an audience to its feet, and age does not seem to have impaired his ability in this domain. He proved it again yesterday.

In the afternoon, at Solimotel, before a full hall, which included as many friends and sympathizers as it did local and foreign journalists, one could better understand why this tribune of the people could not resist the temptation of holding what was in effect a public meeting. Too fine an opportunity for a "professional" of his temper to be able to pass up.

He spoke using simple words with disconcerting skill, and with implacable logic, but that did not prevent Monja Jaona from adding to all that the forcefulness of his hands. The clenched fist, the pointed finger, the upturned palm: he was there, above all, to show he had not changed. And we also saw yesterday something that is not at all ordinary in such a setting: the journalists, in the same spirit and in the same tone, answering the questions posed to them by...Monja Jaona!

Breach of regulations and tradition? Nothing but a good spectacle? The future will tell.... But what is certain is that Monja Jaona has remained faithful to his image. And we are cheered to see that Monja dares to say aloud what everyone else is muttering to himself. Some may be disturbed to see that his revolutionary commitment remains intact. But in the last analysis it is impossible to say why President Ratsiraka asked MONIMA to rejoin the Front, or how he ended by convincing his leader to forget the pre-condition he had set, or most important on what foundation this new understanding rests.

In the absence of any official explanation of this "return to the fold" and while still awaiting an articulation of the strategy that will be adopted to put the country back on its feet, the presence of MONIMA in the Front, and the presence of Monja Jaona on the CSR might appear like a warning: the one from the head of state to his governing team that they must take hold of themselves or risk seeing Monja Jaona drain away a new active sympathy and recover a popularity he perhaps had lost. "We are only making coffee table revolution...."

This was Monja Jaona's final answer. And he was certainly not addressing it exclusively to he who asked the question.

In any case, Monja Jaona's support for President Ratsiraka, while it may not be unshakeable, is nonetheless sincere. "We must support him," he repeated several times, "we must help the president rebuild, remake the state, and eradicate the ills which beset our country, and starting by relieving the suffering of the people."

"I did not return to the Front to squabble or to foment a coup. I am here to support President Didier Ratsiraka in the resolution of real problems for the benefit of the popular majority...."

The press corps--the foreign correspondents, as well as local and national press--was there in very large numbers yesterday in the main hall of SOLIHOTEL, where Monja Jaona, national president of MONIMA, whose slogan is "Ka Miviombio" (or righteousness, sincerity, honesty in everything one undertakes), who has recently made the eldest member of the CSR, held a press conference. Monja Jaona began by making a general statement in which he explained the reasons for his party's return to the Front and what he expects to do.

"In June 1977," he recalled, "the MONIMA party left the Front in order to demand changes in the government in the interests of the popular majority, and in order to oppose the injustice which reigned in the political, social and economic domains.

"Just now, MONIMA has returned because it has been asked to."

Leftist Forces

"The appeal by President Ratsiraka has been considered by MONIMA to signal the president's willingness to work with Malagasy leftist forces, and this is very encouraging in terms of the nation's course toward true socialism. It also shows that the principles and demands to which MONIMA has adhered up to the present were judged to be well-founded.

"The MONIMA party is not responsible for everything that has happened between 1977 and today. It should be stressed, however, that during that period, the party never stopped working to influence the government's actions, even if what it was saying received little attention.

"It is for the people and for history to judge the situation and the actions of the government during these last four years."

Defense of the People's Interests

"The basic reason why MONIMA returned to the Front is that a large portion of the people urged it to rejoin in order to be a witness for justice, the messenger of the people and the defender of their interests, to defend them.

"Thus MONIMA is not betraying the principles it has always followed, that is the defense of the interests of the oppressed majority of the people....

"The MONIMA party will retain its identity in the Front. It accepts the discipline of Front membership on condition that the interests of the people are really being defended.

Objectives

"Thus, it is clear that the MONIMA party's objectives in rejoining the Front are to bring into it a new spirit and to safeguard the people's interests in the present situation....

"In the face of this situation, the MONIMA party will above all be focused on the organization of the provisioning system, the struggle against corruption, and against against the black market, the struggle against cattle theft which has become an organized business....

"In terms of external policy, the MONIMA party will continue to insure that an all-sided and nonaligned policy is followed, and will raise its voice against any irrational commitment to any country whatsoever. Respect for national sovereignty, preservation of the nation's independence and dignity, defense of the real interests of the Malagasy people--these are the principles which must guide our external policy."

The People's Support

"MONIMA, having rejoined the Front, will do everything in its power to bring a fresh approach to the struggle of the Malagasy people and to complete national reconstruction.

"But as MONIMA does not have power, the people should not hope that its return to the Front will bring great changes, if they do not support it. And MONIMA is launching an appeal to the people to support and help it in this reconstruction.

"In any case, the MONIMA party promises that it will always stand for justice and will try to stand with the people, as it has always done up to now.

"So that the people are not misled, I reaffirm that there is only one MONIMA party and that is 'Madagasikara Otronin'ny Malagasy,' there is only one national headquarters--that is at Sanfilo-Toliara--and there is only one national president, Monja Jaona.

"Let the people and history be the judges of its actions."

After this statement, Monja Jaona, surrounded by his staff, responded to a wide range of questions from the journalists.

Exchanges With the Press

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 12 Aug 81 p 2

[Excerpts] Ralaiarijaona (Maresaka): This press conference publicly marks the return of MONIMA Ka Miviombio to the Front. However, in the last four years, another MONIMA--or rather the VS MONIMA--has been established in the Front. Do you accept that presence?

[Answer] As I told you, there is only one MONIMA, whose headquarters are at Sanfilo-Toliara, and it has only one national president. The people, and history, will be the judges of that fact. But however that may be, it is like a father whose son has left him: if the son is willing to return to the fold, the father will not reject him.

Ralaiarijaona (Mareska): Now that you have rejoined the Front, do you still uphold the motions passed on every subject by the MONIMA special congress last April?

[Answer] We uphold them, and we will even strengthen them, for MONIMA's return to the Front does not mean retreat, but on the contrary a step forward.

Ralaiarijaona (Maresaka): Again on the subject of those motions: at the conclusion of the congress, some of the press tried to publish them but in vain. Do you believe that now that MONIMA is officially represented in the Front it will be possible to bring them to the attention of the public?

[Answer] It is up to the newspapers to find out. In any case, we believe that it is a mistake to impede freedom of expression if it is neither illegal nor injurious, nor calumnious. Especially since there is a law which can be applied against the press for the publication of unfounded if not false news.

Ramananjato (Basy Vava): What is the real reason MONIMA rejoined the Front which it had rejected? Is it not the case that party supporters have some special, private interest?

[Answer] It was MONIMA which ordered its members to leave the Front to demand a shake-up, because if the situation got worse, Madagascar would be engulfed in chaos.

On 16 January 1981, the PPDM made an official and public appeal in which it said that if Monja Jaona wanted to continue to be involved in politics, he would have to rejoin the Front. "If he refuses that condition, then let him stay out of politics." I answered with a letter in which I said that my fate was predestined, that it was the Creator who, when I was still in my mother's womb, mapped out my path. And so, if He wants me to stay in politics, I will have to do so.

I also told them that I would rejoin the Front if there are concrete actions to be taken for the poor popular masses. In March, we began to discuss whether it was necessary to rejoin the Front. It was not until six months after the appeal by the president of the republic that we made our decision known.

We are not running after high office or high positions. No. Since 1935, many leaders have wanted to give me major responsibilities and even wanted to buy me. I was even offered 7 million at one time to oppose Raseta and Ravoahangy. If I had agreed, independence would not have been possible and Madagascar would be divided into two blocs.

No. If we rejoined the Front, it was in order to address the grievances of the poor popular masses. I underline again that Monja Jaona has no need of high office or duties. He has come back out of patriotism and in the name of national unity. And, too, if Malagasy people are not patriots, of what use is independence?

I came back because there are many things to do for the nation's recovery.

Andriamparivony (Tsimisorona): You have said that MONIMA could do nothing without the people's support. Does MONIMA expect when particular cases arise to have public meetings to inform the people of its policy and its program of action?

[Answer] We plan on holding one in Antananarivo this September. But before anything else, we judged it was first of all necessary to talk with the press, if only to make contact again.

And I want to reaffirm this: MONIMA supports Ratsiraka. Unfortunately, he does not have good advisers, he is betrayed by some of those in his entourage.

Valison (RTM) [Malagasy Radio and Television]: What is MONIMA's position on having a single party system in Madagascar?

[Answer] A single party is not created around a table, but out of the revolutionary struggle of a whole people.

There were also other questions, relating to armed "malasos" (dahalo) to censorship (the nemesis of the journalists)....

In connection with that last subject, Monja Jaona's response was categorical: "that well-founded articles by journalists should be published, but that the law should be invoked against them if they report rumors and other false news that could damage the nation...."

We note that before MONIMA offered refreshments to the press, RP [expansion unknown] Remi Ralibera, president of the council of the journalists' guild, thanked Monja Jaona for his candor and his promise to convey the problems of the Malagasy press to the chief of state.

MONJA JAONA'S PLAN FOR SOUTHERN DEVELOPMENT REPORTED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 6 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] "Do you have friends? Well then, find me 40 million Malagasy francs and I will see to the development of the South..."

This proposal, directed at a journalist, was of course not meant to be taken seriously. Monja Jaona, a superb politician, is also a great joker. And besides, who could be found to give him 40 million Malagasy francs just like that? For such a sizeable investment there would have to be a study, a plan.

In 1972, at its national seminar held at Toliara, MONIMA [National Movement for the Independence of Madagascar] Ka Miviombio approved a "total development plan for the southern part of Madagascar," which was presented to the then-head of state, General Ramanatsoa. Nothing ever came of it.

Monja Jaona has exhumed this plan for MADAGASCAR-MATIN, asking us to bring it to the attention of the public, in the hope, perhaps, that a generous financier will translate the ideas of the old southernist leader into realities.

No "Salvage"

Since 1972, while the data in the field may not have changed a great deal, the overall cost of the project probably needs to be re-evaluated.

The fundamental idea is "total development" by means of "big projects." At the time, as a justification for this immediate and massive need of capital, Monja Jaona pointed out that this southern part of the country "was more effected by and suffered most under the colonial period and the old regime."

The plan is also based on "labor," on "unity and the fusion of hearts and minds," for simply to know and say that the nation is poor is not enough."

Monja Jaona believes that deforestation in the South and the declining cattle herds are not the doing of the people, but in actuality the manifest intention of the foreign and Malagasy capitalists who were in the deiver's seat up to 1972, whose aim was to depopulate the region. The plan thus proposes a drastic social change, rather than a policy to "salvage the South." We are familiar with MONIMA

Ka Miviombio's ideas on this subject: redistribution of land to the peasants and the creation of cooperatives led by the educated producers.

These ambitious plans are in large part based on construction of dams, and Monja Jaona denounces the policy of well-drilling, such as it was applied by the old regime, for it is only a temporizing measure which is, he says, a manifest failure.

Dams, therefore, should be built:

--at Beampingaratra, upstream from the Mandrare river, for Androy.

--at Andriambe, at the confluence of the Menarandra and the Manakompy, for the Karimbola plateau.

--At Benenitra, on the Onilahy river, for the Mahafaly plateau.

These dams would provide irrigation for the bottom land, the big fertile areas, so as to increase agricultural production and encourage stock raising. Tunnels and canals, and even giant suction and force pumps would facilitate the distribution of the water thereby made available to areas where the villagers would congregate.

Rejection of Investments

The plan also proposes construction of a thermal electric generating plant fueled by coal from Sakoa, energy from which, distributed throughout the province, would lay the foundation for the establishment of heavy industry.

The cost in 1972 of this vast program, which we have presented in substantially abridged form, but which, when all is said and done, did not contain any concrete technical specifications, was estimated at 40 million Malagasy francs. And Monja Jaona prescribed financing "by means of loans which would not be investments," for no profits would be distributed. The loans would be long-term (20 to 30 years) and at low interest rates (for if it were high that would be another form of political condition), and they would be "nondiscriminatory, so long as there is no political alienation." In 1972, Monja Jaona also talked about nationalization of the land and wealth of foreigners, but did not call for any expropriation or a rash of seizures. He even anticipated that French aid could be used to indemnify the colonizers of the time. Finally, the leader of MONIMA Ka Miviombio does not distinguish between economic development and social progress, and calls for reforms in administration, education, and health.

Monja Jaona remains faithful to his ideas, which in many areas converge with those defined in the "Boky Mena." This plan, which is his own, cannot come to fruition unless it is implemented in its totality and exclusively by his party. The demand alone--setting aside any other technical considerations--ensured in 1972 that the then-leadership would not take the proposal seriously.

In 1981, while the dams still remain an idea, and while Sakoa's coal excites real hope, converging here with some of the major ideas in Monja Jaona's plans, it is out of the question for the South to get this boon, as the president of MONIMA Ka Miviombio would like, "in its totality and without delay".

RPL WARNS AGAINST REVOLUTIONARY 'VISIONS'

Port Louis THE NATION in French 30 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

> [Text] "The new political party formed by the Progress and Liberty Group will be known henceforth as the 'Rally for Progress and Liberty' (RPL) to fully express the wish of the leaders to broaden its foundation, to rally and unite the great social democratic fraternity." This is what Philippe Blackburn announced yesterday morning. Mervyn North Coombs, G Commarmond, B Bigaignon and Madame Laure were at his side.

Blackburn declared that he and his friends were completely satisfied with the course of the proceedings of the first public meeting held last Friday. "The audience was congenial, our message was conveyed, we did not detain unnecessarily those who had been inconvenineced by drawing on their own resources to attend the meeting in order to hear us, and a fact should be underlined that never before had so many women (more than 20 percent of the audience) been present at a political meeting," he said.

Blackburn expressed the wish that this "more civilized and functional manner of proceeding" be encouraged by all. He requested the government to make its primary and secondary schools available to those who wish to hold these political meetings.

He specified "the result would be very advantageous to the political parties themselves, would also maintain order and discipline, even if this were only interms of cost, noise, protecting the environment, the traffic problems and controlling crowds."

Revolutionary Visions

Replying to the secretary general of the MMM, Blackburn pointed out the absurdity of identifying the RPL as the "defenders of the private sector" or for a "new right."

He says that Berenger is free to think that RPL's text on the joint MMM/PSM program is "absolutely unacceptable." He affirms that the MMM secretary general has not read the pamphlet. "Fighting unemployment and describing Berenger's declaration as a gratuitous and spiteful insinuation, according to which the RPL defended the private sector without any divergent points," because Blackburn had quoted Arthur Laffer and Emile Classens in a clearly defined context.

He added, "All I had done is that I had given the Minister of Finance some econometric data from two economists (rightists or others not of great importance to me) which supported the points of view that the secretary general of the MMM, charmingly and with assurance, had guaranteed in person when he stood on the MTPA [expansion unknown] platform at Quatre Bornes, on 14 June 1979, accompanied by the leader of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party], to lend his aid to the taxpayers who were asking, through their president "that the government reduce fiscal pressure on them and on their enterprises in order to insure the pursuit and creation of a resurgence in employment."

Blackburn recalled that Azad Jeetun, MEF [Mauritian Employers Federation] economist, had supported the same proposition at the Mauritius University on 24 July.

"I took the secretary general to be an intelligent man, but now I am beginning to have some doubts. He could have done much better," he added.

Blackburn continued that the framework of private and public sectors, which Berenger had invited to join the MMM/SPM last Saturday to "change" Mauritius Island, will remember that change or not, they will remain taxpayers and consumers and that they will pay the cost of revolutionary visions."

The leader of the RPL underlined that the secretary general of the MMM still refuses to reveal how he will finance his electoral promises. "His reply up to date has been in conformity with his philosophy of a frank, open, broad combination: "totally unacceptable, no question of a dialogue, it is the new right.'" In a reply to a question Blackburn declared that he and his friends are not naive as some believe, and that they have a new approach to the political problems. They have decided to tell the truth in order that the people do not delude themselves.

EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE RPL

Philippe Blackburn, 44 years old, married, personnel administrator, "leader."

Mervyn North Coombs, 38 years old, single, head of enterprises in the free zone, "deputy leader."

Sunil Banymandhub, 31 years old, single, engineer accountant, "president."

Pierre Dinan, 45 years old, married, economist, expert-accountant, "vice president."

Madame Sylvie Laure, administrator of enterprises, "secretary."

Philippe Forget (young) 31 years old, economist, statistician "treasurer."

Robert Bigaignon, 28 years old, married, expert accountant and fiscal councillor, "assistant treasurer."

Germain Commarmond, 34 years old, single, chemical engineer, "P R O" and Pierre Yves Bigaignon, 28 years old, married, Doctor of Laws (Lld) "member."

OFFICIAL JOINS PRL--Mervyn Coombs has resigned as president of the National Transport Corporation [CNT] due to his political engagement with RPL [Rally for Progress and Liberty]. He had been apointed to that position by the government when the establishment of the CNT had been decided. He therefore contributed to the launching of that enterprise. North Coombs, who is very well known industrialist, also guided the activities of the MEF (Mauritian Employers Federation). It should be recalled that the CNT began its operations on the Vacoas route on 12 March 1980 and has extended into other regions of the country. IRAT BIOGAS PRODUCTION EXPERIMENT--The experimental station of the Institute for Agronomic and Tropical Research [IRAT], one of the institutes of the Group for Study, Research and Development in Tropical Agronomy [GERDAT] in Lossa, has been irrigating for 1 year a hectare of land farmed by a peasant in Lossa with a motor-driven pump run by biogas. The project, which is under the direction of Lefevre, a young volunteer of the French National Volunteer Service [VSN], is producing up to 450 kg of biomass per month. ISLAMIC PARTY--An eleventh political party has applied for registration at the Ministry of the Interior. The Rally for National Salvation is unlikely to be allowed, however, because it is "inspired in its activities by the principles of Islam." Political parties are not allowed to be identified with a sect, race, religion, ethnic group or regional language. President Diouf may have to use a lot of diplomatic pressure if he is to refuse this party legal status, because the Islamic "brotherhoods" wield great power, particularly in the groundnut growing areas. LABOR CONGRESS TAKES ON ROLE OF OPPOSITION PARTY

Zurich NEUE ZUERCHER ZEITUNG in German 5 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] Sierra Leone's umbrella labor union organization (Sierra Leone Labour Congress/SLLC) can be said to have assumed the role of an opposition party in the West African single-party state. In a country notorious for its apathy and corruption and where a latent crisis situation has long been brewing, the SLLC is the strongest parallel power--internal bickering notwithstanding--representing as it does 22 individual unions composed of 250,000 members. At first it seemed as if President Siaka Stevens intended to curb wide-spread dissatisfaction and simultaneously replace discredited members of the government with preparations for parliamentary elections. But in July the unions confronted him with an ultimatum in the form of a memorandum demanding measures to combat economic decline and social misery.

Pivotal Rice Problem

The first general strike was called for 14 August after Stevens had refused to negotiate with the unions. Talks began the very next day and Stevens agreed to reduce the cost of rice, the basic food staple, initially by 40 and later by 55 percent, and to implement effective price controls on other scarce foodstuffs. The unions then called off the strike, but on the condition that the other demands in the memorandum would be negotiated. Leftists were opposed to calling off the strike. Fresh negotiations led nowhere and rice remained scarce so the SLLC called for a second general strike on 1 September. Stevens tried at first without any success to prevent the strike with a veto. In the end his only alternative was to proclaim a state of emergency, have the unpopular security forces occupy the union headquarters and, according to unconfirmed reports, arrest union leaders.

For the unions the underlying problem consists of inflation, unemployment, smuggling (of diamonds mostly), and declining production. But they don't consider the crass corruption of the upper class that constantly leads to barely disguised scandals. For the unions the root of the problem is a spoiled and rotten bureaucracy and the disappearance of public monies and foreign exchange in luxury goods and tax evasion. Low wages as a rule barely suffice to cover the cost of food. Hence the demand for price cuts and rent allowances. Additional demands are health service improvements (medicines are scarce and are traded on the black market), cheaper school books, road improvement and control of transportation costs. A lower living standard is affecting more and more of the middle class, a not insignificant group in the capital, Freetown.

Basic African Problem

In November 1978 IMF credits led to exorbitant price increases as a result of a required devaluation. In 1979 the government was forced by a poor harvest to expend an excessive amount of money on imported rice. Preceding the expensive OAU conference in mid-1980 that far exceeded the resources of a country that was under IMF observation, there was a cabbies' strike and a student demonstration that was quashed with the use of force. In neighboring Liberia and Guinea-Bissau exorbitant rice prices and rice shortages had set the stage for coups, and Stevens was afraid that the same thing would happen in Freetown to him as happened to Tolbert, who was executed by Liberian non-coms in April 1980. In May 1978 Stevens was reelected for 7 years, but the subject of his successor has long been a topic of conversation. His "All People's Congress" (established with Soviet support) is not popular and continues to win elections through pressure and fraud. There is widespread dissatisfaction with the small Crio elite (2 percent of the population) and with the Lebanese mafia that is involved in a lot of shady dealings but at the same time keeps the wheels of the economy spinning. Government prices paid to farmers are so stingy that not enough crops are planted. So far the population has fatalistically accepted this sorry state of affairs, and Stevens was visibly shaken by the unexpected hard line by the unions.

$47 MILLION IN AMF LOANS

GF211038 Dubayy KHALEEJ TIMES in English 21 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Somalia yesterday received two loans--one extended and the other automatic--totalling $47.085 million dollars from the Abu Dhabi-based Arab Monetary Fund [AMF].

These loans will go to support Somalia's deficit in its balance of payments.

The extended loan, of $47 million, is the first of its kind received by Somalia from the AMF, while the automatic loan is the second of its kind. The automatic loan is of $85,000.

Dr Labib Shariq, acting chariman of the AMF, signed the loan agreement for the fund, while Mr Abdullahi Ahmad Addou, the visiting Somali minister of finance, signed for his country.

The Somali minister said that the loans would help Somalia overcome the difficult circumstances being experienced since 1973 as a result of drought.

Dr Labib Shariq said that the loans were in the framework of the fund's efforts to assist its member states to face deficit in their balance of payments.

The Somali minister arrived in Abu Dhabi from Mogadiscio earlier in the day.

Meanwhile, Somali Minister of Industry Ali Khalif left Abu Dhabi yesterday wrapping up a 3-day visit to the UAE.

Whle here, the minister handed over a message to his highness President Shaykh Zayid ibn Sultan al Nuhayyan from Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre.

The Somali minister also held talks with Mr Rashid 'Abdullah, minister of state for foreign affairs, on promoting relations between the two countries.

BOTHA IMPLIES LOCAL GOVERNMENTS COULD SET NATIONAL PRECEDENT

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 29 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Helen Zille]

[Text]

IN a few cryptic sentences that almost slipped by unnoticed the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, this week touched on a subject that seems certain to become one of the most controversial political issues of the coming year.

Speaking during the debate on his Vote in Parliament, Mr Botha approached the issue carefully, like a man trying to unwrap a parcel that might contain a bomb.

The bomb is the issue of local or municipal government — the level at which Mr Botha and his advisers hope to begin the process of constitutional change.

That is why Mr Botha's few cautious remarks on municipal government were so intriguing. In his inimitable style, he said enough to give verligtes hope of meaningful reform, but too little to justify a verkrampte backlash.

Reading from a confidential document drawn up by three Cape Town City Council officials, Mr Botha referred to "regional government" in a "greater Cape Town."

The document, he said, dealt with the franchise based on "certain qualifications," with property rights, finances and certain "common facilities."

Strongly implying his support for the report, he hinted that it could be used as the basis of a revised system, and urged the council to make it available to the public.

What did all this mean? Politicians and observers were left guessing, for the most part. But a number of constitutional planners in the President's Council and other Government offices knew what Mr Botha was getting at: he was lifting the lid just enough to let a tiny burst of steam from a boiling pot that is certain to generate much heat in the months ahead.

It is no secret that Nationalist verligtes wish to draw coloured and Indian people into a common constitutional system with whites. It is equally well known that verkramptes will resist any such steps unless firm "division of power" and "self determination" remain the basis of the system.

This has given rise to a serious dilemma for the Prime Minister and his advisers: they are trying to produce a package that can be sold to verkramptes and coloured people alike.

They believe the only chance they have of succeeding is by starting at the local government level. They think verkramptes are less likely to view as a threat to their identity "joint responsibility" on matters such as sewerage and electricity. And they believe coloured and Indian people would be more likely to enter common structures at a local government level where their participation would involve an integrated system of administration and a more equal spread of resources.

Can this plan succeed? Many observers inside and outside the National Party doubt it. They believe any scheme that is acceptable to coloureds will cause a rift in the NP and any scheme that enables the party to hold together will be unacceptable to the coloureds.

The first task the Prime Minister has set the President's Council is to get around this dilemma. He has called for an interim report on local government which is expected within the next year.

It is a report that will either win for the council what has been described as a "legitimacy from results" or seriously damage it.

There are several plans in the local government debate that differ significantly not only between different parties and factions of parties, but between different provinces.

The debate is the most advanced in the Cape, and "greater Cape Town" is likely to be the first metropolitan area where constitutional change is phased in — if a plan can be worked out. Cape Town is a logical first target because it is the traditional home of the coloured people, and also, ironically, because the city council is run by the Progressive Federal Party which would be unlikely to resist any meaningful step to shared power, or "joint responsibility" as Nationalist verligtes prefer to call it.

So what are the options? There are three broad divisions between the plans the PFP, the Nationalist verligtes and the verkramptes would be prepared to accept.

The PFP plan involves power sharing on all matters in a metropolitan body elected on a common roll franchise.

The NP view — among the verligtes and verkramptes — is based on municipalities for the different groups and another common metropolitan body representing the different municipalities in a wider urban area.

There would be "division of power" in the separate municipalities and "joint responsibility" in the metropolitan body. However, there are differences between the verligtes and verkramptes on the extent and method of introducing "joint responsibility."

Nationalists believe the precedent for this form of local government has been set in Cape Town where Pinelands, a white area within the boundaries of greater Cape Town, is already a separate municipality. They therefore see no reason why Mitchells Plain, a new coloured area, could not be a separate municipality as well.

The separate municipalities could deal with what are called "personal services" such as sports fields, libraries and parks, while the joint metropolitan authorities could have a say over so-called "trading services" such as sewerage, electricity, and storm water drains.

Government leaders have clearly discussed these tentative options with coloured leaders and have received a straight message: any system that entrenches apartheid is out.

Coloured spokesman have said they would reject a system that would retain racially separate municipalities with separate management committees sending delegates to a metropolitan authority.

The minimum some coloured leaders say they would accept is a metropolitan body elected directly by all on a uniform franchise system. Some verligtes believe it is possible to overcome this obstacle by confining the powers of metropolitan authorities to "trading services" that do not affect day-to-day inter-race contact and to base the election of this common body on a qualified franchise tied to property ownership.

The idea of verligtes pushing a version of the old Progressive Party qualified franchise policy at local level is truly astounding. But within the context of Cape Town's local government system, it is not quite so remarkable.

Cape Town's municipal system has always been based on a qualified franchise. Up to the early 1970's, coloureds and whites could vote for the city council.

Coloured people were driven out of this system when the Government made the extra stipulation that a municipal voter had to be a Parliamentary voter as well, a privilege confined to whites.

Now there is talk among nationalists of extending the qualified franchise once again to coloured people, and perhaps raising the qualifications in a move to prevent a possible immediate majority of coloured people. This system could work in theory, but in practice it would come under fire, not only from verkramptes who oppose any uniform franchise, but also from coloured people and the PFP.

A common structure would almost ensure a coloured majority in most rural Cape towns — and few Nationalists would be prepared to accept this. This is the snag Nationalist verligtes have struck, and in their desire to play the numbers game, there is no indication yet of how they can resolve it.

Another, and potentially more serious, snag is the total exclusion of blacks from these proposals so far. The only plan for urban blacks has involved vague suggestions that they could be linked to their homelands through urban constituencies that would also have some form of acccess to the Prime Minister's proposed confederation of states.

In any case, the majority of Nationalists — both verlig and verkramp — are opposed to the inclusion of blacks at the local level because this would mean an acceptance of black political rights outside the homelands and destroy the whole basis of NP policy.

The most they are prepared to accept is a shared system with coloureds, who, the Prime Minister said this week, were not a "separate or emerging" nation. And then, even the limited plan regarding the coloured people is enough to stir the hornet's nest that is the NP.

The results will be there for all to see within the next year.

HEUNIS REVIEWS POLICY ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY. — The status quo in South Africa could not and, in fact, should not be maintained, the Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis, said yesterday.

In a lengthy exposition of Government policy on constitutional reform, Mr Heunis said the status quo had to be changed drastically, but the question was how to extend rights and privileges to other population groups without destroying existing rights, privileges and norms.

He was speaking on the Internal Affairs vote in the Budget committee stage and said he wanted to discuss the importance of stability as a prerequisite for reform.

"Models and strategies formulated with reform as the goal are futile once such models and strategies become the prelude to destabilisation and chaos," he said.

It was his conviction and the view of the Government that the "status quo in South Africa cannot be maintained and that in fact it should not be maintained".

Fairness

"Measured against the demands of reasonableness and fairness and the desire to live and let live in prosperity and not in misery, in dignity and not in shame, and by retaining the values and norms that distinguish democratic communities from dictatorships and civilised communities from the primitive, the status quo ought to be changed drastically," he said.

A new constitution which provided for universal franchise, or a qualified franchise, or a consociational democracy, or simply meaningful participation, could not suddenly change a society which had been termed "deeply divided", into a model state with a contented and prosperous citizenry which would be enthusiastically welcomed into the ranks of fine Western democracies.

Limitations

The complexity of the society underlined the limitations to the possible development of a constitutional dispensation which would satisfy the reasonable expectations of all the people in South Africa.

"It is of no help that the different population groups, the Coloureds and Indians in this context, overemphasise their own expectations at this stage.

"Nobody is disputing anyone's claim to rights and privileges. The question is how those rights and privileges are realised without destroying the existant rights, privileges and norms," he said.

Committed

"The Government is irreversibly committed to the unbiased maintenance of the rights and privileges of every population group," he said.

In this respect the Government had created the President's Council, one of the most significant political steps taken in the constitutional history of South Africa.

There were those who said it was a risky and dangerous exercise, while others claimed it was inadequate and could not bring about reform.

It underlined an important fact, though. Constitutional reform was not a single-step matter. It was the result of mutual attitudes, not the cause of them.

Opportunity

The President's Council was an opportunity in the constitutional history of South Africa within which there could be calm and controlled investigation, evaluation, negotiation and formulation "on that which we would like to call the unique constitutional dispensation of South Africa".

The expectation and aspirations of the various population groups was going to depend on the view the Government held of the population's makeup.

"This image has differed through the ages," he said. At one time it was based on a Christian/non-Christian differentiation and later, even in South Africa, on a European/non-European division.

"Now there is an image which some call unsophisticated, but which I call dangerous: an image that there are only Whites and non-Whites."

Mr Heunis said he saw an inherent danger in calling everyone who was not White, simply Black.

"This is to unleash and propagate confrontation between White and non-White and I want to warn that if such a clash should come, all values will be destroyed."

WHITE BIRTHRATE CONTINUES DECLINE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 8 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

THE bottom is falling out of the country's White birthrate — and the Whites cannot continue to "carry" the burden of non-White administration and services, according to Dr Chris Jooste, director of the SA Bureau for Racial Affairs.

Dr Jooste said yesterday that the country was facing serious problems on the White population front, thanks largely to increasing use of White female labour and the dropping White birthrate.

Latest estimates now put the White population at the turn of the century at 5,2-million — a big drop on the confident estimate made in 1976 of 6,6-million.

Between 1970 and 1977 the White birthrate had dropped a massive 26,7 percent, and indications were that it had dropped a further 3,5 percent between 1977 and 1979 alone.

"The alarming fact is that the White birthrate is not only dropping faster than that of any other group, but that it is now below the so-called 'replacement' level", said Dr Jooste.

Against this background, the Whites could not continue indefinitely to provide the workers for non-White administration and services.

The bureau backed the moves to recruit non-Whites in schooled and technical educational directions, but warned it would be "disastrous" if the big additions of workers were done in one integrated works system.

At the same time, the heavy burden on Whites of providing the work forces for the non-White states meant that there were now insufficient whites available to man their own public service.

"Up to now the Whites have had a big advantage in competition for schooled and highly schooled posts," he said in the latest Sabra newsletter.

"But no nation in the world has the ability to upgrade an indefinite higher percentage of its workers to highly schooled and executive administrative posts.

"All indications are that the White work force is entering a time of zero growth, while the demand for schooled, highly-schooled and executive workers is increasing rapidly", he said.

BLACK NEIGHBOR STATES COULD SURVIVE ECONOMIC WAR

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Sep 81 p 10

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text] SOUTH Africa dare not underestimate the ability of neighbouring states — largely economically dependent on her — to weather almost indefinitely the ripple effects and hardship which would be caused by sanctions on the Republic.

The director of the Africa Institute, Dr Erich Leistner, said yesterday that experience and knowledge of what had and was happening elsewhere in Africa, showed that Black states could descend to "indescribably low" living conditions and still survive.

And if the element of a sort of "Holy War" against South Africa were part of the hardship, the determination of Black states to last it out would be strengthened even further.

Devastating

Dr Leistner said it appeared that an economic war against South Africa was now almost definitely on the cards.

The argument was often advanced of the impact of such a war — with devastating ripple effects — on the economies and living standards of neighbouring Black States which were largely dependent on her.

But in the long run there could really only be peace if all the parties involved really wanted it, co-operated economically and threats to South Africa's existence were removed.

South Africa's ambassador to the United Nations, Mr Riaan Ekstean, had made it clear that South Africa would look after herself first if sanctions were imposed on her.

Disciplinary

Recent economic "disciplinary" measures against Mozambique and Zambia, for instance, had shown just how strongly South Africa could defend herself.

This had been accompanied by threats from the neighbouring Black states that they would be willing to face economic hardship if it meant the "Freedom of Azania and Namibia".

Sanctions against South Africa would certainly result in hardship for these states in hunger, fuel shortages, unemployment and other social problems.

Punishment

"But it is an open question just how much punishment these states can take before they have to back down and change their attitude to South Africa," Dr Leistner said.

All indications were that the absorption ability of these states was big.

Experience had shown how Zambia had gone ever deeper into the economic mire, and managed to weather the closing by former Rhodesian premier, Ian Smith, of his border with Zambia.

Another example was that of the repatriation by South Africa of 110 000 Malawian workers in 1974 — and confident predictions of large-scale rioting being caused in Malawi failed to materialise.

Dropping

Countries such as Uganda, Somalia, Tanzania and Ghana, were dropping their living standards further each day.

"It is clear that the living standards of African states can drop to indescribably low levels without resulting in revolution," he said.

There had been many cases of coups staged by disgruntled military forces — but if the action involving South Africa became something of a "holy war", political leaders in the Black states would find it relatively easy to keep their people in check and even sweep up feelings against South Africa.

Given in

Nor would any of the Black states' political leaders be prepared to lose face by giving in to any pressure exerted by South Africa.

Also sanctions against South Africa would only be part of a far wider economic action against the Republic and neighbouring states would then be able to count on aid from elsewhere.

"In the overall picture it must be remembered that the question of sanctions is still largely hypothetical, and very unlikely that South Africa's important overseas trade partners would support trade sanctions," he said.

But at the same time it would be stupid not to recognise and realise that the noose was being drawn ever tighter round South Africa's neck.

Compare

Nor did it help South Africa to compare herself with Israel, particularly as there was a large pro-Israeli lobby in the United States.

"In the long term, mutual interest in sound economic relations would create a far firmer foundation for co-existence than threats and pressure," said Dr Leistner.

Justifiably, South Africa — with her unparalleled economic and military strength as well as political maturity — could be expected to exercise more restraint and show greater long-term vision that states which were still young.

BLACK RIGHTS IN MULTIRACIAL UNIONS NEED GUARANTEES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 10 Sep 81 p 8

[Article by Steven Friedman]

[Text]

IN AN unprecedented move, a black union affiliated to the multiracial Trade Union Council of SA wants Tucsa to oppose the formation of mixed unions "without necessary checks and guarantees for the rights of blacks".

The Textile Workers' Union (Transvaal) will propose a resolution to this effect at Tucsa's coming annual conference in East London from September 14.

The resolution may spark a clash at the conference, as it implies criticism of those non-black Tucsa unions that have opened their doors to blacks.

Tucsa initially supported the idea that non-black unions should organise separate "parallel" unions for black workers.

Since unions with black members were allowed official bargaining rights, however, many Tucsa unions have preferred to absorb black workers into existing registered unions.

The resolution appears to express a fear that this will lead to these unions being "controlled" by the non-black unionists.

It asks the conference to resolve that "it would be wrong and inexpedient to institute mixed unions at this stage, without necessary checks and guarantees for the rights of blacks".

Black unionists have charged repeatedly that many of the mixed unions formed by established unions are designed to control black workers and that these workers are not given an adequate say in the running of the unions — charges that organisations like Tucsa sharply dispute.

Open doors

However, this criticism is rarely voiced by blacks within Tucsa and the resolution is therefore likely to be watched closely by rival unions.

Recent figures released by the Government show 51 established registered unions have been granted permission to open their doors to all races.

Many of these unions are affiliated to Tucsa.

The figures do not indicate, however, how many of the unions applied for or received completely nonracial status, nor how many received permission to become mixed only if their executives excluded blacks and they maintained racially separate branches.

A recently-scrapped clause of the Industrial Conciliation Act provided for unions to be given multiracial status subject to these conditions.

APPRENTICES TO BE GIVEN MILITARY DEFERMENT

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 26 Aug 81 p 8

[Text]

THE Government announced yesterday that deferment of military training would be granted to apprentices until the completion of their apprenticeship.

In a White Paper, released at the same time as the fifth part of the Wiehahn Report, the Minister of Manpower, Mr Fanie Botha, announced that approval had been granted for exemption boards to be grant deferment to apprentices "as far as possible".

The White Paper said "a National Serviceman will have the option of choosing whether he wants to do his initial period of military training before or after the completion of his apprenticeship".

If a serviceman decided to do his training after this initial period of military service, or if he was already an apprentice, he would not be called up during a continuous study course and he would not be employed on boarder duty, the White Paper said.

Indentured

Once an apprentice who has been granted deferment has completed his apprenticeship he would immediately be liable for military service.

Deferment would, save in exceptional cases, be limited to the prescribed period of apprenticeship and would only be granted to people who had indentured as apprentices before the age of 21.

"Once a National Serviceman has reported for his initial training no application for deferment will be considered."

The present system, in which an apprentice received eight months' remission for two years military service, would continue to apply.

No claim

"Qualified journeymen who perform their initial period of training will be employed according to the needs of the South African Defence Force and will not be entitled to any claim to be employed in their specific trades."

The White Paper said the new system would be introduced gradually and the position would be reviewed annually with the object of extending the concession to all apprentices who wanted to apply for it.

HEUNIS REVIEWS POLICY ON INDIAN EDUCATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] THE GOVERNMENT was committed to bringing the standard of content and facilities in Indian education to the same level as those for Whites as soon as possible, the Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis, said.

He also promised that his department was determined to curb any unrest.

Mr Heunis was reacting to Opposition attacks during the debate on his Budget vote about the continued suspension of Indian pupils who participated in boycotts earlier this year.

He said that the pupils affected represented 0,2 percent of the Indian pupils and he was not prepared to jeopardise the situation of the majority who wished to work in order to accommodate boycotters.

Mr Heunis also warned University of Natal Medical School students who had been the instigators of anti-Republican Festival boycotts not to drag schoolchildren into their campaigns.

Matric

The detrimental effect of boycotts was clear when the 1980 matriculation results were compared with preceding years. There had been a 20 percent fall off in the pass rate even among those who had remained at school.

"That is the disruptive effect that boycotts have on those pupils who want to work," Mr Heunis said.

In order to gain the right perspective on the 1981 boycotts it had to be remembered that one of the most important components of education was the role of discipline.

Majority

The unrest at Indian schools resulted in the majority of pupils at the affected schools being deprived of the right to continue their educational programme in peace. A minority of pupils disrupted their peace with undisciplined action.

"The boycott which started as an anniversary celebration of the 1980 actions was turned into boycott action against the 20th anniversary of the Republic by influences from outside, such as that of the anti-Republic Festival committee.

"This was in spite of the fact that there was no compulsion for pupils to participate in the celebrations," he said.

Media

It was interesting that the media did not refer to the original reasons, but only to those concerning the Republic Festival, Mr Heunis said.

"Teachers and headmasters were instructed to use persuasion to get pupils back to class. When it became clear that this effort would not succeed, letters were sent to the parents of each child involved in the boycott.

"These letters clearly spelt out the effect that their actions would have and the parents were invited to come to discuss any problems they had with headmasters.

"Many parents accepted the invitation and talked to headmasters with the result that many boycotting children returned to their classes," Mr Heunis said.

Those who refused to heed appeals and the letters were suspended in order to restore order at schools and accommodate pupils who wanted to continue with their studies.

Opportunity

"The result of the suspension was that 695 children were put out of school and were given the opportunity to apply for re-admittance under specific circumstances." Mr Heunis said.

After further consideration, 191 pupils were readmitted, and ten permanently expelled. A further 46 did not reapply and 258 were told they might apply for readmittance in 1982, of which 172 were allowed to enrol as private candidates in the senior certificate exams this year.

"At this stage the issue affects the 258 pupils still under suspension." Mr Heunis said.

BANK GOVERNOR DE KOLK DISCUSSES ECONOMY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Sep 81 p 5

[Text]

SOUTH AFRICA had one of the strongest underlying balance of payments positions in the world, Dr Gerhard de Kock, Governor of the Reserve Bank said in Johannesburg yesterday.

Addressing the Unisa School of Business Leadership, Dr De Kock said the South African Business cycle had passed its upward turning point and had entered a downward phase.

But this did not mean the country's economy was about to enter a depression.

It did imply that, in the months ahead, the rate of increase of the real gross domestic product would probably decline further.

Many of the economic indicators which had increased sharply during the recent upswing would rise at a lower rate, level off or actually decline.

"If we apply reasonably appropriate monetary and fiscal policies, the present deficit on the current account of the balance of payments need cause us no concern," Dr De Kock said.

"South Africa has one of the strongest underlying balance of payments positions in the world.

"In addition, according to all the known criteria, South Africa must be one of the most 'under-borrowed' countries in the world."

Gold

It was most important that the balance of payments adjustment process be permitted to work. The lower average gold price, the recessionary tendencies overseas and the high nominal rates of interest in the main industrial countries were facts of life that South Africa could not ignore, Dr De Kock said.

"It is naive to think that we can neutralise or offset these adverse external developments by domestic money creation or fiscal manipulation," Dr De Kock said. "We cannot — we have to adjust."

One could argue about the method of adjustment, but the inevitability of adjustment must be accepted.

"We can forget about soft options. In the short term, we can finance the balance of payments deficit, but in the long term we have to adjust it."

In recent years there had been an enormous switching of trade financing from expensive overseas sources for credit to inexpensive domestic sources. It would be relatively simple to reverse this process with the proviso that effective control be maintained over the rate of increase in money-supply and that interest rates were not kept artificially low.

Deliberate

That was one of the principal reasons why a deliberate policy of permitting financial markets to tighten had been followed, in response to changes in supply and demand.

Interest rates had also been allowed to rise from their abnormally low and distorted levels during 1979 and the first three quarters of 1980 to their present more realistic levels.

Coupled with the judicious use of the Reserve Bank's discount on forward dollars, current level of interest rates should ensure the necessary foreign financing without undue difficulty, Dr De Kock said.

It was impossible to say, at this stage, if interest rates would rise further in the months ahead or start a downward movement.

"Much depends on the behaviour of the gold price and overseas interest rates. Dr De Kock said. — Sapa.

GOVERNMENT ISSUES STATISTICS ON FARM WORKER WAGES

Statistics Disputed

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Sep 81 p 14

[Text]

IMMEDIATE action at Cabinet level was required to improve the scandalously low cash wages paid to farm workers, the independent ombudsman, Mr Eugene Roelofse, said yesterday.

Commenting in Johannesburg on Government statistics published on Tuesday he said the lowest figure mentioned — R26 a month — was inaccurate, misleading and unduly optimistic.

"We found evidence of wages as low as R15 a month," he said.

"Furthermore, the Government statistics obviously refer to adult males. Females receive far less.

"Child labour, which is widespread, at as little as R8 a month is even more profitable to the farmer". The words "farm labour" stamped into the pass of a Black man is the seal of doom.

He cannot, for instance, change his job to work in industry, and so he starts a life cycle of poverty and often ill-treatment.

Meanwhile, it is the farming community which gets increase after price increase, making it the most mollycoddled section of the community, at the expense of the worker and to the detriment of the consumer.

"That Mr Philip Myburgh, MP, has only now expressed shock at the low wage level of farm workers is stunning. If this is the extent of his knowledge of what goes on in agriculture then his position as Opposition spokesman on the subject is somewhat inappropriate." — Sapa.

Area Comparisons

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Sep 81 p 4

[Text] FARM labourers in the Ruens area of the Cape are paid more than their counterparts in five other farming areas in which the Department of Agriculture recently conducted wage surveys.

Replying in writing to a question by Mr Phillip Myburgh (PFP Wynberg), the Minister of Agriculture, Mr Pietie du Plessis, said the average received by a farm labourer in the Ruens area was R79,08 a month in cash and R67,24 in kind — a total of R146,32.

The next highest average was R129,77 — R53,42 in cash and R76,35 in kind — paid in the Swartland area of the Cape. In the north-western Free State, R87,50 was the average of which R33,51 was in cash, the Transvaal highveld, R77,29 — R26,42 in cash, in the western Transvaal R67,82 — R33,56 in cash — and in the eastern Free State R58,58, of which R26,60 was in cash.

WHEAT CROP PROSPECTS IMPROVE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 8 Sep 81 p 20

[Text]

SOUTH Africa's 1981/82 wheat crop prospects have improved markedly after good rains during the past three weeks and imports, previously forecast at a minimum 200 000 tons, may no longer be required, Wheat Board manager Denis van Aarde said.

He said the 1981/82 crop could exceed two million tons, based on present conditions, sharply up from 1980/81's drought-hit crop of 1,38-million tons.

Mr Van Aarde said the Wheat Board's preliminary unofficial estimate of the 1981/82 crop was 1,72-million tons, based on seed sales.

Since then, there has been a dramatic improvement in climatic conditions throughout the main wheat-growing areas in the Free State and western Cape, he said.

One Cape co-operative is now projecting a 75 percent improvement in its wheat production figures from the preliminary estimate, while South Africa's largest northern co-operative forecasts a 50 percent rise over earlier expectations, he added.

Mr Van Aarde said these greatly improved expectations indicate that the national crop could be as much as 350 000 tons higher than the Wheat Board's preliminary forecast if conditions remain broadly unchanged.

If a yield of two million tons or more materialises imports will not be needed, he noted.

Mr Van Aarde forecast last month that South Africa would have to import at least 200 000 tons of wheat given a crop of around 1,7-million tons.

A decision on wheat imports will be taken only around the beginning of next year, after a more accurate assessment of the crop, Mr Van Aarde said.

The South African wheat season runs officially from October 1 to September 30, but is complicated by different growing seasons in various regions. The major Free State crop is harvested in January.

During the current season South Africa has been forced to import a total of 236 000 tons of US hard winter wheat because of drought.

Before this season, South Africa last imported wheat in 1970/71 when a shortfall seemed possible, but the last time imports were essential was 1967.

Mr Van Aarde said this season's carry-over of 375 000 tons, equivalent to 2,5 months' milling capacity, will last until the middle of December when the first of the new crop will become available for local millers.

With annual domestic consumption estimated at 1,96-million tons, a crop of about two million tons would give South Africa a carry-over into the following season of three months' capacity, he added. — Reuter.

COAL EXPORTS TO DOUBLE IN LONG TERM

Details of Plans, Prospects

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Daan de Kock]

[Text] SOUTH AFRICA, already one of the world's biggest suppliers of strategic raw materials, is on the verge of becoming one of the world's most important suppliers of energy, in spite of having no natural oil reserves.

The Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W de Klerk, announced yesterday in Parliament the coal export quota would be doubled to 80-million tons in the next 30 years.

This means several thousand million rand will have to be spent on the opening and expansion of existing coal mines to provide the necessary infrastructure.

The existing railway line to Richards Bay may be doubled and a vast amount is also likely to be spent expanding facilities at Richards Bay to cope with the increased export quota.

Mr de Klerk said the increases would be stepped up in two phases, increasing the export ceiling by 20 million tons at first and by another 20 million tons at a later stage.

When the export quota of 80 million tons is reached in 30 years' time, South African foreign earnings from coal can rise to R2 400 at current prices. If the coal price increases at an average of 10 percent a year over the next 30 years, foreign earnings can grow to as much as R34 000-m, which will undoubtedly make the coal industry South Africa's most important.

Exports

The growth in South Africa's coal exports over the past six years was impressive. In 1976, the year before the chipments through Richards Bay commenced, export earnings from coal amounted to R37,3-m. In 1980 this figure increased to R700-m and the latest forecast is that it can reach about R900-m at the end of this year.

The present export quota for coal agreed on by the Government is 44 million tons. This target under the Phase 3 of the Richards Bay expansion programme will hopefully be reached in 1985. Phase 4 will probably be timed for 1990 when the quota will be increased to 65 million tons. The next phase 07924702will probably be reached after the year 2000.

The South African Railways is already spending R500-million on improving the railway line from Richards Bay to the coal fields and will probably have to double the line in the future.

A spokesman from the SAR said yesterday: "Cognisance is taken of the coal export quota being raised to 80 million tons a year over the next 30 years and the handling capacities of both the Richards Bay railway line and the harbour itself will have to be extended to meet the additional volume of coal exports.

SAR will, however, in collaboration with the Department of Energy Affairs, have to plan the rate at which the announced expansion in coal exports is going to be implemented.

SAR is nevertheless confident that goals to be set in this regard will be met. The financial implications regarding any future improvements concerning the enlarged export figures will depend on the work needing to be done to reach the new figure of 80 million tons a year", the spokesman said.

Reserves

The Minister made his announcement during the committee stage of the Budget, saying the 80-million tons a year over 30 years represented 4,7 percent of the mineable reserves, calculated last year to be 51 000 million tons.

The previous approved 30-year-quota of 44 million tons a year was estimated as being 5,7 percent of the reserves in terms of a 1975 total reserves figure of 25 000 million tons.

The new increased exports would lead to the creation of an estimated 50 000 new jobs and would result in improved utilisation, prospecting and mining methods. This had been clearly proved by the results of the previous decision to export 44 million tons a year for 30 years from Richards Bay.

The stimulating effect of the exports lay in the price, because export coal was sold at two to three times the price of domestic coal, the Minister said.

Multi-product mines illustrated the advantages of these export gains.

"These mines are producing for domestic consumption and succeed in simultaneously establishing the recovery and utilization of all grades of coal for which markets now exist," he said.

These multi-product mines had employed more expensive and sophisticated mining methods which in turn had led to a dramatic increase in the country's recoverable reserves.

Ceiling

In 1975 the in situ reserves had been estimated at 81 000 million tons, of which 25 000 million was considered recoverable. In 1980 the two figures had increased to 110 000 and 51 000 million tons respectively.

"The increase of the ceiling to 80 million tons does therefore not disturb the already accepted ratio of exports to reserves.

"The assurance is given that the latest reserve estimation has been done conservatively. Coalfields for which there was insufficient information were not included in the 1980 estimates," he said.

"There is good reason to expect that, as a result of improved prospecting, price movement and improved mining methods, the reserves now accepted as proven will rise still further."

The increased revenue from exports would also help reduce domestic energy costs. Coal was South Africa's major energy source and the export gains would help to keep the domestic price of coal at realistic levels.

Stabilisation

Foreign earnings from mining would not only be increased, but stabilised, Mr De Klerk said.

It was expected that coal would, by 1990, earn half of what the 1980 record price of gold exports earned.

"The value of this fact in respect of South Africa's economic stability is obvious," he said.

The new 80 million ton level would also establish South Africa as one of the three most important suppliers to a coal-hungry world market.

Coal had become a strategic mineral since the energy crisis and South Africa's importance to the Free World in this regard would probably contribute to a more realistic approach to South Africa by her trading partners.

The Government's first concern was whether the exports could be afforded in terms of the country's own future coal requirements.

A survey conducted by the energy branch in collaboration with the Minerals Bureau of his department and with all major coal consuming sectors had established that the internal coal demand would increase at an annual rate of 5,8 percent over the next 40 years.

Shippers Using Maputo Route

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 3 Sep 81 p 15

[Article by Adam Payne]

[Text] AMONG the steam-coal exporters be awaiting the expected announcement in Parliament tomorrow of new export ceilings to apply after 1985 will be the small and almost forgotten shippers through Maputo.

In spite of their main difficulty — the limit on size of ships that can load in Maputo — these exporters are moving just under 1-million tons of steam coal a year to overseas markets.

In addition, about 180 000 tons of anthracite coal is shipped a year to export markets.

The small steam-coal producers with export allocations of about 300 000 tons a year each are: Bordex, connected with Boland Bank in the Cape; Concor, the civil engineering and construciton company; and Sevmin Coal which is connected with Savage & Lovemore.

Messina (Transvaal) Development Company exports about 180 000 tons a year of anthracite through Maputo.

The steam-coal exporters have small mines, often with low costs, in the Eastern Transvaal and are in a different category to the oil companies and big exporters, like Amcoal, which operate through Richards Bay.

But because there is export capacity at Maputo harbour, which is close to the Eastern Transvaal, they are seeking a larger quota, perhaps 2-million tons a year.

This tonnage could be handled by the existing, old appliances which are still efficient, but if in time the quota is raised to 5-million tons a year or if the Maputo Government obtains export coal at an economic figure from far away Wankie Colliery or from Botswana, there would be ready backers for building a large modern loading appliance.

Since the world export coal trade depends as much on transport and transport rates as it does on mining and mining costs, the Maputo exporters are at a considerable disadvantage to those using Richards Bay.

The harbour is not as well dredged as it was under the Portuguese administration and ships are limited in size.

Coal loading is slower than at Richards Bay and freight rates to Europe in the small ships are about $25 a ton compared with a new low rate of about $10 from Richards Bay in bulk carriers.

The Richards Bay rate was about $16 a ton, but with the depression in the iron-ore trade, bulk carriers have been forced to lower their rates so that Transvaal coal shipped through Richards Bay can reach Europe extremely cheaply — the freight rate to Europe is less than double than the railage rate from the Witbank area to Richards Bay.

I am told that at the height of demand for coal in May, Maputo exporters sold coal spot in Europe for as much as $63 to $65 a ton cif, which represented an fob price of about $38 for low-grade coal of 25 mj/kg.

By comparison, higher-grade coal of 27,7 mj/kg through Richards Bay was being sold at about $56 to $58 a ton cif on contracts negotiated last year.

But the spot market has softened rapidly and the Maputo exporters would be unlikely to get as much as $58 cif or $33 fob now.

They calculate that by the end of the year the $5 a ton or more drop that has occurred should be recouped so they get about $38 fob again.

Difficulties in railing coal to Maputo because of truck shortages are being overcome, although if there is a surplus of fully laden trucks in Maputo, the SA Railways limits the number of trucks that can be used for further railings until the backlog is cleared.

DISRUPTION OF RAIL TRAFFIC TO ZIMBABWE DENIED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 8 Sep 81 p 9

[Text]

RAILWAY traffic between South Africa and Zimbabwe was "completely" normal and Zimbabwe had always received its full quota of oil from South Africa, a South African Railways spokesman said in Johannesburg yesterday.

He was reacting to a statement on Sunday night by the Zimbabwe Energy Minister, Mr Simbi Makoni, accusing South Africa of disrupting the traffic flow between the two countries, particularly its oil supplies.

"I don't know what happens on the other side of the border, but we have not been responsible for any delay in the transport of oil supplies or anything else to Zimbabwe," the spokesman said.

"In fact, the operation is running very smoothly at present, and they (Zimbabwe) are getting the oil quota they want."

He said that because of the "exceptional" demand for fuel, the SAR had not used any of its own trucks to transport oil to Zimbabwe.

"And during a meeting between railway officials of the two countries at Beit Bridge on September 2, it was agreed that the 241 trucks engaged by the Zimbabwe railway for the operation were sufficient."

He said fuel supplies were being turned around normally.

Transport between the two countries had been halted for three weeks up to August 25 at the request of Zimbabwe, but oil supplies had been excluded from the ban, he added.

In his statement on Sunday night, Mr Makoni claimed that Zimbabwe had slightly more than three days' supply of diesel fuel left, with petrol reserves only slightly higher. — Sapa.

BRIEFS

POLICE MINISTER ACCUSES SACC--The African National Congress and the South African Council of Churches had been propagating the same policies since 1961 and the Government was finding it increasingly difficult to accept the situation, the Minister of Police, Mr Louis le Grange said yesterday. Speaking during the debate on his Budget vote he said the SACC and its secretary general, Bishop Desmond Tutu, wanted to undermine the preparedness of the South African Police and the Defence Force. They accused the Government of following policies which would lead to a confrontation between church and state and yet they had been propagating the same policies as the ANC since 1961. "And the SACC does not rely on its own finance, but rather on funds from abroad which it uses to launch policies similar to that of the ANC." Among the sources from which it obtained funds were the World Council of Churches, the University Exchange Fund and Scandinavian countries. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 11 Sep 81 p 4]

NEW CONSERVATIVE ALLIANCE--Cape Town--Large-scale agreement had been reached among South African conservatives which would lead to the formation of a new conservative alliance to be known as the Volksreddingsaksie (VRA) the leader of the Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging, Mr Eugene Terre'blanche, has said in Parow, Cape. Addressing a meeting of the AWB attended by about 200 people, Mr Terre'blanche said there had been lengthy negotiations between Rightwing groups and political parties and that "about 90 percent of them agree to a large extent". The immediate purpose of the new alliance was to ensure that if a referendum should be held on a new constitution, the constitution would be rejected. He appealed to Rightwing Afrikaners not to argue with each other now "in the nation's hour of need". Mr Terre'blanche claimed the Government was guilty of high treason in its establishment of the President's Council, a move which meant that "Chinese, Indians, Coloureds and Whites who have no nationalism in them" would decide on the country's future. It has been said that the constitution would allow people of other races to hold senior positions in Government.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Sep 81 p 8]

KOORNHOF STATISTICS ON HOMELANDS--The Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, said yesterday that separate development was succeeding because most black people now lived in the homelands. He said, during the debate on his portfolio, that the population of non-independent homelands had increased from 7 400 000 in 1970 to 10 700 000 in 1980. He conceded that part of the increase was due to border changes and resettlement, but said it was a rise of 44,7%, compared with the rise in white areas of 11,6%. "In 1970 46,7% of black people lived in the homelands and in 1980 it was 53,2%. "This is the policy that people say had failed, but these figures will rise still further." Dr Koornhof said. [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 p 6]

KWAZULU DISPUTE OVER HOSPITAL--Durban--The Edendale Hospital crisis has developed into a dispute between the South African Government and kwaZulu amid reports that all whites might walk out of kwaZulu hospitals if the kwaZulu Cabinet insists on the removal of seven top white staff at Edendale. The kwaZulu Chief Minister, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, last night said his Cabinet would not shift its position and that black people were prepared to face the hardship of a walkout by whites "rather than have their dignity trampled underfoot." The crisis worsened yesterday when white officials at Edendale, near Maritzburg, barred a kwaZulu investigating team from entering the hospital. Chief Buthelezi said last night the SA Government was determined to "save white faces at Edendale at the expense of the kwaZulu Government." He said statements by the Secretary for Health and by the Minister of Health, Dr Munnik, as well as Press statements by Dr Adnams and other white officials had humiliated his Government. RULING ON FOSATU FUND-RAISING--Lawyers and unionists have failed last Friday's Supreme Court judgment setting aside the Government's controversial ban on fund-raising by the Federation of SA Trade Unions (Fosatu). In a crucial ruling, the Judge President of Natal, Mr Justice James, declared null and void a Government Gazette notice of June last year which prohibited Fosatu from raising funds. Fosatu applied in December 1979 for permission to raise funds but before the director of fund-raising had made his decision, the Minister of Health, Welfare and Pensions, Dr Munnik, published the prohibition order. Imposed in terms of section 29 of the Fund-Raising Act, the order appeared to cut off Fosatu's right not only to overseas donations, but also to local donations and even affiliation fees. The order was condemned by local and international labour movements and was an issue at last year's annual conference of the International Labour Organisation. In his judgment, Mr Justice James ruled that before imposing the ban the Minister should have aplied the rule of "audi alteram partem" (hear the other side) by allowing Fosatu to make representations. DISAPPROVAL MULTIRACIAL CINEMAS--The Government had turned down nine applications from owners of cinemas to open their establishments to all races, the Minister of Community Development, Mr Pen Kotze, said yesterday. Replying in writing to a question by Mr Colin Eglin (PFP Sea Point) he said no such applications had been granted because it was against Government policy to "allow joint attendance of cinemas by members of different population groups, whereas adequate facilities already exist or can readily be provided." MVUBELD IN AUSTRALIA--Sydney--The Australian Council of Trade Unions convinced a Black South African unionist not to attend its congress when she turned up at the meeting in Sydney yesterday. Mrs. Lucy Mvubelo, deputy vice-president of the Trade Union Council of South Africa, later said she had agreed with an ACTU official who told her at the door it would be better if she did not attend. Mrs Mvubelo (61) had been met at the congress venue by a hostile group of anti-apartheid demonstrators, who accused her of being a pawn for the South African Government. Her visit

STUDENT DETENTIONS--The three University of the Witwatersrand students detained earlier this month under section 22 of the General Laws Amendment Act are now behind held in terms of Section Six of the Terrorism Act. A Security Police spokesman at John Vorster Square today confirmed that Bachelor of Arts students Mr Leslie Lax, Miss Leale Mohammed and Mr Michael O'Donovan were now being held in terms of the Terrorism Act. BOMB INCIDENT--East London--An unidentified man was blown to pieces when a bomb ripped through a section of the bus shelters at the main bus terminal at Mdantsane, near East London, on Thursday night. First reports were that the man was waiting for the last bus to East London at 10.25 pm when the bomb exploded. The blask shook buildings a kilometre away and was heard in a large section of the township. Police were on the scene within minutes and the area was cordoned off until this afternoon. DURBAN POPULATION PROJECTIONS--Durban--A population like that of the Johannesburg metropolitan complex in an area a quarter of the size. This is the daunting picture of Durban in the year 2000. The composition of the Durban population, according to the town planning section of the city engineer's department, is expected to be 1 700 000 blacks, 700 000 Indians, 434 000 whites and 114 000 coloured people. Drastic changes are expected to take place in earning powers. Whites are expected to contribute a mere 15 percent of the total and blacks just under 60 percent (33,77 at the moment). Many experts believe this could well sound the death knell for residential apartheid. "The Government has opened the door. They can't go back," said a spokesman for the city engineer's department. The conference is being organised by the South African Society of the Weizman Institute of Science in collaboration with the CSIR. The Israeli scientists will take part in discussions on research work carried out at the institute, together with several South African scientists working in the same or similar fields. Five senior science students have also been invited to attend the conference. The visiting scientists are: Professor M Avron (biochemistry), Professor Roy Caplan (membrane research), Professor Z Gromet-Elhanen, Professor A Ben-Amotz and Dr D Cahen (structural chemistry). TARIFF PROTECTION FOR MANUFACTURING--Cape Town--The Minister of Industries, Commerce and Tourism, Dr Dawie de Villiers, yesterday announced tariff protection measures to protect the first local manufacturer of South African gearboses. Dr De Villiers said in a statement issued in Cape Town the Board of Trade and Industries had not yet completed its investigation into application of tariff protection for the manufacture of rear axles. The board had completed its recommendations for gearboxes after receiving a considerable number of complaints which were mainly related to large gearboxes. "For this reason the board has recommended a specific duty which will not be prohibitive and which decreases proportionately with the increase in size of the gearbox," Dr De Villiers said. "The cheaper and less sophisticated gearboxes, in respect to which representations have been made, could continue to be imported at relatively small extra cost."--Sapa. HOUSING SHORTAGE--A total of 12 293 White, Coloured and Indian families still had to be re-housed in terms of the Group Areas Act, the Minister of Community Development, Mr Pen Kotze, said yesterday. Replying in writing to a question by Mr Colin Eglin (PFP Sea Point), Mr Kotze said 78 193 Coloured, 36 912 Indian and 2 259 White families had been moved since the start of the implementation of the provisions of the Group Areas Act. In the Cape, 5 200 Coloured, 797 Indian and 86 White families remained, to be moved; in the Transvaal 1 678 Coloured and 1 847 Indian families would be re-housed; in the Free State 41 White families would be moved, and in Natal five White, 711 Coloured and 1 928 Indian families would be relocated. Mr Kotze said he drew Mr Eglin's attention to the fact that more than 90 percent of the families involved lived under such dilapidated and slum-like conditions that their re-housing could hardly be termed removals from "houses". IMMIGRATION STATISTICS--South Africa showed a net gain of 2 490 immigrants in June this year, according to figures released by the Department of Statistics in Pretoria yesterday. A total of 3 210 immigrants settled permanently in South Africa, including 812 who had arrived as visitors and since became approved immigrants. The number of people who left South Africa to settle elsewhere was 720. The largest group of immigrants came from the United Kingdom (1 616) and the second largest group (1 138) arrived from Zimbabwe.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 10 Sep 81 p 10]

NYERERE SPECIFIES TASKS OF NONALIGNED NATIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Nyerere yesterday specified tasks which should be undertaken by the Non-Aligned nations which today begin their third decade on the international scene.

In a message issued in Dar es Salaam on the 20th anniversary of the Non-Aligned Movement, Mwalimu said action had to be taken to end the weakness the Movement had demonstrated in the last twenty years.

He attributed the weakness to disunity and discord between members of the Non-Aligned Movement and the continuing poverty from which they suffered.

Therefore, he said, Non-Aligned nations must first give greater emphasis to the peaceful settlement of conflicts between them.

He said when disputes became violent, the Non-Aligned nations must try to get help from each other and offer help to each other, or from other small and neutral states.

He advised that the Non-Aligned must always return to the negotiating table as quickly as possible, where necessary using the assistance of the Non-Aligned Movement or some other organisation of Third World states.

The President said the Third World nations, most of them belonging to the Non-Aligned Movement, must co-operate economically and seek joint measures to strengthen their economies, and thus their independence as separate nations.

At the same time, he added, the Non-Aligned must strengthen their ability, as Third World nations, to work in unity for a New International Economic Order (NIEO).

Mwalimu was very emphatic about the strengthening of the unity of the Non-Aligned Movement and safeguarding its independence from external influence.

He said a united Third World voice in support of freedom was now listened to by other nations of the world: "...even the Super-Powers now care about such a united Third World voice."

He added, "The Non-Aligned Movement does not wield Power in the world; but it is already a Force in the world. We have reason to strengthen our unity because by doing so we can influence the future of the world we live in."

He said the Non-Aligned must intensify their pressures for freedom and justice and use their influence to promote world peace and disarmament as a step towards reducing tension.

The Non-Aligned Movement, he went on, must be concerned about the vertical and horizontal proliferation of nuclear weapons.

He said, "...radiation knows no boundaries, and neutron bombs (together with other so-called tactical nuclear weapons) increase the likelihood of what the big powers call limited war but which is in reality death to the millions of people and to hopes for national progress."

He said the Non-Aligned must increase their pressures for NIEO, adding "...we are the first, but not the last, victim of the present exploitative international system."

On Southern Africa, Mwalimu said the Non-Aligned must speak out more clearly on the continued South African occupation of Namibia, and its constant attacks against Angola and other independent neighbours of the Pretoria regime.

He said the Non-Aligned nations must more effectively oppose apartheid itself, and the system's supporters motivated by economic or military interests.

On the Middle East, he said the Non-Aligned must continue "with our opposition to Israel's occupation of Arab lands, and with our insistence on the rights of the Palestinian People to their own State."

He stressed continued collective efforts to democratise international relations and international institutions.

President Nyerere said all these things were needed to be done and could be done because the Non-Aligned Movement had grown and was still growing.

He added, "And growth is a sign of life, and the power of life."

He praised the founders of Non-Alignment — Presidents Tito, Nasser, Nkrumah and Sukarno and Premier Nehru, saying they set the course for the Movement.

Mwalimu concluded with the pledge that Tanzania would continue to adhere strictly to the principles of Non-Alignment, work for the unity of the Movement and strive in co-operation with other members to promote world peace.

NYERERE RETIRES COUNCIL WORKERS FOR PUBLIC FUNDS WASTE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 4 Sep 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

PRESIDENT Nyerere has retired Dar es Salaam City Director Benedict Kasege in the public interest, replacing him with Ndugu D.E.A. Mgwasa — formerly Executive Secretary of the Institute of Finance Management (IMF).

According to a statement issued in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Ministry of Information and Culture, the government has retired in the public interest, two senior officials of the city council as well as three other council workers based in Kinondoni and Ilala districts.

Those retired, besides Ndugu Kasege, are the City Engineer, Ndugu Michael Salaita Killanga; an engineer with the Ilala Zone, Ndugu Pius A. Soko; a storekeeper in the engineer's office (Kinondoni), Ndugu Petro Bethwel Andrea and a Grade IIC teacher within the City Council, Ndugu A. Mpwagi.

The retired personnel have been associated with wasteful expenditure of public funds through shady vehicle hire deals and purchases of exercise books and bricks in contravention of financial regulations.

The statement said Ndugu Killanga breached regulations governing the hiring of vehicles and issued certificates for projects that were not completed, and which he did not inspect.

The engineer is also blamed for not properly accounting for cement and bricks bought by the City Council.

JUWATA PROBING CHARGES AGAINST AISCO MANAGEMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 3 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text]

UNSPECIFIED issues arising from charges of mismanagement and nepotism levelled against the top leadership of the Agricultural and Industrial Supplies Company (AISCO) in Dar es Salaam are now being sorted out by the headquarters of the Tanzania Workers Organisation (JUWATA).

JUWATA Deputy Secretary General, Ndugu Elias Mashesi, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the sorting out still continued. He did not indicate when it would be completed.

He hinted however, that a number of issues were at hand and were being closely studied. He did not specify the issues the officials have stumbled upon.

He said AISCO workers should rest assured that the matter was getting "maximum attention". He could not say if at this stage their study had confirmed allegations in a memorandum by the AISCO JUWATA branch on behalf of the workers.

It is understood JUWATA regional and national headquarters officials have, in the past month, been busy scrutinising documents and comparing notes.

A report accompanying the memorandum had revealed that the firm "lost over 10 million/- through mismanagement.

Highlights of the report included the sale of fast moving items to private businessmen on credit terms contrary to the company's standing regulations. The businessmen then sold the items at fantastic profits.

The report also accused the company's top leadership of bias for private businessmen and prejudice against national institutions in the distribution of items.

The management was also accused of ignoring Party and JUWATA branches' appeales for action against theft of public property in the corporation, alleging that this was "because a relative of a senior officer was involved".

Also the memorandum charged that some members of the management used company property and services for their own benefit and that of their relatives.

It also said a certain category of AISCO workers enjoyed special privileges.

The conflict had been simmering for months before it was finally picked up by JUWATA headquarters.

PRIVATE FIRMS ADJUSTING EMPLOYEES' SALARIES SLOWLY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] Private firms in Tanzania are adjusting salaries of their employees earning above the statutory minimum wage of 600/-, but the exercise is proceeding at a snail's pace as only three have registered their new rates so far.

Only the Pattex Knitwear Manufacturing Company of Dar es Salaam, Esso Standard Tanzania Limited and the Tanganyika Tea Growers' Association out of more than 350 private companies in the country were known to have worked out their new adjustment rates by yesterday.

In a circular to all members last month, the Association of Tanzania Employers (ATE) had asked all private companies to register their new rates with the Tanzania Workers Organisation (JUWATA) after adjusting the salaries of their employees who were earning more than 600/- a month.

An ATE spokesman said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the Tanganyika Tea Growers' Association had submitted its adjustments to the ATE and also to the Permanent Labour Tribunal for record purposes.

And the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, Ndugu Horace Kolimba, said Esso and Pattex had submitted copies of their rates to the ministry.

The new rates for three firms were not disclosed yesterday but official sources within the Tanganyika Tea Growers Association said the rates also covered the daily pay to casual workers plucking tea in estates all over the country.

The new rates for the private sector won't be uniform since the ATE has stated in the circular, that employers were not bound by a blanket increase.

The ATE circular, signed by the Association's Executive Director, Ndugu J. A. Namata, stressed that the minimum wage was obligatory and that all the employers had to comply.

It also said any salary adjustments which needed to be made consequent upon the increase in minimum wages should be negotiated between an employer or his association and an employee and JUWATA.

Increases should depend on negotiations, taking into account various factors including the production capacity of an individual firm.

"When agreement is reached it may be implemented. The Permanent Labour Tribunal should be sent a copy of the agreement for record purposes", Ndugu Namata had said in his circular.

The government had announced the increase of the minimum wage from 480/- to 600 shillings a month during presentation of the 1981/82 budget proposals in Parliament three months ago.

The government and parastatal organisations have been paying the new minimum wage effective July this year.

The Minister for Labour and Social Welfare, Ndugu Alfred Tandau, reminded yesterday that all employers should pay the statutory minimum wage of 600/-.

Those who did not comply with the new wages would face legal action he warned.

TANZANIAN EANSL WORKERS' TERMINAL BENEFITS REPORTEDLY UNPAID

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 2 Sep 81 p 3

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text]

SOME 30 former workers of the Eastern Africa National Shipping Line (EANSL) have not been paid their terminal benefits, the Daily News has learnt.

Some of them said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that they had never been told by the Ministry of Communications and Transport when the benefits would be paid.

One said: "It is now one and a half years (since the company was disbanded). Our benefits are long overdue."

He said that their counterparts in Kenya were paid by the Kenya Government "three weeks back." They said when they enquired from the local liquidator's office (the Cooper and Lybrand Dar es Salaam office) on the matter, "they said so far they had no notification from the ministry."

The benefits include accrued leave pay and severance pay. They said when they contacted the ministry on the matter, "we were told they will contact the Mombasa office of Cooper and Lybrand which would have been the paying office."

According to the workers, the then Kenya-based EANSL was officially dissolved on April 30, 1980. Talks between the shareholders — Kenya, Uganda, Zambia and Tanzania — have been going on to establish each country's financial obligation in the defunct merchant shipping company.

The Director of Shipping, Ndugu P.N. Meghji, said in June this year that the board of directors of the defunct limited liability company had decided to meet all their financial obligations to creditors in full.

Otherwise, the assets and liabilities of the company would have been disposed of through "simple auctioneering and dividends shared out on a pro rata basis."

The company's share capital is estimated at 120 million/-.

OIL PIPELINE REROUTING PROGRAM TO BE COMMISSIONED IN OCTOBER

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Excerpt]

THE 60 million/- pipeline re-routing project of the TAZAMA Pipelines Limited being undertaken in Dar es Salaam will be commissioned in October this year, TAZAMA Managing Director M.D. Mwape, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Ndugu Mwape said a new 26-kilometre pipeline from Kigamboni to Gongo la Mboto had been constructed, adding that the Gerezani Pumping Station had been moved to Kigamboni near TAZAMA fuel tanks.

Ndugu Mwape — now touring the seven TAZAMA pumping stations, five of which are in Tanzania — said final touches were now being put on the project which is part of the company's second phase expansion project.

TAZAMA launched the project early last October to ensure supplies of fuel in the event of a rupture in the existing pipeline and to divert the line from heavily populated areas.

A portion of the existing pipeline passed under the sea and through Temeke to Gongo la Mboto.

The re-routing project is handled by Japanese contractors, Nippon Kokan, and sub-contractor Zakhan International Company. Tractional of Belgium are the engineering consultants.

Ndugu Mwape, recently-appointed TAZAMA Managing Director by Zambian President Kaunda will visit pumping stations in Morogoro, Mikumi, Iringa and Mbeya in the country and Chinsali and Kalonje stations in Zambia.

RAPID RATE OF FOREST DEPLETION CAUSING CONCERN

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 2 Sep 81 p 7

[Article by Boniface Byarugaba]

[Text]

TANZANIA will need 45.79 million cubic metres of fuelwood and charcoal in the year 2000 against the annual potential supply of wood energy and sawtimber of only 5 million cubic metres, an international journal of forestry and forest industries has predicted.

It warned that at the present rate of forest depletion, Tanzania will soon find itself with very little forest left.

The journal, which published an article by the Director of Forestry, Ndugu E.M. Mzava, said with an annual population rate growth of about 3.4, Tanzania would require 36.65 cubic metres in 1985. The present consumption of household fuelwood and charcoal is 33.44 million cubic metres.

The journal, unasylva, published by the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO), said virtually all of Tanzania's fuelwood and charcoal supply "is harvested from miombo and savannah woodlands, which are frequently poorly stocked."

To make matters worse, it said, annual increments to the stock of woodlands were small. "Mean annual increments are minimal; increments of two cubic metres per year are not uncommon. A hectare of miombo woodland, for instance, contains hardly more than 40-50 cubic metres."

It said fuel and charcoal requirements of village industries (of tobacco, tea and pottery) are expected to increase rapidly over the next five years, warning that almost all of the wood will be cut from natural forests. "At this rate, Tanzania will soon find itself with very little forest left."

Tropical forest losses in East Africa between 1975 and 2000 are of the order of 6.5 million hectares. A more dramatic example is that of Tabora Region, an important tobacco growing area.

"At the present rate of forest clearing (in Tabora) for growing and curing tobacco (with an annual growth rate of 22 per cent), 700,000 ha (or 22 percent of total woodland area — will have been cleared by the year 2000. This means land deterioration, infertility and desertification," the journal said.

It observed that the general attitude of some villagers is that fuelwood and charcoal are "unlimited resources."

Since much fuelwood is collected "free," it is usually not counted as a cost element in the production of, say tobacco, it said, adding: "This is one of the reasons why villagers rarely make any reforestation or afforestation plans for their rural industries. But the villagers have to face obvious realities: The forest is disappearing rapidly."

CAT MANAGER NOTES COFFEE EXPORTS AS OF 30 JULY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 31 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Excerpt] Tanzania has so far earned 1,181,829,998/82 from 54,653,220 kgs of coffee exported to quota and non-quota countries during the 1980/81 season ending next month.

The Acting General Manager of Coffee Authority of Tanzania (CAT), Ndugu Emmanuel Msuya, said in Dar es Salaam at the weekend that export figures were of July 30, this year.

Of the exports, 35 million kgs worth 842,806,455/55 were sold through the International Coffee Organisation (ICO) quota system and the balance worth 339,023,543/27 to non-quota countries.

Some 42,174,180 kgs were of Arabica coffee and 12,478,040 kgs of robusta type.

Ndugu Msuya said Algeria bought about 21 million kgs of coffee out of the non-quota portion, adding that the same country recently agreed to purchase an additional five million kgs between October and December this year.

He said CAT had bought 69,402,000 kgs of coffee, exceeding this season's estimates by 73,000 kgs.

However, he said there was a residue of about 14 million kgs, most of which was stuck in Kagera Region because of transport problems.

He said the 14 million kilogrammes were milds — composition of arabica and robusta. Of the amount, some 2.5 million kilogrammes would be exported to West Germany and the remaining quantity would be sold to non-quota countries before the end of the year, he added.

POWER CUT THREATENS TOBACCO--Tobacco worth 10m/- is in danger of getting spoilt, following power cut at the crop's processing factory in Songea a month ago, Shihaia reported. The factor's General Manager, Ndugu P. Rushangara said the tobacco, sold to the United Kingdom and Holland, had been piling up at the factory since July 26. Holland and UK buy 80 per cent of the crop while the Tanzania Cigarette Company (TCC) takes the remaining 20 per cent. According to a Tanzania Electric Supply Company (TANESCO) official in Songea, power supply had been reduced twice as much because of mechanical problems in one of the generators. NEW THA PAYMENT SYSTEM--The Tanzania Harbours Authority (THA) will from now on handle cargo from local and foreign clients in advance payment terms, the Executive Chairman Ndugu Peter S. Macha told the Daily News recently. Ndugu Macha said that the authority would now insist on cash payment before delivery of cargo. The system, he said would be "pay and carry regardless of the type of client." He explained that the decision to insist on cash payment followed a recent review of THA's credit policies with various customers. Although Ndugu Macha gave no further details concerning the issue, it is understood that THA has been experiencing difficulties in collecting its funds from its customers. MINING OF GOLD DEPOSITS--Machines will be ordered from abroad this year for two small scale gold mines to be opened at Nzega and Kahama during the 1981/82 financial year, it was disclosed in Dar es Salaam yesterday. The ordering process was already underway and the machines would arrive within three to four months after placing the order, the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Minerals, Ndugu S. L. Lwakatare said. Country-wide surveys had identified eight areas, with gold deposits but due to financial and manpower constraints, the ministry had decided to start the small scale mining in the two areas, he explained. The government, besides running these mines, would continue supporting the small-scale miners, including the co-operatives, he explained. The Minister for Minerals, Ndugu John Malecela, had said in Parliament last July that the two plants, to be installed at the two mines, would cost 10,000,000/-. The mines would produce about 400 kilogrammes of gold a year, estimated at about 60m/- at current bullion market prices. According to Ndugu Malecela, Tanzania could earn a lot in foreign exchange if gold mining was taken up seriously. A major gold mine, the buckreef in Geita would be completed this year and would have a capacity for 100 million shillings worth of gold a year. Airborne geophysical surveys have identified gold deposits at Kahama, Geita, Mpanda, Musoma, Rukwa, Mbeya, Singida and Chunya areas. HUNGARIAN YOUTH TEAM'S DEPARTURE--A three-man Hungarian youth delegation which was in the country for consultations with their Tanzanian counterparts has left Dar es Salaam for home. The delegation, led by a member of the Hungarian Communist Youth Union National Executive Committee, Ndugu Andras Veres, comprised Ndugu Peter Emod and Ndugu Katalin Szaszs. While in Tanzania, the delegation toured the city of Dar es Salaam, went to Mikumi National Park in Morogoro to view game and also attended the rally organised in Morogoro to mark the 15th anniversary of the armed struggle in Namibia by SWAPO. Delegation members also toured the Usafiri Dar es Salaam (UDA) company which has a fleet of Hungarian-made articulated buses, and attended the 11th graduation ceremony at the University of Dar es Salaam last Saturday. They had talks with a Tanzanian "Umoja wa Vijana" side at the Vijana headquarters in Dar es Salaam on Friday. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 4 Sep 81 p 3]

CEREAL PRODUCTION OUTLOOK 'GOOD'--The outlook for cereal production in the present crop season is good, according to the "farming weather" report issued in Dar es Salaam yesterday by the Directorate of Meteorology. The 21-page report gives a broad outline of the weather trend and growth prospects for maize, sorghum and wheat in select stations. It is based on results obtained from "afromet stations for the month of July, 1981". Maize planted in Mid-November 1980 at Igeri station (Iringa Region), is said to be in "good state" while wheat planted at the end of March was in "moderate stage". At Arusha prison station, maize planted in March was also said to be in good state, the same applying for maize and wheat at Uyole station (Mbeya Region). At Morogoro station, maize has been harvested, while banana and citrus fruits were reported to be doing well. Maize at Hombolo Station (Dodoma Region) was said to be "in unsatisfactory state", but serena and lulu are in moderate state. Other stations which had harvested maize included Naliendele and Bwanga. TOBACCO AUTHORITY LAYOFFS--Dar es Salaam--3 Sep--The state-owned Tanzania Tobacco Authority (TAT) has laid off 428 workers over the last four months in an effort to cut down on its operational costs, it was learned here today. The authority believes that by laying off these workers--representing a 20 per cent reduction in the 2,000-strong labour force--will help trim the operational budget by six million Tanzanian shillings (about 750,000 dollars). In 1976/77 when the authority had a labour force of 1,586 workers it produced about 19 million kilogrammes of tobacco, but production nosed down to 11 million kilogrammes this year. In addition to being one of Tanzania's leading foreign exchange earners, tobacco farming also provides a steady income to a sizeable percentage of the rural population in Tanzania's central and southern regions. MUGABE'S TOUR OF COUNTRY PRAISED

[Editorial: "Face To Face"]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister's itinerary round the country is apt and well conceived. It is an exercise in effective communication with the masses.

Many means of communication have been discovered or invented. But all of them take second place to personal contact. It alone affords total communication through the bringing into full play of all five senses.

The people are able not only to see and hear their leader, but also to enter into debate and discussion with him. Mind plays upon mind and feedback is instantaneous. Misunderstandings of Government policies and plans are quickly eliminated.

It is one thing to hear of people and their problems; it is quite another to meet people and problems in their environmental setting. The problems are then seen in their true nature and proportion.

All leaders stand in great danger from adulators and flatterers among their assistants, who tell them, not the truth about a situation, but what they think the leaders would like to hear, no matter how distant this may be from the real truth.

The adulator does it for selfish reasons — to ingratiate himself with the leader and strengthen his job position, as well as clear the path to promotion.

The only immunity from the flatterer's tongue is personal contact and insistence on examining situations first-hand. It is of the utmost importance that the Prime Minister is doing just that.

We cannot over-emphasise the importance of the Prime Minister visiting the length and breadth of the country and meeting as many people as possible. People all over the country want to meet their leader. Let them be afforded the opportunity to meet him in flesh. It is their right.

The Prime Minister must be a living reality in the minds of his people, and not a mysterious figure whom they can only hear about or see on television. Nobody can interpret him to the people better than himself.

At the same time the people must know that the Prime Minister has vital national duties that inevitably tie him to his desk. He cannot, therefore, be expected to visit all people at all places as a matter of routine.

Leaders are chosen in order to lead, and not to conduct regular referenda at the shake of every dog's tail. Those who think the Prime Minister should visit them regularly must bear with the painful fact that this is just outside the realm of possibility.

ENDING ANTI-WHITE SENTIMENT URGED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 6

[Article by Diana Mitchell: "Anti-White Hangover Must Be Cured"]

[Text] IT is two years since Zimbabwe's warring parties went to Lancaster House. Two years since Mr Ian Smith gave up his foolish pursuit of power at any price and, following the pressures of an unwinnable civil war made his constitutional bow to a British Conservative government.

Not much has been heard from a section of opinion which fits neither the British, nor the black, nor the "Boer" mentality of the UDI years, since that momentous capitulation.

The non-racial white-Rhodesians, the so-called "liberals" who fought against the UDI constitution — members of the RCA (Rhodesia Constitutional Association), the Centre Party, the Rhodesia Party and, currently, the National Unifying Force — have been almost as silent as the guns which finally ended a bloody dispute.

We were given a friendly nod by ZANU (PF) and a relieved wink by old friends in the PF: they knew better than anyone how sincerely we had tried to avert a deadly racial confrontation by hammering on political ears too well-plugged with anti-communist fear propaganda.

Those nationalists who had been able to observe us from their prisons or brief moments at home, had seen how we had been openly accused of being "fellow-travellers, tools, dupes, cranks" and so on, for our pains.

We did not gloat when our old political enemy, the Rhodesian Front was brought down.

We were too worried that our prediction of a forced and hasty handover of power to an unprepared majority, leading to chaos, might still come true.

With our black compatriots we held our breath, shut our eyes and prayed that we should be proved wrong — meanwhile, giving positive support to Mr Robert Mugabe's delicate exercise in reconciliation.

He pulled it off in that first year in a way that might almost have been called a miracle.

Who would have believed that men who had been shooting at each other in one year could be serving in the same forces in the next?

His wisdom in including representatives of the old power group (the RF), as well as his own political competitors, (the PF) and a few useful whites in key positions, helped us all, blacks and white, to breathe again.

We, the white "liberals" were never too pleased with arrangements for "white seats" conceded at Lancaster House.

UNREPRESENTED

We accepted, with regret, that they would go, as ever, to the RF and we would remain unrepresented.

Lately, we have been looking at those 20 seats from an entirely new perspective.

We are appalled at the continued racial slanging matches that go on across the House, but we cannot fail to observe, as the fruits of independence shift more blacks in, and collect all whites, regardless of political history, into the "phasing out" category, that we are as vulnerable as our old adversaries, the Fronters, to be used as scapegoats, should relations in the Assembly become even worse as the country runs head-on into its special Zimbabwean winds of change.

It is for this reason, and because we are devoted to the concept of freedom (in its simplest sense, with no ifs and buts and excuses for a special type of African freedom) that we consider it essential to make an early start in planning for constitutional change in white representation — change it is repeated, not removal of the white contribution in Zimbabwe.

From a standpoint two years on from Lancaster House, it is foolish to believe that we whites will soon go unnoticed about our business, indistinguishable from and accepted as Africans.

We will not be thrust into positions of political authority by a colour-blind policy. Useful individuals will be used to best advantage of the country: but we are too close to the colonial past to be allowed to criticise, even kindly, if we wear a white skin.

Looked at from a narrow perspective, whites have done almost too well out of Lancaster House and reconciliation, but from the broader view they have taken a lot of knocks.

Most have stayed at their posts (for both positive and negative reasons) in the early critical months of independence, and have had to take the upheavals of their lives as a natural consequence of the loss of political power.

They have, in this way, contributed, you might say, to the absence of chaos.

If it is true that blacks were denied all opportunity in important spheres of the economy, before independence, then it is also true that blacks were denied experience in running the economy.

However unequal that economy may have been, it was efficient and capable of generating the wealth needed to rebuild Zimbabwe.

This was obviously recognised by ZANU(PF) or they need not have gone to Lancaster House had they wished to see it completely destroyed.

Controlled change, it seems, is being attempted, working alongside of the old "oppressor". Too much has been said of the "skills" of the whites in this matter, and far too little of a less obvious, but probably more important factor relating to a white presence.

It is their non-African culture which gives whites a useful role in the life of this young African nation.

NEUTRAL

They can, for the time being, hold those positions, free from accusations of "nepotism" and "tribalism" which bedevil the leadership in the distribution of power.

This post-colonial fact of life, the separateness of whites from African tribe or extended family (with the rare exception of the interracial marriage) will not vanish, it cannot be changed overnight.

Zimbabwe has and should continue to make the best possible use of this neutralising factor among loyal and co-operative whites.

It is in the interests of both major racial groups that a significant number of whites should be encouraged to stay.

Some way of removing the old resentment against a white skin (not any longer dominating the system) must be found.

The place to begin, apart from in the heart, is in the House.

MSIPA SAYS COUNTRY COMES BEFORE PARTY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Deputy Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Mr Cephas Msipa, told a rally of the youth wing of ZAPU in Bulawayo yesterday that they must "put country before party".

But he also urged them to work hard to increase ZAPU membership so that the party could win the next election. He assured them that the party leaders were working very hard on this though they got no radio or television coverage at their meetings

On country before party, he told the 200 people gathered in Luveve Beit Hall: "Since Independence things have not been all smooth-going. Everybody knows that was to be expected.

"The very idea of a government of more than one party was fraught with difficulties. We can survive as one government only through give and take. It requires a high sense of responsibility on the part of our leaders, our (ZAPU) president, Mr Nkomo and the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe.

"Tensions there have been, but our moral convictions have kept us together despite problems. This is what happens when you put country before party, when you ask in every situation: 'Is this good for my country?' We no longer take decisions lightly. Dr Nkomo and Mr Mugabe have put country first. This is not to say they have not made blunders. Neither is an angel — but so far they have done very well for our country."

The country and the party were two very important things, he said. "But they are not of equal importance.

"We can do without ZANU-PF. We can do without PF-ZAPU. But we can not do without our country. The disappearance of Zimbabwe would be the disappearance of a nation. Unless you think straight on this issue you will make many blunders," he said. "We can differ on how we run our country. But we can never differ on the need to defend ourselves against foreign aggression."

It was difficult at times to balance the roles of allegiance to country and party. "I have had that difficulty myself," he said.

Then he outlined their role as members of ZAPU. "You have a duty to develop your party: to see that ZAPU grows until we can win the next election."

He said they must not think that because they did not have publicity coverage from radio, television and the newspapers, as ZANU (PF) did, that they could not win the election.

"Consider Muzorewa. He had so much publicity it seemed the sun, the stars and the very trees were saying 'Muzorewa'. But he lost.

"I believe people will make their decision on what the Government does, on what they can see. And the people are not blind. So do not cry that because we do not have the coverage of the mass media we can not win the election."

They would soon hear the party's programme, he said. A big challenge facing the nation was the reconstruction of homes and buildings destroyed during the war.

He called for a show of hands from any who could be willing to go into rural areas during their holidays and work at reconstructing buildings.

When only two hands were raised, he said: "Why can't you go? This is what the youth of the country should be doing. Think about this, and see whether you can not divide yourselves into groups to carry out this work?"

On a one-party state, he said. "There is nothing wrong with this. What could be wrong is how it is to be achieved. There is a danger that in our desire to achieve it we may destabilise the prevailing peace by being clumsy and insensitive.

"ZANU and ZAPU should sit together and discuss the issue freely. When they have agreed, they should say: 'Yes, we will sell it to our followers.' Any other way will bring problems — and we have enough of those already," he said.

WOMEN TO GET CHANCE TO PROVE THEMSELVES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] THE Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, yesterday called on Zimbabwean women to show their menfolk the way to a sound society by forging among themselves a unity cutting across political divisions, colour, race, religion or social status.

"The time has arrived for us to prove them wrong in their belief that we spend most of our time in petty gossip," she said.

Opening a community leaders' workshop organised by her ministry in the Monomatapa Hotel yesterday, Mrs Nhongo said only the country's women had the capacity and potential to bring their menfolk together, to heal the wounds of the past, to forget political differences, and to commit themselves fully to the development of the country.

She told about 500 delegates from all over the country that the success of her ministry depended on the efforts of all.

"Its success would be judged on its achievements in the changes that will take place in the communities as well as in the social, economical and political status of women," she said.

OPPORTUNITY

She added that the creation of the ministry had provided the opportunity women had always craved for in order to prove themselves.

"You can show, as a start, that those divisions that can, and do exist among men will not affect you," she said.

The aim of the workshop, which included women from Government, private and Church organisations, was to enlist support and provide a feedback on its present and future projects.

Mrs Nhongo said her ministry's objectives were to organise, develop and utilise all the available resources such as land, water and manpower so that the people could get all their basic needs from them.

"We aim to encourage programmes of self-reliance and equal and full participation by community members," she said.

She stressed that her ministry was not a battleground for a women-versus-men conflict, but a source of inspiration and unity for both the family and community life.

She said, however, that the Women's Affairs section of her ministry was committed to the uplifting of the status of women in all walks of life.

With that objective in mind, she said, the ministry aimed to examine sex discriminatory laws and to assist legislation that protected the rights of women, and to guarantee that those rights were maintained.

Civil and family practices, as well as cultural values that hindered this process would also be examined, she said.

The ministry intended to set up a national women's organisation with which it would maintain an easy working relationship, and which would also maintain easy communications with the various other women's organisations in the country.

The workshop was also addressed by Mrs E. Gwaunza, the ministry's legal adviser, on the legal status of women.

A spokesman for the ministry said the secretary, Mrs Angeline Makwavarara, her deputy, Dr Sam Agere and the director of Community Services and Women's Affairs, Miss Violet Matani, as well as the whole staff, worked flat out during the last month organising the workshop.

Invitations were sent to over 100 organisations throughout the country to send delegates.

Dignitaries at the opening were the Mayor and Mayoress of Salisbury, Dr and Mrs Gwata, Mrs Ruth Chinamano, MP for Matabeleland and wife of the Minister of Transport, Mr Josiah Chinamano and Mrs Muriel Rosin, president of the National Unifying Force.

MILITARY TRAINING FOR WOMEN PLANNED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 6 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Women will be included in a military-training-for-all plan outlined by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday.

Addressing a huge rally at Amaveni Stadium, Que Que, at the end of his four-day tour of the Midlands, Mr Mugabe said it was necessary for everyone to learn to handle arms in defence of Zimbabwe.

Men and women would receive training in their spare time, but youths, with whom the scheme would start, would be mobilised into special centres.

Education

Besides military training they would continue their education and train in agriculture, carpentry, building and secretarial work.

Mr Mugabe warned employers, black and white, against ill-treating their workers or underpaying them.

The Government was committed to protecting workers against unscrupulous bosses, he said.

"If I know them they will be punished severely."

The Prime Minister said he had heard of some companies refusing to give jobs to ZANU (PF) members telling them to eat their party slogans.

Action would be taken against companies and employers who adopted such tactics.

Assuring workers of higher salaries to give them a better life, Mr Mugabe cautioned them to set some money aside for their old age and against spending too much on drink.

"You should not spend all your money on beer, but on supporting yourselves and your families," he said amid cheers from women supporters.

Throughout his tour Mr Mugabe listened to people's complaints and explained Government policies and programmes.

He was accompanied by Deputy Prime Minister Mr Simon Muzenda, Minister of Industry and Energy Development Dr Simba Makoni, Minister of Home Affairs Mr Richard Hove, the Minister of Local Government and Housing Dr Eddison Zvobgo, Minister of Manpower Planning and Development Dr Frederick Shava, Minister of State in the Office of the Prime Minister Mr Emmerson Munangagwa and Minister of Youth, Sport and Recreation Mr Ernest Kadungure.

SWEDEN PLEDGES $14 MILLION IN AID

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] SWEDEN is allocating about $14 million aid for Zimbabwe's development for the year, July 1981-July 1982, the head of Sweden's international development body, Mr Jan Cedergren, said in Salisbury yesterday.

The assistance would be in the form of a grant, with 20 percent of it tied to purchases from Sweden. The Swedish Government delegation arriving on Monday will discuss the agreement for the aid.

Full terms of the agreement would probably be concluded later this month when the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, visits Sweden, he said.

SIDA was also helping develop Zimbabwe's telecommunications which are being improved to handle Zimbabwe's traffic and increase capacity for international calls.

"Work is expected to begin in January next year. This project is likely to cost about $3-$4 million, which is part of the $14 million assistance grant. This is wholly financed by SIDA," Mr Cedergren said.

The end of this year is also likely to see the implementation of the $10 million microwave project linking Francistown, Bulawayo and Livingstone. This will link Zimbabwe to the pan-African telecommunication system.

Mr Cedergren said the technical specifications were being worked out by authorities in Norway and Sweden, with final decisions being taken in December.

The agency, he said, was supporting a supplementary feeding project for malnourished children.

The scheme mounted in northern, eastern and the southern parts of the country involved teaching mothers how to prepare and grow the ingredients.

He said there were about 100 000 children involved in the feeding scheme.

The agency, Mr Cedergren added, had set aside a special scholarship fund for more than 1 200 refugee children for their secondary education.

SIDA is also helping reconstruct about 2 000 primary schools destroyed during the war. Work on these is being done through the provincial authorities.

Mr Cedergren said the work on these schools was being tackled and was on a self-help basis, with the agency supplying the materials and the local people the labour.

The agency was also mounting health projects. He said 10 clinics were being built with funds from the organisation. Work had already started at Dotito, Mushumbi Pools, near Kotwa and in Omay.

A Swedish delegation, he said, was expected here in 10 days to examine rural telecommunications.

Apart from these projects other Swedish organisations, like the Lutheran World Federation, were building schools and clinics in the Mnene, Manama, Masase and Musume areas. About $800 000 had been set aside for work.

The scheme relied on resources that were locally obtainable, he said. The scheme started last year and has an annual allocation of $800 000.

PRESIDENT: TEACHERS MUST BE RETAUGHT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] IT was necessary to re-educate many in the teaching profession to effect fundamental change in the education system, President Banana said yesterday.

President Banana called for a series of refresher courses for the teaching community.

Speaking at the official closing of the international seminar on education in Zimbabwe — Past, Present and Future —he said the previous colonial system of education was designed to serve imperialism and the settler regime.

"It was tailored to ensure perpetual servitude of the African by the minority settler regime," President Banana told seminar delegates.

The seminar was timely because change in the education system had to be initiated "now and not tomorrow", he said.

"Education must aim at creating an atmosphere where children are not deprived of knowledge of Government programmes."

The seminar yesterday accepted aims and objectives of socialist education advocated by the Minister of Education and Culture, Dr Dzingai Mutumbuka, in his address.

Six recommendations were accepted by the plenary session covering curriculum change, teacher training, structural change, adult education, special priorities and a follow-up.

On curriculum change delegates said it had to be Zimbabwe-[illegible] orientated and that three national languages be included in all schools.

Education should move towards Africa, the Third World and then the rest of the world. Learning with production was also recommended by all groups.

Delegates recommended that examinations be locally based.

Teacher training, delegates felt, had to support curriculum changes because of the new political, technical, scientific and productive orientation.

A unitary system of education, the democratisation of all structures and community evaluation of education were suggested as ways of revamping bureaucratic structures and procedures at all levels.

The seminar called on the immed[illegible] of a mass adult literacy campaign with worker and peasant education linked to production.

It said the literacy campaign had to be followed by continuing education programmes aimed at the consolidation of adult literacy.

Other priorities delegates noted included:

- The education of those who had their education disrupted during the war;
- The education of women; and
- The education of the disabled.

The seminar would be followed by a [illegible] of ideas discussed, at regional, district, school and community level.

KANGAI: MINIMUM PAY ACT TO BE CHANGED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Government is to repeal the present Minimum Wages Act, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said yesterday. In an interview, the minister said he had recommended that the present Minimum Wages Act be changed through Parliament.

"There is going to be a repeal of the Minimum Wages Act. This is quite definite. We have made a number of recommendations as a ministry in this regard. Trade unions and other organisations have made recommendations which the Government is studying."

Mr Kangai warned employers who did not toe the Government's line that his ministry would not hesitate to act against them in the "most vicious manner to make them realise that we really mean business".

The Government was committed to improving the lot of workers in Zimbabwe and any employer who behaved to the contrary would get no sympathy.

He said the workers must be involved in the decisions of a company through their workers' committees so they feel secure.

"Although most employers are responding to our call — there is still a small group of unscrupulous employers who don't have these committees at their places. It is high time that I dealt with such people. They cannot expect any mercy from the Government on this one. This must be made very clear to them. I am going to ruthlessly deal with such people.

"Once Government policy is announced, business people — black or white — are expected to abide by that policy. If they don't, I will take stern action against them."

Mr Kangai warned workers to also abide by the Government's policy of not resorting to strike action. "I will not tolerate it any more.

"People who have their country at heart do not resort to such actions. The country belongs to the people. And what they do must contribute to the reconstruction of their country which has been destroyed by war. Each time people take strike action they cease contributing towards the reconstruction of the country."

"It is a well-known fact that Zimbabwe was destroyed by war and people cannot just go on strike for the sake of it. You are not reconstructing Zimbabwe by taking strike action unnecessarily. We all have the responsibility to reconstruct Zimbabwe."

Mr Kangai said that people in Zimbabwe should sacrifice just as they did during the armed struggle and reconstruct their country. "You are not reconstructing your country when you withdraw your services. We must have the national interest of our country before anything else. This is the type of concept that we must follow."

He said that his ministry was concerned with the recent sporadic strikes in the country.

"This is causing us some concern and we feel that we must take action.

"Because our economy is still developing, our workers must realise that strike action is not the solution. I am not saying they should not complain. But there are channels we have laid down that must be followed before striking. Workers who don't follow those channels are certainly going to find harsh measures from us."

He advised workers to consult their trade unions before resorting to strikes as this was a way of solving disputes.

"I will certainly deal very severely with workers who do not follow our guidelines."

OFFICIAL ORDERED TO GIVE DETAILS OF PM'S FAR EAST TRIP

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] THE Deputy Minister of Transport, Dr Edward Pswarayi, was instructed to answer questions in the Assembly relating to costs of the Prime Minister's tour to the Far East.

Mr Donald Goddard (RF, Lundi) asked what hire charges were levied on Government by Air Zimbabwe in respect of the aircraft used on the Prime Minister's tour and what the total cost of fuel used by Air Zimbabwe on the tour was.

Dr Pswarayi asked whether these questions had to be answered. On being ordered by the Speaker, Mr Didymus Mutasa, to give his reply, he told the Assembly that the fuel had cost $105 008.

On a point of order, Mr Goddard was told to ask his questions again because Dr Pswarayi had answered the second one first.

Dr Pswarayi then told the Assembly that the hire charge to the Government had been $149 320.

He said he would like to add that if the intention behind the questions was to say that the trip had been expensive, he would like to remind the House that it was not possible to visit the Far East "on foot". It was necessary to fly, he said.

Mr Goddard said he wanted to put the deputy minister's mind at rest. He had thought the levy and fuel were "quite cheap".

UFO REPORTEDLY SIGHTED OVER VUMBA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] UMTALI.

AN unidentified flying object has been seen several times in the Vumba.

An object, which at first looked like a star, grew larger and larger and then turned to "look like an orange fluorescent cigar", has been seen several times over Chicamba Dam recently.

A woman living in the Vumba, who has a view into Mozambique, said she first sighted the "thing" about three months ago.

"I had just moved into the house and it was my first experience of an unidentified flying object," she said.

"Then, more recently, I have seen them again — several times last week and again early on Monday.

"The first time I had just gone to bed and turned off the light when I saw this orange glow coming towards me. I was quite frightened."

She said she saw the objects on dark nights, between 2 and 3 am, and had watched them for more than two hours.

"They appear in the shape of a star over Chicamba Dam, coming towards the Vumba. The 'star' grows larger and larger and seems to hover over the dam. Sometimes the object turns at an angle looking like an orange fluorescent cigar. When it turns again it looks like a brilliant star."

Another UFO sighting, by eight people, was in the Weirmouth area on May 14 1980.

Mr Jack Coleridge saw "a triangular set of blue, red and green moving lights", which he studied with binoculars. The lights remained over the area for about 45 minutes before moving higher and further away.

On March 23 that year, a UFO was seen over Selborne factory, in Inyanga. Four people saw the object (which shone light upwards) hover for a few minutes before moving into the clouds, heading west.

KAMBA PREDICTS FIVEFOLD RISE IN UZ ENROLLMENT

Alarming Rate of Growth

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] THE number of students at the University of Zimbabwe is expected to increase fivefold to about 10 000 within the next six years, the Principal and Vice - Chancellor, Professor Walter Kamba, said last week.

He said it was more alarming that the first-year secondary school intake had soared from 20 000 to 100 000 because "we can expect some 10 000 students knocking on the university door in six years".

The university intake was 1 100 students this year. But Professor Kamba warned that it would reach more than 5 000 in the next few years.

"This will be an alarming rate of growth," he said. Urgent expansion plans include a new faculty of veterinary science, mining engineering, metallurgy and others.

All decisions concerning further expansion would be based on the overall priorities for the country, the university and the availability of resources.

Speaking in an interview before his official installation as Principal tomorrow, Professor Kamba said all aspects of extended teaching would be looked into as a matter of urgency.

"The need to provide external study courses is absolutely vital. We hope that in the months to come we will have more information necessary for a decision on distance university education," he said.

He said the Government also regarded distance university education as a matter of priority.

The need for another university would be the Government's decision, he said.

"But my view is that a figure of between 6 000 and 7 000 for this university is about right."

Further Details

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] Professor Walter Joseph Kamba is being officially sworn in today as the first black principal and vice-chancellor of the 23-year-old University of Zimbabwe. He speaks to Mike Overmeyer about the significance of the occasion.

THE University of Zimbabwe plays a crucial role in the development, rapid growth and supply of vital skilled manpower in this country.

It was founded in 1953 as a non-racial institution to serve the then Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

The college opened with 68 students — 60 whites and eight Africans.

Today — the University of Zimbabwe — has 2 240 students, 63 percent of them African.

The university's first black head, Professor Walter Kamba, said recently that 2 240 students did not represent spectacular growth for a singular university, 27 years old.

"The university somehow survived during the years of bitter struggle and isolation," he said at the recent Zimcord conference.

QUESTION: What is the future of the University of Zimbabwe and what does this depend on?

ANSWER: The University of Zimbabwe is the only university of the country. The country's resources in terms of providing university education within Zimbabwe are all invested in this university.

My deep commitment and mission is to ensure that the university makes an effective contribution to the development of the country.

This should be in terms of university education, the country's manpower needs, intellectual leadership and ideas.

It means that the university's activities in teaching and research must be related to the needs of Zimbabwe.

What the university offers must be an encounter with real life. It must try to breach the gap between academic studies and the practical work which students will be faced with once they leave the university.

Overall, the university must be indigenous. It must have an indigenous ethos without being parochial. It must Zimbabweanise in all of its aspects.

As to what the future depends upon, it depends upon a number of complex and inter-related factors. It depends on the commitment of the university as a corporate body and of those individuals who work and study in it, to the broad objectives which I have just articulated.

It also depends on the kind of working arrangements or relationship that will be established between the university and Government.

RESOURCES

Lastly, it will depend on the availability of resources, both financial and human.

In dealing with development as a whole, we rely heavily on communication between the university and Government. After all, what we are seeking to contribute relates to Government policy in broad terms as articulated by the Government itself.

What kind of university can be envisaged after the replacement of the Royal Charter by an Act of the Zimbabwe Parliament?

All I can say in this respect is that I would hope that the Act will create a structure which will ensure and enable the university to play an effective role in national development.

The university must produce independent thinkers with a creativity which will assist in the tackling of the various problems that face the country.

One might point out that the only constant variable in modern society is change.

Change is accelerating at such a rate that a number of major cultural revolutions take place within one's lifetime.

The problem for educators, including the university, is that of designing an educational system for life in a world characterised by continuing change and rapid obsolescence of knowledge.

Can you at this stage talk of expansion plans for the university? What do they look like today?

In order to try and meet the needs of the country the university must expand both in terms of numbers and, more cautiously, in terms of disciplines and its activities.

The total student population this year is about 2 225. Last year it was 1 240. Our intake last year was 800 and this was twice that of the year before.

This year our intake was 1 100 and we expect to grow to some 5 000 students within the next three years.

This is an alarming rate of growth. The future is even more alarming when one bears in mind the fact that the first-year secondary school enrolment shot up from 20 000 to more than 100 000.

It seems that in six years we can expect at least some 10 000 knocking at the door of the university.

This is a frightening rate of growth.

In terms of the range of disciplines we are reasonably broadly covered by the eight faculties of agriculture, arts, commerce and law, education, engineering, medicine, science and social studies.

High on our list of new developments is a Faculty of Veterinary Science. Then we have a number of disciplines such as mining engineering, metallurgy and a number of others under consideration.

Decisions regarding whether or not such other disciplines should be added will be based on the overall priorities within the country and the university and the availability of resources.

As regards extension of the university's activities, there are aspects of providing external teaching which we are looking at as a matter of urgency.

To what capacity will this university have to expand before another is built?

The decision whether a new university is to be created is a matter for Government.

We can advise when we are requested to do so. But my view is that once we have got to the figure of six or seven thousand this university will be just about right.

At that stage there would be a need to create a separate university. This, however, is really a matter for Government to determine.

What is the current distribution of students among the various disciplines?

I emphasised at the outset of this interview that the university must relate itself to the needs of the country.

The National Manpower Survey which is being carried out right now is to indicate to the country and to the university what these needs are likely to be.

It is necessary for the university to emphasise areas consistent and in harmony with the needs of the country.

It would be a misuse of resources and a distortion of the role of the university in a developing country like ours if we were to produce a large number of students in areas where they would not be able to make a contribution to the development of the country.

Therefore, we will deal with the distribution of students among the various disciplines.

If students decide on courses not in the priority of the country's needs they might be able to do so under their own steam.

The university is not a luxury institute and the country cannot afford a luxury institute.

Do you see the university becoming a centre of development studies in southern Africa, having cross-course relations with universities in other countries?

To ensure that the university is a university of Zimbabwe. That it is integrated into the community of Zimbabwe, not as in the past when it was a university in the country but not of the country.

For the development along these lines we need the support of all Zimbabweans and especially those who study and work here.

A great deal depends on how we can develop in future.

I have no doubt that if we realise the broad objectives towards being effective in the ways I have indicated the university would certainly stand out as an important centre of learning in the region.

We certainly hope to co-operate with our sister universities through an exchange of ideas, staff and other ways still needing time to explore.

I hope that in the next year or so I will be meeting some of my colleagues in the region.

The conference that started this week will serve a useful purpose in this regard. Colleagues from various African countries are here. This will give us an opportunity, not only during the conference itself, to discuss the problems of common interest.

Define your role as principal and vice-chancellor of the university?

As principal and vice-chancellor I have a duty to guide the university in its efforts to achieve the objectives I have articulated.

What is the importance of students having to stay in residence on campus?

The University of Zimbabwe is essentially a residential university.

This is mainly because there isn't residential accommodation available for students within a short distance of the campus.

It means that university students are either in residence or live long distances from the university and have to face the enormous transport problems.

They also face the difficulties associated with their environment. Conditions have to be conducive to working properly and efficiently.

It seems that the need for residential accommodation at the university or within a short distance of the university will remain in future.

If conditions are not conducive to study this is likely to affect a student's performance.

What is needed are conditions which will assist the student to work to the best of his ability.

What is the attitude toward student refugees from South Africa and Namibia coming here?.

This is really a question for Government on behalf of the nation since the university is a national institution.

Investment and resources provided to the university are for the purpose of contributing to the national needs. I think it would be necessary at some point in the future for Zimbabwe to decide on its attitude towards refugees.

But the university is under such enormous pressure for places for Zimbabweans. It would create great difficulties if we were to deny them places in order to make them available to non-Zimbabweans.

This is an aspect which is critical to us.

We are getting to a point where the numbers will be beyond our capacity.

PM: STUDENTS ARE COUNTRY'S SERVANTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] African universities must equip graduates to take their full part in solving their nation's problems and avoid turning out an individualistic elite cut off from society, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, urged last night.

Opening the international conference on the role of the university and its future in Zimbabwe, the Prime Minister said students had to regard themselves as the people's servants-in-waiting.

The university would fail the nation if it turned out elitists and the university had to realise it must do more than train, it must impart an appropriate and relevant orientation.

"We must at all costs ensure that the young women and men who come out of our institutions of learning have a socialist, people-centred orientation.

"Individualists who put themselves first and society after, and would rather society served them first, are an anathema to the society we wish to build."

'Rethink'

Mr Mugabe said African universities which in the past had hovered in the outer space of foreign ideas and practices should now re-enter the African atmosphere.

"We insist that our own university shall convert itself from a university in Zimbabwe to a genuine and authentic University of Zimbabwe.

"Its structures and procedures must be retionalised and infused with a democratic content. Its curriculum, while not confined to, must necessarily lay considerable emphasis on our national realities in all their diversity and interconnections.

"It must equip its graduates with the necessary intellectual tools to enable them to take their full part in the resolution of the problems we face as a nation."

The Prime Minister said that besides the function of teaching and acting as a repository of knowledge a university traditionally had a research role--but this should be socially relevant research.

He said a university operated within the context of a society and a culture and was strongly influenced by its history, a history of colonialism in the case of Zimbabwe.

Sometimes the baggage of the past was so great that a radical or revolutionary change presented itself as the only strategy for overcoming the weight of the past.

GOVERNMENT TAKEOVER OF NEW HOSPITALS THREATENED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 pp 1, 7

[Text] THE Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, yesterday delivered a thinly veiled threat to the planners of three proposed private hospitals in Salisbury that the Government could take over their facilities.

The minister was answering questions in the Assembly tabled during private members' question time from Mrs Julia Zvobgo (ZANU-PF, Midlands), who asked what the minister was doing to ensure that his ministry was not "diverted" from its policies of socialist medical care.

The minister said that statements made recently by enterprises announcing their intention to build private hospitals were "in direct contradiction with known and publicised Government policy on the question", and were "presumably issued as acts of defiance" to Government's policy.

At the end of his lengthy reply, the minister stated: "The Government has the duty to take into public ownership any facilities which it deems to be operating against the interests of the mass of the people.

"I want to give a word of advice to the protagonists of the private hospital projects. They should come and talk to us at this stage. They will find we are reasonable people.

"Our intention is not to be punitive, but the economics of the situation demands that we take a firm line on this question.

"Come and talk to us, and we will work something out.

"But if they do not, and they pursue their objectives as a direct challenge to Government policy, I must remind them that this House has the powers of legislation," the minister said.

Recently two private organisations — the National Association of Medical Aid Societies and the Avenue Clinic under a consortium of black doctors announced they intended to open private hospitals.

Dr Ushewokunze said there was a third organisation that intended doing the same but he did not name it.

The minister said it was "planned" that the three hospitals would be subsidised by Government, though indirectly.

This was through taxation, whereby contributions to medical aid societies were made tax deductible.

The three organisations intended raising capital for their projects from secured loans from companies, to be repaid through medical aid society contributions. Once the loans were repaid, control of the hospitals would devolve to corporations who were to put up 15 percent of funds by buying shares in the projects.

"Since under the present system these contributions (to medical aid societies) are allowable against tax, the Government would be making an indirect contribution to the development costs to the tune of some $5 million," he said.

"Private medicine is a luxury," he went on. "It should not be tax deductible, and indeed it could be subject to sales tax."

At current rates sales tax on private medical care could raise $3 750 000.

Removing all Government subsidies — direct and indirect — from private medical care would raise nearly $17 million a year in revenue for the Treasury.

"I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Finance, could find good use for this money and he might even smile kindly on my ministry and devote at least some of it to the rural health service."

Another subsidy to private health care was in the fees charged to private patients in Government hospitals, which were a quarter or a third of the actual cost.

Removal of this subsidy would raise nearly $5 million

Dr Ushewokunze gave details about the difference between Government medical care available in the urban centres and the rural areas.

He said nearly four-fifths of the 300 doctors practising privately in Zimbabwe were based either in Bulawayo or Salisbury and 90 percent of specialists were in the two cities.

Beneficiaries of medical aid societies received health care worth $145 per head a year, while the average annual health expenditure by the ministry in the rural areas ranged from $3 a head to the "outrageously low figure of 50c".

The three proposed private hospitals would collectively involve some $13.5 million in capital investment and $2.5 million in foreign currency.

The diagnostic and therapeutic practices in these hospitals were likely to be "very expensive" and would act as a drain on the limited currency allocation for pharmaceutical and other products.

The three projects would also absorb about 300 nurses.

"The hospitals would irretrievably concentrate our ultra scarce specialist doctors in private palaces for the rich, just as we are hoping to attract them to serve where they are most needed in the national service," he added.

Mr Rowan Cronje (RF, Central) said the minister's figures comparing health care available in the cities with that in the rural areas were "superficial".

People in rural areas needing intensive medical car were referred to the cities, he said, as the minister had himself testified when he noted in answer to an earlier question that proof of the lower levels of DDT in the presence of mothers milk from women in the communal areas was shown by comparing the milk obtained from mothers in Harare hospital with that from mothers in the Lady Chanceller Maternity Home.

He also said that with the country's foreign currency situation, intensive medical care could not be spread around the rural areas because of the cost of facilities needed.

One cannot simply compare the cost of rural and urban treatment because of the nature of the treatment," Mr Cronje said.

Dr Ushewokunze replied it was the ministry's intention to share the country's limited medical facilities around the country.

He said Mr Cronje's questions demonstrated the kind of mentality that has been pervading this nation for decades. Mr Cronje also was part of the system "which I am seeking to destroy".

Mr Geoffrey York (RF, Mazoe/Mtoko) asked the minister if private medicine would be free from his interference if it became completely private, and Dr Ushewokunze replied that as Minister of Health he was entrusted with ensuring the health of all the country's people.

"If indeed the need would arise for all of us to interfere, as you put it, we will certainly do so."

MVENGE: MINIMUM PAY TO BE RAISED SOON

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] MINIMUM wages will be raised before the end of the year and price controls will soon be introduced on a wide range of goods, the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Moses Mvenge, said here.

Speaking at a rally in Beitbridge at the weekend, he told people complaining of the failure of minimum wages to meet the rising cost of living that a new minimum was in the pipeline and would be implemented before the end of the year.

More price controls would soon be introduced to ensure the benefits from minimum wages would not be eroded by the ever-increasing cost of goods.

These controls would be imposed even after some or all of the subsidies, costing the Government about $120 million a year, were removed, said Mr Mvenge.

The prices of consumer goods would be controlled and the public should scrutinise all prices before buying the article.

Price inspectors would soon be deployed into rural areas to enforce control regulations and he reminded outcners that it was illegal not to display the maximum prices permitted by the Government.

Mr Mvenge also announced that the Government would soon take punitive action against all second-hand and used-car dealers who tried to sabotage the recently announced price control regulations.

Used cars

Since the Government announced the price controls on second-hand and used cars some dealers had hidden vehicles on sale in a bid to give the Government a false picture of the demand and supply situation, he said.

These dealers were thinking they would force the Government to remove the price controls so they could profiteer from the unrealistic prices they wanted.

Mr Mvenge reassured the people that the Government would not go back on these regulations and, if anything, such car dealers would be punished.

"We are giving such dealers a short time to relax then we will jump in on them and tell them to close down if they continue to try to cheat the Government," he said.

He also criticised dealers for demanding trade-ins when selling cars to prospective buyers saying that all people had a right to buy without a trade-in.

He urged people living in the Limpopo Valley to form vigilante groups so as to help each other detect the enemy. They were living in a very sensitive area where security awareness was vital.

But such awareness would not be produced until vigilante groups were formed and people helped each other in identifying the enemy, he said.

The country needed a lot of foreign currency to develop its industry and economy but it was surprising that some people chose to further their personal goals going down south, bringing in goods and selling them to the Zimbabwean people at a very inflated price.

He discouraged women from taking frequent organised trips into South Africa saying that apart from the foreign currency issue the trips also posed a security risk to both the women and the state.

"It is not very safe on your side as lots of things happen down there and you could also be conveying some security information to the dissidents we know are in that country," he told them.

ZVOBGO CHECKS INTO CHITUNGWIZA FIRINGS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 6 Sep 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] THE Minister of Local Government and Housing, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said he would investigate allegations of witch-hunts in the Chitungwiza Urban Council, reported to have led to the dismissal of a number of employees.

Twenty - six security guards employed by the council were reported to have been dismissed recently following an alleged witch-hunt for employees who worked for former governments, and those suspected of sympathising with political parties other than ZANU (PF).

Dr Zvobgo said: "I have no comment to make until I have had time to investigate the allegations."

Four disgruntled senior council officials themselves members of ZANU-(PF), who declined to be named for fear of losing their positions, confirmed the sackings and said the witch-hunt was continuing.

They said the 26 security men, who guarded beerhalls and other council property, were summarily dismissed on July 31, and given a month's pay in lieu of notice.

The council, they said, was at present busy weeding out employees suspected of harbouring sympathies with other parties, even if they carried ZANU (PF) membership cards.

More mature members of the council had disapproved of the witch-hunt during a council debate, but were shouted down by the "young radicals", they said.

Before the sackings the security guards were questioned about their former employment in the previous governments, the army and the police, and also about their political allegiance.

The four officials said the former council treasurer, Mr Jbu Rooney, had resigned because of the arrogance of the new council.

The chairman of the Chitungwiza Urban Council, Mr Robert Kambeu, said in a brief telephone interview that the security guards were dismissed because they were pensioners.

However, Mr Rishon Rushwaya, chairman of the council's staffing committee responsible for appointments and dismissals, said they were fired because of inefficiency.

He said: "An employee gets sacked only for inefficiency and nothing further. We don't employ or sack anyone on the basis of a party ticket, but on the basis of his suitability for the particular job."

He added: "We have no such thing as anyone being sacked to create a position for another person. Instead, we abide by the Prime Minister's policy of reconciliation and do not practise any recrimination."

Meanwhile, two employees of the St Mary's Board, a component of the Chitungwiza Urban Council, were sacked after another alleged witch-hunt for workers suspected of being members of other political parties.

They are Mrs Elizabeth Nyakwava, a nursery school teacher for eight years, and Mrs Eninia Kasaira, an adult literacy teacher for 14 years, in the St Mary's area of Chitungwiza.

Said Mrs Kasaira: "I was summoned on August 6 to the office of the secretary / treasurer of the board, Mr Edward Madlazi, and told my services were being terminated with immediate effect. I was speechless with shock.

"Mr Madlazi told me he was as shocked as I was about the sacking, but could not explain why. He said he had received instructions from the board chairman, Mr Paul Mutendi, to tell me that I was being dismissed immediately."

Mrs Kasaira said she was told later by a board official that she had been reported as having given drinking water to members of a political party during a recent rally in the area.

"As a member of ZANU (PF), I reported the matter to the chairman of my cell who in turn wrote a letter of protest to Mr Mutendi, asking to be told why I had been sacked since I was a party member. The letter has not been answered," she said.

She added: "I am worried about what will now happen to my literacy classes due to start again when schools open on Tuesday.

"They cannot give my classes to just anyone. They require specialist teaching."

Mrs Nyakwava said she had been dismissed in the same manner as that of Mrs Kasaira.

Mr Mutendi refused to explain the sackings. "I have nothing to explain. These people have been dismissed, and that is that."

The four officials said, however, that as members of ZANU (PF), they were worried that the trend might harm the party.

"When you sack a man from his job because he doesn't belong to your party, you have lost him for good," they said.

Expressing the hope that the party leadership would put a stop to the practice, they added: "We need friends, not enemies. One day we may have to call on the people we are sacking to vote for us. How will they react?"

BULAWAYO FIRM HOPES TO MINT AFRICA'S COINS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 7

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

A BULAWAYO firm, the Livingstone Mint, hopes to spend up to $5 million on a new mint that will provide the facilities to make the coinage for most of the African states.

The project, due to start in April, is subject to approval by the Government's project committee.

Mr Paul Elmes, managing director, said yesterday the new mint would be equal to the most modern in the world. The plant and equipment alone would cost about $3 million.

"I have visited various mints in Europe and the one we will be setting up is similar to the new Hamburg mint. There is also the likelihood that we will have some form of association with a West German firm, which has the technicians and expertise.

"We are presently looking for a new site and drawing up the building plans," he said.

It was going to be a "tremendously exciting programme", he said, particularly for a private firm, and it would be one that would make it a big prestige project for the Government.

The firm's staff of 70 would be increased, and extensive training programmes for local people would go on for several years.

"There isn't another mint in Africa, outside South Africa, and we believe we could provide the facilities, including the manufacture of tools and dies, to handle all coinage orders from Africa, which presently go overseas.

"There is a lot of business in this field, but we have to go out and get it," he said. "Some preliminary work in acquainting other African states with what they could do had already been done".

He said President Nyerere of Tanzania and the Zimbabwean Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, had visited the mint and were aware of its potential.

Mr Elmes said that a month before work started on the new mint, the firm would hold a minting exhibition at its factory on London Road.

CURRENCY PINCH SLOWS RADIO, TV PRODUCTION

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 6 Sep 81 p 3

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

RADIO and television manufacturers in Zimbabwe cannot cope with demand because of limited government exchange allocations.

Fewer radios and television sets were being made in Zimbabwe because of the scarcity of vital electrical components, it was claimed by the three major manufacturers — Supersonic, Zimbabwe Electronics Corporation and World Radio Systems — last week.

They were responding to a statement from the Minister of Information and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira in Parliament last month when he said demand outstripped supply.

"All the second-hand dealers in radios and television sets are completely sold out and there are no radios and televisions available in the city," the minister said during committee of supply debate.

"We are now negotiating with two companies that want to manufacture radio and television sets because they (the present manufacturers) cannot with demand.

As a result of this statement the Association of Zimbabwe Radio and Television Manufacturers called a meeting here on Friday and placed an advertisement in the Salisbury and Bulawayo newspapers denying the minister's charges that they were not able to cope with the demand.

The association said the shortage of radios and televisions was due to the restrictions laid down by the Government on the number of sets which could be sold on the local market.

It added that the output capacity of the local manufacturers would satisfy the total increasing demand if Government restrictions would allow.

The meeting on Friday discussed the predicament and resolved to make representations soon to the Government.

"We don't want other businesses to enter the industry when there are three of us who can cope," said a spokesman for the association after the meeting.

A Supersonic spokesman said: "We have the capacity to produce as many sets as needed if we were allowed to import the electrical components."

With a shortage of import licences fewer components were being brought into the country and that meant fewer locally made radios and televisions.

Supersonic, he said, could manufacture four to five times more than the present capacity and this, coupled with the increased production of the other two firms, would quite easily match the increasing demand.

The foreign currency situation was made worse because the three manufacturers had to share the allocation which invariably led to them working at a very low rate.

About 3 000 people were employed in the radio and television manufacturing industry and although there was no danger of retrenchment yet, all three companies believed that this would come if the foreign currency allocations did not improve.

A spokesman at ZEC said his company could produce 10 times more than at present, "but our hands are tied.

"And in spite of this we have kept our staff, although this is proving costly."

A WRS spokesman said the foreign currency allocations had been "less than adequate and the continuation of a low level of foreign exchange might have a drastic effect on the radio and television industry".

SERIOUSNESS OF FUEL CRISIS 'UNKNOWN'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 6

[Editorial: "How Bad Is It?"]

[Text] THE petrol position in Zimbabwe is unsettling and unsatisfactory for suppliers and users.

The Government has admitted to transport problems holding up supplies, but how serious the situation really is and how much is caused by panic buying on the part of the public, is unknown.

For days now, motorists have not known what to expect from filling stations. Some have run out of petrol — as they have also been running out of diesel — and put up "no petrol" signs. Others have rationed customers in differing degrees.

It is unfortunate, but it is human nature, that many people knowing of a shortage, or a possible shortage, will stock up what they can afford or what they can get hold of. And this makes the shortage worse.

Zimbabweans all hope that it will never again be necessary to introduce a costly and complicated rationing system.

If the position is serious enough, and is likely to continue for some time, restraints could be introduced — filling stations could close for part of the weekend, and appeals could be made to motorists not to travel more than is absolutely necessary.

So far the Government has been vague. If supplies are not expected to improve soon — in the next few days — it should come out with the facts. When the public is not put sufficiently in the picture it is not surprising that people have not acted more responsibly since the rumours first started.

GARAGES CUT SALES IN FUEL CRISIS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

A DRASTIC shortage of petrol due to a lack of transport has led to self-imposed rationing by city garages. Some petrol pumps have run dry because of delivery delays while others have been restricted to only a third of their capacity.

A few garages face the threat of having to close down unless the situation improves within a week, the Herald found in a snap survey yesterday.

Limited garage stocks have been spread to last longer by a strict, self-imposed rationing system allowing one, five, 10 or 20 litres a customer, depending upon the garage.

At least two garages had shut their pumps for more than 24 hours since Thursday. Promised supplies would arrive only next week, they were told.

Others stopped selling fuel to casual customers, rationed regular buyers and gave priority to essential service companies buying on account.

In most cases shortages were due to a lack of delivery transport. But when tankers arrived, a maximum of 5 000 litres were delivered.

Garage owners said if all customers were allowed the petrol they wanted, stocks would run out in less than a day.

"Big business and essential services need petrol. So we have had to be very careful in distributing the little we have," the manageress of Matthews Service Station in Charter Road, Mrs I. Willis said.

She said the shortage was due also to a spin-off increase in demand since the "tremendous rush" for fuel amid rumours last week that rationing would be introduced.

Whiting Service Station in Victoria Street ran out on Wednesday but a consignment arrived yesterday. The manager, Mr Harry Stubbs, said about the limited 5 000 litres: "It's better than nothing."

Mr Tony Osborne, owner of Trueline Service Station in Victoria Street, has no petrol. He had been promised that orders would arrive only next week.

"I'm keeping on my attendants only because the shortage is not due to their fault. But if the situation doesn't improve by next week, I will have to close shop.

"The only reason why my petrol lasted was because I allowed a maximum of $3 worth a customer before we ran out," Mr Osborne said.

Our Bulawayo correspondent writes: While most service stations in the city and eastern suburbs said yesterday they had fuel but in varying amounts, garages in the western suburbs said they had no fuel at all.

One garage owner in the western suburbs said: "We have nothing at all and we are wondering what is happening."

Another said he had run out of fuel on Thursday morning.

In the city centre most of the service stations said they had fuel but most of them were rationing. The most a driver could buy was 20 litres, and the least five litres.

PM LAMBASTS GRAIN, COTTON BOARDS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, yesterday launched a scathing attack on the Grain Marketing Board and the Cotton Marketing Board for failing to buy maize and cotton from peasant farmers.

He ordered the two organisations to stop discrimination and buy all the maize and cotton produced by the peasant farmers without delay.

Addressing rallies at Nembudziya and District centre in Gokwe, he warned that if there were still officials in the two organisations with Republican Front mentality they would be booted out.

"Failure to buy the crop which we asked the people to produce was not only unfair but a waste of their efforts."

He gave the warning after hearing complaints from the branch, district and provincial party officials, who told him that the GMB and the CMB were refusing to buy their maize and cotton.

An irate Prime Minister told cheering thousands of people that he would personally ensure that what the people had produced would be cleared as soon as possible. He said he was very disappointed that after all the hard work the people had done, to produce the crops, they had not been bought.

Mr Mugabe condemned nepotism among Government and party officials. He said he had received reports that some officials had given their relatives more fertiliser than others, which had been supplied by the Government.

He urged the people to report such officials so that action could be taken against them.

The Prime Minister said the Zimbabwe National Army would be strengthened because of a threat to South Africa. "We still have enemies among us and we have to prepare ourselves."

Mr Mugabe said South Africa did not want to see peace and stability in Zimbabwe because it would inspire black South Africans to fight for their independence. He said the army should be loyal to the Government and not to individuals.

He warned that if there were some troops who wanted to be dissidents they would be dealt with accordingly.

On unity the Prime Minister said ZANU (PF) was a party for everyone. There was no discrimination. He said there should be one voice in the Government because there was only one Government and one Prime Minister.

He urged the district councils and party officials to co-operate in mapping out priorities for their areas. He urged all the people to work hard so that Zimbabwe does not become a begging nation.

He told the district councillors and party officials that all the services the Government was providing were for all Zimbabweans irrespective of their political affiliations, regions and tribes. He said nepotism should end in the Government and the people's lives because there was no tribalism or regionalism during the war.

"We want new life where there is co-operation between the Government and the people," he said.

During his tour of Gokwe the Prime Minister was accompanied by the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda, the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, the Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Frederick Shava, and the Minister of Youth, Sport and Recreation, Mr Ernest Kadungure, Members of Parliament, senior Government and party officials.

Today, Mr Mugabe will visit Que Que, where he will meet ZISCO management and address a rally at Amaveni stadium.

NORMAN PRAISES SMALL FARMERS' COTTON OUTPUT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] THE Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, yesterday officially opened a new depot of the Cotton Marketing Board built this year at Mt Darwin at a total cost of $100 000.

Addressing farmers at the open day, the senator said this was in line with policy adopted by the CMB and the Grain Marketing Board to provide depots in all rural areas.

The Mt Darwin cotton depot was one of the five new marketing centres opened this year. Another four or five would be established next year.

"I have been extremely pleased and gratified at the large increase of cotton in the small sector," he said. "If we maintain the present rate of expansion, I believe we have to give serious consideration to establishing new ginning facilities."

Although in recent years there had been an increase in the use of cotton by the textile industry in Zimbabwe, Senator Norman said 60 percent of the crop was still being exported.

It was imperative to stick to the high standards which had served farmers well in the past if Zimbabwe was to maintain its leading position on the world market, which was saddled with a surplus of the produce, said the senator.

On the present transport and fuel problems, he was satisfied that "all the crop will be in before the onset of the rains.

"I see no reason why farmers should not be able to increase their productivity to earn greater returns," he said. "We are continually reviewing the price and hopefully we will be able to improve this next year."

Senator Norman urged farmers to form co-operatives as experience had shown that it was easier to discuss with an organised group than with individuals.

"Remain confident in your industry," he told the farmers. "Remain confident in your Government."

Mr Joseph Kaparadza, MP for Mashonaland Central, called on Senator Norman to impose curbs on prices charged by transport hauliers taking farmers' produce to the marketing depots.

He also said serious consideration should be given to the need to increase the allocation of fuel to the only privately owned garage serving the Mount Darwin area.

The recently formed Munhumutapa Chamber of Commerce for the small farming sector had since noted that 30 000 empty bags were needed now to enable farmers to move their produce.

PLAN TO BOOST DAIRY INDUSTRY REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] THE dairy industry in Zimbabwe is to be developed at a total cost of $40 million over the next four years in a bid to regain self-suffiency in milk products, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Dr Swithun Mombeshora, said yesterday.

He was addressing farmers at the opening of the three-day agricultural show of the Gatooma-Hartley Society, which ends today.

The programme for the dairy industry includes:

- Provision for the establishment of a milk collection system serving all farmers.
- The development of three intensive dairy schemes for small-scale farmers supplying milk to the Dairy Marketing Board.
- The creation of milk collection centres in the peasant sector.

"It is hoped that these measures will enable Zimbabwe to regain its self-sufficiency in dairy products," said Dr Mombeshora. "This will require a doubling in milk production over the next decade."

He said the DMB planned to establish two new factories to accommodate this "considerable" growth in the industry.

One of the factories would be built in Gatooma at a cost of $2.6 million, and the Agricultural and Rural Development Authority was preparing to make a feasibility study of one of the dairy schemes, to be located in the same area.

Most of the resources for the projects would come from Zimcord funds.

Conex, he said, had already started making plans for one of the resettlement schemes to be established west of Hartley.

Dr Mombeshora praised commercial farmers for producing 90 percent of the agricultural output, and assured them that the Government appreciated this.

STEP UP CATTLE SALES, PEASANT RANCHERS URGED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] THE Government will not hesitate to take stern measures against reactionary demands of some farmers who refused to sell cattle to the Cold Storage Commission, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Dr Swithun Mombeshora, warned here yesterday, according to the Zimbabwe Information Service.

Addressing a ZANU (PF) rally at Magunje business centre, Urungwe, Dr Mombeshora said the beef shortage was being made worse by some farmers who withheld their animals.

He said he would not kneel to the farmers or bow to their "reactionary" demands.

"The Government will not hesitate to take further action against such people," he said.

Dr Mombeshora appealed to rural people to feed their livestock by proper and modern methods and then to sell them to the Cold Storage Commission.

"The current contribution of rural farmers to the beef industry is not good enough. Peasants must now discard the idea that cattle are only a source of security and realise they are money-earners," he said.

Dr Mombeshora said that the Government was looking into the composition and policies of the Cold Storage Commission.

"The commission was giving good breeds to farmers in the commercial areas. This has to be extended to rural areas," he said.

He assured the people that more transport would be available to the areas to handle the bumper harvest. "It is believed 80 000 bags of maize are still lying in the area, especially Urungwe," he said.

Dr Mombeshora appealed also to the transport owners not to overcharge for moving crops.

Dr Mombeshora had been told by some people at the rally that some transport operators were charging up to $4 a bag.

On the acquisition of land, Dr Mombeshora told the rally that the Government was aware of the shortage of good land for peasants. He said priority for this had been given to Zimbabweans who had left the country during the war and had returned as refugees.

The Government had also given priority to those refugees who were squatting in urban areas. The Government would resettle those who had an urgent need in rural areas, he said.

Speaking at the same rally, the Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, Mr Robson Manyika, appealed to people to respect the national army. — Ziana.

BRIEFS

FARMING REVIEW--The Agricultural Marketing Authority has compiled a comprehensive economic review of the agricultural industry's 1978/79 growing season and 1979/80 marketing period. The authority's chief economist, Mr Bill Lacey, said last week that this was the first time the review had been made available to the public. Although the industry's activities had been recorded annually since 1967, sanctions and other factors had compelled the authority to treat it as a classified document. The review was primarily for the Ministry of Agriculture, but Mr Lacey said it was invaluable to banks, and agencies, researchers, statisticians, extension workers, property dealers and transport groups, plus those interested in the industry's performance. Mr Lacey said: "The review goes into history, and the period covered was plagued with drought." Copies are available from the authority's librarian for a fee. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 3]

MINISTER MISQUOTED--The Ministry of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni, was incorrectly reported by the Zimbabwe Broadcasting Corporation in a report monitored and published by THE HERALD as having said the petrol situation was not critical and there would be no rationing. The minister actually said there was diesel rationing but no official petrol rationing. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 3]

RAILWAY BOARD--Bulawayo--An editorial in the Railway Review, the official journal of the National Union of Railwaymen, castigates the Railway Board as "an anachronism" and says: nobody wants it. "One wonders that a body of men can meet for one day a month to manage the affairs of the railways," the article says. "It appears that the Railway Board decides on many matters, and that the railway management have to be looking over their shoulders all the time while attempting to run the railways. "The management are perfectly capable of running the railways and should not be beholden to people who would not know the front from the back of a 15th class Garratt locomotive." The reason for the union's ire is that after protracted negotiations for improved pension benefits, conducted with the board by the contributory fund trustees on behalf of three trade unions (NUR, AEU RALE), benefits granted fall considerably short of those sought. On the board's refusal to distribute the major part of an acturial surplus in increased benefits, the writer says: "The board wishes to maintain a reserve of $13 000 000 in the fund for a 'rainy day'. The board, it seems, expects a thunderstorm or a flood." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 3]

PARTY CO-OPS--Bulawayo. The Government is not going to step in to help, financially or otherwise, any co-operatives that are [words indistinct] party lines, the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, told a rally at Gwanda yesterday. If all political parties in the country went around trying to form party-backed co-operatives then the whole country would be thrown into chaos and have no peace, he said. He also dispelled reports that the Government did not have funds to buy farms for resettlement, saying that physical planning problems had delayed the buying of farms. "These problems are now being ironed out and we will start buying farms now," he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 1]

SEVEN-LITRE FUEL LIMIT--Salisbury petrol stations felt the fuel pinch even harder yesterday, as some sold out completely and others rationed customers to only seven litres. And some suburban garages had to introduce rationing for the first time yesterday while the better-off garages limited customers to 20 litres each. Others allowed essential-service companies a maximum of 10 litres per vehicle. In the city centre several filling stations depleted their supplies completely, offering motorists only oil and water. But at one Msasa station there were no restrictions whatsoever since it had received a full load of supplies on Friday. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 1]

STATE WAGES--The Treasury was examining the issue of salaries in the entire civil service in the light of the loss of staff attracted to the private sector, the Deputy Minister of Finance, Dr Oliver Munyaradzi, said in the Assembly. The point was raised during debate on the allocation of $1 008 000 for the audit bureau of the Ministry of Finance by Mr Richard Cartwright (RF, Hatfield) who asked whether the staff situation in the audit bureau had improved or deteriorated. Dr Munyaradzi said the ministry was "fully aware" of the situation where better salaries in the private sector were causing not only the audit bureau, but the civil service in general to lose often well-qualified staff. Salaries were thus being examined, but, he said, "I am afraid we will have to live with the situation as it is" until the examination was complete. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Sep 81 p 1]

SWEDISH DELEGATION--A three-man Swedish Government delegation arrived in Salisbury yesterday for talks on a multi-million dollar bilateral agreement. The head of the delegation, Mr Tom Tschering, who is also the director of Sweden's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, said the programme concentrated mainly on rural development, with particular emphasis on education. The discussions on the $14 million aid to Zimbabwe for the period from July this year to July 1982 would be held with officials from the Ministry of Economic Planning and Development, Mr Tschering said. Mr Tschering is accompanied by Mr Henrik Salander, also from the Swedish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and Mr Ulf Rundin, the divisional head of the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA), which is responsible for Swedish aid projects. The agreement is to be signed this month. "We hope to visit some areas we are financing, but primarily our task is to finance and discuss various programmes. We will also hold talks with other ministries. The topics listed are broad," Mr Tschering said. The delegation, which leaves on Friday, was met by the Swedish Ambassador, Mr Bo Heineback, and the head of SIDA in this country, Mr Jan Cedergren. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Sep 81 p 7]

BANKS PLANNED--The Zimbabwe Banking Corporation would soon open a branch in Sanyati and it was hoped another branch would be opened in Chitungwiza later, said the chairman of the corporation, Mr C. G. Tracey, when he addressed farmers at the open day of the Cotton Marketing Board depot in Mount Darwin yesterday. Replying to complaints voiced by farmers that they were unable to cash their cheques in the area, Mr Tracey, who is also the CMB chairman, said it was being hoped that growth points to be set up would provide banking facilities of their own. He said that next season all cotton growers would be switching from one variety of Alba to another of the same strain which had over the past four years proved that it yielded better. The registration exercise, Mr Tracey said, had been stepped up to ensure that all growers would have their cards next year. Cotton depots at Nemangwe and Sanyati would be expanded to cope with demand, said Mr Tracey, adding that competition could be introduced next year to generate more interest among cotton growers. IMPORTERS URGED--Zimbabwe importers are still not using the Mozambique ports as much as they could and rail wagons are still returning empty to Zimbabwe after unloading valuable exports. The chief executive of Zimbabwe Marine, Mr George Pitt, told a Kenyan trade delegation in Salisbury yesterday that his organisation was encouraging overseas suppliers to ship through Mozambique to take advantage of the easier transport. Also, the two ports were Zimbabwe's natural outlet to the sea and for the East African trade were the logical choice. The traffic manager (eastern) for the National Railways of Zimbabwe, Mr Alex Patman, said an average of 250 wagons of steel, 86 of sugar and 86 of asbestos were sent to the Mozambique ports each week. Depending on available traffic, principally fertiliser and car assembly kits at present, many of these trucks could come back empty. As everyone knew, locomotives were in short supply in Zimbabwe and using them to haul empty wagons unnecessarily made the problem worse. Mr Pitt said the Mozambique authorities acknowledged there were problems at the ports, especially lack of skilled middle management, but efforts were being made to overcome the problem. KANGAI PRAISES YUGOSLAVS--Yugoslavia's self-management socialism is very impressive, avoiding the pitfalls of exploitation and bureaucracy, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said on Thursday. The minister returned from Belgrade on Wednesday after representing Zimbabwe at a conference of the Non-Aligned Movement. "Their theory is that the best way of establishing socialism is to begin with self-management and there is no doubt they have been successful. "The workers have a real say and the system goes beyond worker participation and there is none of the bureaucracy you find in some socialist states which practice what I call state capitalism." Mr Kangai said he was also impressed by the way the Yugoslavs had reconstructed and developed a war-shattered economy after they had berated themselves from Hitler's Germany. POLITICIAN TO QUIT--A former Deputy Minister of Home Affairs in the Muzorewa government, Mr Joshua Cohen, has retired from politics. Announcing his retirement from the UANC and politics at his Salisbury home yesterday, Mr Cohen said he had come to the end of the road in politics. "I'm a sick man. I'm going to have an operation and then relax. I still have a great deal of respect for Bishop Muzorewa, but I have achieved my objective. "We have majority rule now, and that's what the fight was for. We must all come together and build Zimbabwe." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 7 Sep 81 p 3]

NKOMO SPEECH--The Minister without Portfolio and ZAPU PF leader, Dr Joshua Nkomo, said that although his party was a partner in government, it would not hesitate to criticise some ZANU (PF)'s policies it did not agree with, first at Government level and then openly if such criticism were not heeded. Dr Nkomo was speaking yesterday at a rally in Hwali, 100 km south of Gwanda. After telling the rally that politicians had fought for the country he criticised what he termed "leadership that did not show people where they were going". He also rebuked the Press for misquoting him. He said it was essential that people should know where they are going and this was to come from the leaders. He said people had fought for the country. Now it was time for the leaders to lead with vision. [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 6 Sep 81 p 1]

BRIEFS

ZIMBABWE-MOZAMBIQUE LIVESTOCK TRADE--Bulawayo. Mozambique wants to buy Zimbabwe livestock for a major agricultural development project. It needs 900 highly graded beef breeding cows, 30 beef bulls, 25 breeding mares, 25 geldings and three stallions. The stock is wanted for the Inhassune/Ramalbusca agricultural development project in the eastern province of Inhambane, between Maputo and Beira. The government of Mozambique, which is asking for tenders for the breeding stock, has been granted a loan of 8,000,000 Financial Units of Account from the African Development Fund for financing the project, to be implemented for four years. Only suppliers in nearby or neighbouring countries to Mozambique (excluding South Africa) will be considered. Mozambique wants what they term "prequalification livestock." The vice-chairman of the Zimbabwe Livestock Improvement Committee, which is an advisory committee to the Ministry of Agriculture, Mr J. D. Norton, said yesterday that the ministry's policy did not permit the export of non-pedigree stock. "In this instance it may be possible, given that there are people in Zimbabwe interested, to get special ministry authority to export graded animals, which are not as highly pedigreed as the accepted stock. But strictly speaking Zimbabwe cannot afford to make such a concession because it is short of meat itself," said Mr Norton, who is also chief of animal production in the ministry's Department of Conservation and Extension. PRESIDENTIAL MEASURES FOLLOWING LUCAPA, DAIMANG VISIT

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 18 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] A dispatch signed by Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the republic, announces a series of measures aimed at lending new impetus to the construction of the city of Lucapa, capital of Lunda-Norte, as well as improving the administration of DIAMANG [Angola Diamond Company].

During his recent visit to Lunda-Norte, Angola's chief of state said there were certain negative situations that needed to be corrected for the development of the province.

Following is the communique of the Angolan chief of state.

Whereas, as observed during the recent visit of 5 and 6 August, the prevailing situation in the zone of Lucapa shows troubling areas of noncompliance with higher decisions of the party and government, particularly the guidelines left by our late beloved President Agostinho Neto;

Whereas civil construction in the city of Lucapa, capital of Lunda-Norte, has been virtually abandoned, with part of the imported material and equipment in a state of deterioration, and it is urgent to ascertain the causes and assign responsibility for said situation;

Also, whereas it is necessary to strengthen the Diamond Security Department, to develop more efficient action to combat the illegal traffic in diamonds and to detect and prevent the assaults and robberies (which have recently increased markedly) suffered by the structures of [DIAMANG], the enterprise responsible for prospecting, mining and other operations involved in the production and marketing of this important source of foreign exchange for the country;

I determine:

--That a member of the Executive Commission of the Lunda-Norte Provincial Party Committee be designated to supervise, closely and in situ, the operations relative to construction of the temporary nucleus of the city of Lucapa.

--That appropriate conditions be created to install, as quickly as possible, the Provincial Commission of Lunda Norte, in the city of Lucapa.

--That the ad hoc commission created in early 1979 hold a meeting no later than 30 August 1981 to evaluate the applicability of the philosophy underlying the creation of the Lucapa Installation Office. The commission is expected to present proposals for the improved functioning of said office. The commission should also:

a. Establish criteria enabling it to insure supervision of civil construction works in the city of Lucapa;

b. Designate an under-director for the Installation Office, who should be a resident of the city of Lucapa.

--That quick and effective action should be taken to insure immediate installation of a power station to provide a reliable electric power supply to the city of Lucapa, since DIAMANG finds it impossible to provide that supply.

--That the generator now aboard one of the ships anchored at the Port of Luanda be unloaded immediately and shipped to Lucapa, to guarantee local production of pipe joints.

--That the Lucapa Installation Office take immediate steps to establish a provincial office of the Construction Ministry in the city of Lucapa.

--That an inquiry be undertaken to ascertain the damage to the national economy as a result of the inaction of agencies involved in executing the project for construction of the temporary nucleus of the city of Lucapa.

--That said inquiry be conducted by a commission composed of members of the Office of the President of the Republic (which will coordinate the investigation) and of the Planning and Finance ministries.

--That no retaliatory measures shall be permitted against national or foreign workers who have had the courage to report the irregularities and undisciplined acts within the structures of the Lucapa Installation Office.

--That Comrade Jose Mendes Manuel Isabel be relieved of his duties as director of the Diamond Security Department and demoted from the rank of captain, without prejudice to other measures that may be taken at the level of the respective ministry. Due consideration has been given to the fact that the comrade participated in the struggle for national liberation.

--That, until a new director of the Diamond Security Department is named, these functions will be temporarily assumed by the second-ranking official in the department, Antonio Alberto Gouveia.

FNLA'S CHIPENDA: REVOLUTION, DEMOCRACY CANNOT COEXIST

Lisbon A TARDE in Portuguese 7 Aug 81 p 9

[Interview with FNLA leader Daniel Chipenda by Adulcino Silva near Lisbon; date not specified]

[Text] I imagined--but only imagined--Daniel Chipenda inviting me to a lively venison barbecue where we would be served beans prepared in palm oil and a strong African drink to wash it down with--all in the shade of a leafy strangler fig somewhere in Angola. But no. The "lion of the savannah" welcomed me in his home near Lisbon, where he was surrounded by two friends and a few relatives. He offered me a cup of coffee.

While we talked, an LP by the famous duo "Ouro Negro" played in the background. On the room's walls was a collection of Angolan masks, and on the floor, an enormous wild bull hide served as a rug.

If I had not known Daniel Chipenda some years ago in Angola, I would never have believed he was a warrior-revolutionary. His appearance, his deportment, his soft voice, and his aversion to violence made him seem more like a hermit. Chipenda is a spokesman for Angolan resistance to Soviet imperialism in Angola. Although in Lisbon, he has fighters and special cadres at his command somewhere in Africa, and at the same time he develops diplomatic contacts at various levels with different countries in the West.

[Question] What is your opinion of the decolonization process?

[Answer] The decolonization was poorly done because it was not carried out by the Portuguese people. The fact is that "the marriage of five centuries" would not permit a divorce of the kind that occurred. The decolonization was achieved from the outside in, since it was planned and directed by outside forces--specifically, by the Soviet Union, which for a long time had wanted to annex Angola, not only for its raw materials but also because of its strategic location and what it represents to the West. For that matter, the Russian plan to blockade the South Atlantic corridor and thus cut off the supply line to Europe is well known.

No one aware of the consequences that would result from a "blind" decolonization would agree to seeing it done the way it was in Angola: it was a total surrender, pure and simple, to the socialist-fascist forces with the sacrifice of Portuguese and Angolans.

[Question] How do you analyze the presence and activity of the Portuguese in Angola for 500 years?

[Answer] The Portuguese presence in Angola was part of a stage of history which Portugal fulfilled completely in the form of a genuine epic.

Portugal established itself in Angola in 1482. That presence has left deep roots--so deep that it will not be possible to eliminate them. It would take too long to talk about Portuguese action in Angola. But I will sum up my thoughts on that historical fact. I will tell you that when the Portuguese arrived in Angola, the black was a man adapted to his social structure, his biological needs, and his habitat.

It would be a tremendous injustice not to acknowledge that the Portuguese reduced tribal violence, and it would be ungrateful to forget that it was they who introduced humanitarian principles into relations with the blacks who, obviously, maintained contact with them.

And while it is true that they were responsible for slavery during a certain period, the fact is that that cannot be viewed in isolation from the context of the period itself. As the years rolled on, the Portuguese established--even before other colonizing peoples in Africa--the primacy of justice and tried to spread education and protect the health of the inhabitants with the means and resources at their disposal.

There were good intentions and good motives. Because of human imperfection, however, the objectives were not always achieved without violence and injustice. But when analyzed dispassionately, Portuguese colonization as regards Angola was an important achievement.

I will say that the most important factor in that achievement was the fact that the Portuguese made the Angolan into one of mankind's great hopes. Actually, despite all the defects that may exist--and do exist on the political level--Angola possesses the notion of nationhood solely because of the spread of the Portuguese language, which united all the Angolan ethnic groups and brought them into agreement. Without the language, no agreement would have been possible between Quioco and Bailundu or between Mussurongo and Baluba, and so on. Language was the linking vehicle and one factor in the struggle for liberation.

Failing to understand that or minimizing that principle means not understanding ideas: it means denying a basic and obvious foundation.

MPLA-Labor Party Lost the War

[Question] In your opinion, do objective conditions exist for the war to be won by the Angolan nationalists?

[Answer] Those conditions have been achieved. Two-thirds of the Angolan population are in head-on opposition to the political regime in Luanda.

Even within the MPLA-Labor Party, there are persons who oppose their own system. There is discontent in the ranks of FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola]. There is the exodus of cadres. There is hunger, which incidentally is already acknowledged by international organizations, specifically the Red Cross. There is persecution and violent punishment.

Moreover, the economy has slowed by more than 60 percent in comparison with what it was during Portuguese control. Agriculture is nonexistent. The presence of guerrilla warfare makes itself felt throughout the country.

All of that, combined as well with the inability of the MPLA-Labor Party to control a large part of the territory, is enough to allow one to say that the days of the current Angolan regime are numbered. The war is lost as far as the MPLA-Labor Party is concerned. The fact is that the disappointments are too great and disillusionment too severe for the current regime in Angola to maintain itself in power much longer.

[Question] How representative is your movement?

[Answer] My movement's representativeness is seen in a philosophy which flows from the Angolan people and issues in the struggle for the liberation of Angola, and receptiveness is found in the struggle for the union of all Angolans. That is the fundamental cause of Angolan National Convergence.

[Question] It has been reported that you are blind. I can see that such is not the case. What do you have to say about that rumor?

[Answer] My opponents do anything to demoralize my movement. So I am not surprised at the rumor. I feel good, and I can still give of my best for the Angolan people. That is my answer. If that rumor was started to endanger Angolan National Convergence, it failed, because we are continuing our struggle.

Dual Nationality

[Question] Do you believe--or do you consider it viable--that Angolans and Portuguese will return to Angola after the overthrow of the MPLA-Labor Party?

[Answer] I think it is a duty for us to return to Angola as soon as the conditions exist.

As you know, Angola is a vast territory that is able to take in all those who love it. It is frequently asked: who are the Angolans? They are all those included and defined in the Alvor Agreement. They are those who were born there, plus those who lived there and put down roots there. I want to add that personally, I uphold the idea of dual nationality. This in relation to Angola and Portugal, obviously.

[Question] Do you consider it possible to reconcile revolution and democracy?

[Answer] That depends on the interpretation to be given to the thinking behind the question. Revolution means renewal. Only after that does democracy come, so during the existence of the first, they cannot coexist.

[Question] You are criticized for not being in the jungle fighting the Angolan invader. What do you have to say about that?

[Answer] The struggle has to be carried on in various ways. For them to say that I am not in the jungle and am therefore not struggling against the enemy of the Angolan people would be true and justifiable only if I were not engaged in intense activity with foreign ministries on the diplomatic level and if I were not linked to a movement which is struggling in Angola and with which I am periodically in contact.

My commands receive my instructions, and it is through me that they learn how my representations on the international level are progressing.

I have struggled in the jungles before, and when necessary, I will return to my post as a guerrilla fighter. But my activities are different, although they have the same objectives. There is much to be done--a lot of work to be done outside the jungles. Without that work, guerrilla warfare cannot succeed.

I can understand that accusation on the part of my opponents, since ideas are formed or deformed only in their natural environment.

[Question] You said a short while ago that the Angolan political regime is doomed. Do you feel that the dissatisfied people will be ready to follow another regime and other leaders?

[Answer] Yes. Under the present circumstances, any suggestion or any gesture by a charismatic leader is likely to delineate an about-face in Angola's political and economic life. For that to happen, however, sure and determined support from outside, without direct involvement, is indispensable.

The cause of the Angolan Government is lost. And some of its members are certainly aware of that. For my part, I propose the following to the MPLA-Labor Party: 1) a general amnesty; 2) dialogue with a number of international bodies, in which Portugal would also be involved as the chief intermediary; 3) total reconciliation of the Angolan people; and 4) general elections.

LUANDA AFRO-ARAB CONFERENCE PRELIMINARY MEETING HELD

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 11 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Invited by the MPLA-Labor Party, a delegation from the International Secretariat for Solidarity with the Arab People and their Main Cause--Palestine [SISAP] visited the People's Republic of Angola from 4 to 9 August to discuss the important Afro-Arab conference that will be held in Luanda from 6 to 9 December 1981.

The delegation was headed by Omar Al-Hamidi, secretary general of the Arab People's Congress and chairman of the international secretariat. He was accompanied by Silas Cerqueira of the Presidium of the Portuguese Council for Peace and Cooperation. The delegation consisted of Abu Fahed, PLO ambassador to the People's Republic of Angola, and Edward Dilinga, national political commissioner of South Africa's ANC.

The SISAP delegation held political talks with a delegation from the MPLA-Labor Party headed by Afonso Van-Dunem (Mbinda), Party Central Committee secretary for foreign relations. He was accompanied by Coelho da Cruz, chairman of the Angolan League for Friendship and Solidarity with Peoples; Ambassador Joaquim de Lemos; Pedro Mungo of the Central Committee Department of Foreign Relations; and Josefa Guilhermina Coelho da Cruz of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

In an examination of the dangerous international political situation, particularly that prevailing in southern Africa and the Middle East, which is characterized by a new escalation of imperialist aggression led by the United States, the two parties stressed the great importance and timeliness of the Afro-Arab conference.

The Afro-Arab conference will bring together outstanding leaders, personalities, and representatives of the political parties, mass organizations, and national and democratic forces of Africa and the Arab world for an unprecedented dialogue aimed at developing and pursuing more deeply the joint struggle against the imperialist, Zionist, and racist alliance and for full political and economic independence, democracy, social progress, and peace.

During the talks, the SISAP delegation expressed its repudiation of the continual acts of aggression committed against the front-line states, particularly the People's Republic of Angola and specifically the recent invasion of this country by South Africa's racist regime. It also expressed its solidarity with the Angolan people and their revolutionary vanguard, the MPLA-Labor Party, because of their firm internationalist stand in southern Africa.

Concerning the situation in Namibia, the two delegations vigorously condemned the illegal occupation of Namibian territory by the racist regime of South Africa with the complicity of the Western powers headed by the Reagan administration. They reiterated their unconditional support of the Namibian people's struggle for independence under the leadership of SWAPO, their sole and legitimate representative. Both parties pronounced themselves in favor of full implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 435/78 and condemned any imperialist attempt to amend that resolution.

The two parties denounced the collaboration and support being given by the imperialist powers to the fascist regime of apartheid and reaffirmed their unconditional support for the struggle by the people of South Africa, led by their revolutionary vanguard, the ANC, against oppression and racist exploitation and for national independence and social progress.

In view of the present worsening and deterioration noted in the Middle East situation following the Camp David Accords, the two delegations firmly condemned the new escalation of aggression by Israel's Zionist regime, with the support of the Reagan administration, against the people of Palestine, Lebanon, Syria, and the Arab world. They expressed their solidarity with the heroic struggle by the people of Palestine under the leadership of the PLO, their sole and legitimate representative, to win their inalienable national rights: return to their homeland, self-determination, and the building of their independent state. They also expressed their solidarity with the struggle by the Lebanese people, under the leadership of the National and Progressive Movement, for the unity and integrity of their homeland in militant alliance with the Palestinian people and Syria.

The two parties also condemned the aggressive threats of imperialism and the reactionary forces against the people of Libya and expressed their full support for the Libyan people mobilized in defense of their fatherland.

The two parties also reiterated their unreserved solidarity with the struggle by the Saharan people, under the leadership of the POLISARIO Front, for the right to self-determination in accordance with the resolutions of the OAU and the United Nations.

In an international situation which is becoming increasingly serious and in which imperialism is attempting to recover its lost positions in order to continue subjugating the African and Arab peoples, the Afro-Arab conference to be held in Luanda from 6 to 9 December 1981 will be of the greatest significance for rapprochement and cooperation between those peoples, side by side with the peoples of the world in the struggle against imperialist interference and domination and for peace.

The Angolan delegation expressed its appreciation of the role played by the International Secretariat for Solidarity with the Arab People and Palestine since its establishment in mobilizing international support for the just cause of the Afro-Arab peoples.

The delegation from the international secretariat expressed warm thanks to the Angolan people and their revolutionary vanguard, the MPLA-Labor Party, and particularly their president, comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, for the fraternal and solidary welcome given it during its stay in the People's Republic of Angola.

SOUTH AFRICAN PROPAGANDA OPERATION SCORNED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Macabre Immorality"]

[Excerpts] The dramatic reality is already known to all and does not need to be confirmed: the racist South African army has been occupying 12 or so localities in the Angolan province of Cunene, including its capital, Ondjiva.

Another indisputable fact--despite the frequent allegations of the racists to the contrary--is that the invading troops have not even attempted to retreat and return to their bases in Namibia, which is also illegally occupied by them.

On the contrary. The destruction of Cahama (as was ascertained on the spot by some Western diplomats with Luanda's agreement) and the air raids over Tchibemba, both on the road that goes from Changongo to Lubango, capital of the province of Huila, reveal South Africa's intention to continue its death and destruction operations on Angolan territory.

Proof of this is that the racists, with their usual arrogance and shamelessness born from the tolerance shown to them by Western powers and from the open and aggressive support afforded them by the more reactionary U.S. circles and the Reagan administration, have mounted a propaganda operation that includes an invitation to certain Western reporters to visit the South Africa-occupied territories in the People's Republic of Angola.

Through this operation, mounted with important material and human means, the South Africans attempted to cover the vandalism of their action and attribute a "moral" aspect to their aggression, dispatching medical teams to the combat places and even organizing a soccer match, in a demonstration of macabre immorality characteristic of the neo-Nazis.

At the time when the Second Central African Games are brilliantly closing in Luanda and Huambo--during which all the participants reiterated their condemnation of apartheid and the need for a total sports boycott against South Africa--armed and uniformed provocateurs of the invading army are thus offending sports and free Africa, once again imposing through the might of arms what is forbidden to them by rights and by the will of the free and independent nations of the continent.

Would it be proper here to remember the tragic images of the colonial war, during which many (?) soccer matches were carried out with the bloody heads of barbarously murdered patriots? Both instances derive from the same criminal morality which goes counter to the most elementary rights of human beings, for whose respect the MPLA, as a liberation movement and now a party, has always fought and will continue to fight.

Murderous bombs, then, continue to rain on Angolan soil, indifferent to international condemnation and deeply disdainful of innocent lives, of the schools, hospitals and simple residences of a peaceful population which, at times such as these, rises up against the invaders in the heroic tradition of its past.

The racists are becoming increasingly entangled in their contradictions, announcing their retreat from Angolan territory in order to render inoperative the extraordinary meeting of the Security Council while, on the other hand, prolonging their occupation to gain a "position of strength" during the UN special assembly on Namibia.

In the face of the shameless racist aggressions, it becomes thus evident that, until the independence of the illegally occupied territory of Namibia is achieved, more Namibians and Angolans will continue to fall victim of Pretoria's criminal rage. But the people will resist: Angola within its borders, Namibia by compelling the occupier to retreat, and South Africa by overthrowing the cruel regime of apartheid. The struggle continues.

Victory is certain.

SOUTH AFRICAN AGGRESSION SEEN AS DISCORD ELEMENT WITHIN NATO

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Sep 81 p 12

[Excerpts] Following the invasion of the People's Republic of Angola, the Pretoria racist regime is rapidly becoming one more factor of divergence and discord among the countries of the "Atlantic Alliance."

In an article published in the London newspaper THE TIMES last week, David Watt, director of the London Institute for International Relations, wrote that the attack against Angola constituted, in effect, "a pressure point for divergence within the Atlantic Alliance." He analyzed in detail the manner in which divergences emerged between the United States and the European nations since Reagan's election to the U.S. presidency.

In relation to the South African attack, David Watt stated that "the Angolan question is different, since it does not involve a direct action on the part of the Americans." However, he went on to say that "much of what is happening in Southern Africa is a consequence of the changes introduced in U.S. policy since Reagan's victory 'unsettled' Europe."

He added that "it is highly improbable that Pieter Botha would have launched his present aggressive policies if he had not been convinced that Washington is more concerned about supporting an anti-communist South African Government than listening to anyone's objections to apartheid or even to the Namibian question."

In this respect, it is symptomatic that THE TIMES stressed the fact that "we Europeans cannot even complain about not having been consulted. We can only say that our points of view were more or less ignored."

Indeed, the South African aggression against Angola brought to light an undeniable fact: the European countries, from Portugal to Great Britain, from West Germany to France, unanimously condemned the aggression. Therefore, the U.S. attitude, which was summarized in an evasive declaration, indicates that there was, between Washington and Pretoria, if not a formal agreement, at least a tacit understanding.

Meanwhile, there is another side to the question. We are referring to the credibility crisis Pretoria is experiencing at this time. In order to turn international public opinion to their advantage, the racist regime invited a group of international newsmen to visit its combat forces in southern Angola.

The spokesman of the racist army went as far as to allege that they were fighting the Angolans because they "interfered" in their operation and that, once the SWAPO bases were destroyed, "everything would go back to normal." They also rejected the Angolan denunciations according to which the invading forces were using tens of tanks and other vehicles. However, the pictures taken by Pretoria's television cameramen belied its military spokesmen: they showed that operations were indeed taking place within Angola and with the means (tanks) mentioned by Angolan authorities.

As a result, the medicum of credibility the racists were attempting to achieve through their propaganda machine was denied them. On the contrary, the image of racist South Africa suffered still more in the eyes of the audience following events through the TV films of the newsmen invited in by Pretoria. This same audience could also witness the protests and demands for the retreat of the South African troops from Angola, and thus add its voice to the echo of solidarity with this country under aggression.

ALLEGED SOUTH AFRICAN LOW MORALE, DESPAIR CHARGED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Pretoria's Unmasking"]

[Text] The racist South Africans have recently been undergoing an obvious propaganda crisis. Always so prompt and energetic in their bluster, they seem now scared by the very noise and destruction of their own death weapons.

Thus, because of the lack of conviction in the tiresome repetition of their shopworn justifications, they are unable to hit upon the formula that would attenuate the reprobation aimed at them following the last aggression against Angola by even some of their long-time friends.

These friends feel that they have been put in jeopardy by the actions of an ally who does not consult them or warn them before embarking in a no-win adventure, and they have become alarmed by the firmness with which President Jose Eduardo dos Santos alerted the international community about the possibility of resorting to the support of the Angolan people's traditional allies in defense of Angola's national sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Surprised and overtaken by the international condemnation of its criminal actions, South Africa, in a clear diversionary maneuver immediately denounced by the Angolan authorities, hastened to announce the progressive retreat of its troops, arguing that their "special mission" had been carried out.

The unmasking of this obvious lie--since the racists are continuing their destructive operations--was subsequently strengthened by the Council of Ministers of the Angolan Government, which appealed to all African nations to expel from the national territory the racist aggressor, the continent's number one enemy.

The usual attempt by the racists to make their aggressions against Angola dependent on the support granted by the Angolan Government to SWAPO has not produced any better results in terms of propaganda, given the fact that not only Angola, but the entire international community--embodied in the UN--acknowledges and supports this organization as the revolutionary vanguard of the Namibian people, and South Africa certainly is not preparing to invade the entire world....

As a result, the racists are totally discredited. Perhaps this explains why their propaganda has been increasingly slipping and foundering in ridicule. In the first place, the South Africans consider any and all victims on the Angolan side as dangerous SWAPO "terrorists." Then comes the fact that members of the Security Council have been invited to visit the battlefield (in Angola, of course!) to survey the South African "reasons" for the aggression. Lastly, there is the cynical and delirious statement by the racist prime minister that instead of burdening the Security Council with the useless expenses extraordinary meetings entail, the African states should ask for these funds to "alleviate the hunger" of their own people....

Despite the fact that these positions reveal the despair and low morale of their promoters, it is true that they also find an echo in a certain Western press, "protected" by South Africa, and thus succeed in sowing doubt and creating confusion prejudicial to the understanding of the true character of the racist aggression and invasion.

Therefore, it is not surprising that, abusively speculating on the information broadcast by the Angolan national news agency--according to which the racists "are attempting to gain time for a discreet retreat"--many Western press organs have hastened to conclude that the South Africans are retreating from Angola, in a deliberate attempt to exploit the situation and disinform international public opinion on the actual situation in the southern part of the People's Republic of Angola.

Thus, the statements made to the UN Security Council by our ambassador to that international body gain special resonance: "If the friends of racism and imperialism are unable to order Pretoria to desist, then the enemies of racism and imperialism must view the criminals in the light of Chapter VII of the UN Charter" (which empowers the Security Council to impose compulsory military, economic and political sanctions on any country that violates peace). Angola rightly affirmed to the world at the supreme international forum that not only itself, but "all of Africa needs to be protected against South African terrorism."

BRIGADES, COMPANIES LISTED AT FAPLA CEREMONIES

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 4 Aug 81 p 2

[Text] Throughout the country last Saturday, the Angolan people commemorated the seventh anniversary of the establishment of FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola] by participating actively in important political, cultural, and athletic events.

In Benguela Province, the main ceremony marking FAPLA Day was held at the Military Center for Road Instruction and was presided over by Lucio da Fonseca. On that occasion, eight fighters were promoted to staff sergeant.

The assistant provincial commissioner for Benguela stressed the need for closer adherence to discipline and organization within FAPLA with a view to increasing combat readiness and the spirit of initiative among military effectives so as to repel all thrusts by the South African racists.

After recalling the internationalist character of FAPLA, Lucio da Fonseca reaffirmed that as always, the Angolan people will know how to respond to imperialist aggression in order to lead our country toward socialism.

In Huila

In Huila Province, the main ceremony took place at the Reconnaissance Unit in the city of Lubango. It was presided over by Jacinto Chipopa, assistant provincial commissioner.

In the course of his speech, the assistant provincial commissioner for Huila urged the FAPLA fighters to increase their combat discipline so as to deal more vigorously with the acts of aggression by South Africa's racist army and its mercenary and puppet gangs.

Lieutenant Colonel Kianda, acting commanding officer of the Fifth Military Region, also spoke during the meeting. After giving a historical sketch of successes by the MPLA's fighters from the time of the armed struggle until the formation of FAPLA in 1974, he emphasized the need for ever-increasing training for the officers, sergeants, and ranks of the armed branch of the Angolan people so that they can better master the sophisticated techniques of war.

Lieutenant Colonel Kianda again condemned the intransigence with which the South African racists are violating UN Resolution 435 by persisting in their illegal occupation of Namibia.

During the ceremony, 11 fighters were promoted to sergeant and incentives were distributed to the units that had been most outstanding during the first part of the 1980-1981 combat training year. They were the 21st Infantry Brigade, the 67th Light Infantry Brigade, the Communications Company, the Repair Company, the Engineering Company, the Instruction Battery, the 55mm Gun Battery, the Air Defense Battery, and the 130mm Artillery Group.

The ceremony ended with a parade by troops from the various branches of the armed forces and members of the OMA [Organization of Angolan Women], the OPA [Organization of Angolan Pioneers], the youth organization, and the party.

PARTIAL SOLUTION TO BUTANE GAS DISTRIBUTION DIFFICULTIES

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 13 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Paulo Marcos]

[Text] SONANGOL [National Angolan Fuel Company] will soon begin selling butane gas through the existing supermarkets in the city of Luanda, to insure more efficient and safe distribution to the public, we learned yesterday from Espirito Santo, chief of the business department of SONANGOL's northern office.

The decision is the result of certain incidents at some sales posts, which did not take the proper precautions for storage of the fuel.

SONANOL currently has about 100 butane gas sales stations distributed over the 20 zones of the city of Luanda. It distributes about 90,000 bottles of gas, or 1,500 tons, per month, which has not been enough to meet the needs of the public. The reduced supply of containers and irregular sales practices at some stations have meant that some people must travel great distances to find this fuel, which is so essential to their lives.

Espirito Santo also reported that a large shipment of containers was recently imported to ease the shortage. The canisters have already arrived in the country, but they have not been distributed to date because their connectors, which are different from the ones we have, are on a ship awaiting unloading at the commercial port of Luanda. Moreover, by December 1980 the company recorded that 14,598 bottles had irreparably damaged valves as a result of improper handling.

According to the official, although it does not have top priority, the distribution of gas also requires a fully functioning fleet of trucks to do the job properly and to aid in the solution of this problem that affects all of us, so people will not have to go from place to place carrying gas canisters on their heads.

COOPERATION WITH TANZANIA--The People's Republic of Angola and the United Republic of Tanzania signed yesterday important agreements with a view to establishing a mixed commission to increase cooperation in the economic, commercial, technical, scientific and cultural fields. The agreement came after 2 days of discussions and was signed by Angolan Minister of Foreign Trade and Planning Lopo do Nascimento and by Tanzanian Minister of Trade Ali Mchumo. It is noted that the Angolan minister has been in Tanzania since the beginning of the week at the head of a governmental delegation. Our two countries are thus reinforcing the foundations for a common goal as a contribution toward the genuine economic independence of our continent. PORTUGUESE EDUCATIONAL COOPERATION--New modalities have been included in the system of cooperation with the Portuguese Government in the field of education and teaching at the end of talks that were recently held in Lisbon between delegations from the two countries. According to Pereira de Sousa, national director of technical assistance from the state secretariat for cooperation, "these modalities are aimed at improving the Portuguese cooperants' contracting and assistance process." Pereira de Sousa also stressed that "following the talks between the delegations, an increase in the number of professors for the school year 1982-1983 is envisaged." U.S.-BOUND REFUGEES--Kinshasa, August 22--The first eight of 73 Angolan political refugees living in Zaire who have been granted asylum in the United States left here by air yesterday for New York via Brussels, a diplomatic source said. The second contingent was due to leave Sunday, the source said. The 73 Angolans include six children. When they arrive in New York, U.S. philanthropic organizations will help settle them in different parts of the country, the source said. [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 25 Aug 81 p 21]

EDUCATION OFFICIAL TO CUBA--Deputy minister of education for elementary education Joaquim da Silva Matias is in Cuba on a working visit. Just before his departure, the deputy minister of education said that his trip to Cuba is part of the implementation of the party's higher orientations in relation to the follow-up of Angolan schools in the Isle of Youth by the Ministry of Education. Joaquim Matias added that his visit is also intended to introduce the party-designated Angolan representatives to the schools in that island. They are Emilio de Carvalho, who was up to now a captain in the cabinet of cadres of the Ministry of Defense and Joaquim Rodrigues, former second secretary of youth organization in the province of Moxico. CRIME IN MALANJE PROVINCE--The provincial department of criminal investigation is registering a high monthly crime rate in Malanje, with frequent incidents of armed robbery, rape of minors and drug abuse. Santos Julio, deputy chief of this department, stated to ANGOP [Angolan News Agency] that most of the criminals are unemployed individuals, adding that the lack of control of idle people is the main factor in the organization of criminal bands. He also stressed the weakness of the defense and security organisms, notably the ODP [People's Defense Organization] and the People's Police. Santos Julio said that in his opinion, it will be necessary to reinforce the work of the defense and security organisms to defeat crime, endowing them with better human and material resources. AIR FORCE GRADUATES--Thirteen sublieutenants and 49 officer candidates in th APA/DAA [People's Air Force of Angola and Air Defense] were commissioned yesterday morning at the Commander Jika Politicomilitary School during the ceremony marking the conclusion of the first course for radio technician troops in that branch of the armed forces. The ceremony was presided over by Lt Col Ciel da Conceicao (Gato), deputy minister of defense and commander-general of the FAPA/DAA. The course in question, which lasted 9 months, began with 85 students, 62 of whom completed the course with training as radar specialists. The course included various subjects related to the technical and tactical aspects of radar, troop leadership, and political training with a view to strengthening the combat capability of our armed forces. In closing the ceremony, the commander-general of the FAPA/DAA expressed satisfaction with the results achieved and urged the graduates to make a greater commitment to defense tasks and not to waver in the face of the difficult situations they would meet in carrying out their duties. BENGUELA COOPERATIVIZATION PROCESS--In Benguela Province at present, 12,981 peasants are grouped into 88 peasant associations and 40 agricultural cooperatives, according to statements to ANGOP [ANGOLAN PRESS AGENCY] by the director of the DNACA (National Directorate for Agricultural Cooperativization). That figure, considered quite positive by provincial officials assigned to the DNACA, reflects the level of awareness attained by the individual peasants, who find in the peasant associations and agricultural cooperatives a means of superior organization enabling them to solve the problems inherent in rural production, marketing, and supplies. The introduction of this new type of peasant organization is, however, experiencing some obstacles due to the inadequate supply of industrial goods and foodstuffs for the rural areas and the shortage of material means and personnel for heading the cooperatives and associations. But the support provided by party and government structures in the province is well known, and it sometimes makes it possible to overcome immediately the problems that arise in the course of activities. REASONS FOR DACKO'S REFUSAL TO APPLY CONSTITUTION NOTED

Paris AFRICA AFP in French 8 Sep 81 p 22

[Article by Jean-Eudes Barbier]

[Text] BANGUI, 7 September--The army "coup d'Etat" in Central African Republic last week was in fact a device to allow President David Dacko to quit the political scene without creating disorder, observers here believe.

Mr Dacko is ill--he suffers from high blood pressure--and, as he told journalists Friday in Bangui, could no longer bear up under the responsibilities of power. At his news conference he spoke slowly, his face was puffy and he looked exhausted.

The former President said he had spent most of August in bed and was now preparing to travel to Europe for medical care.

For Mr Dacko, who came to power in September, 1979, when French paratroopers helped depose Emperor Bokassa, there was a choice of methods of laying down his burden of state.

He could either have stuck to the constitution--under which premier Simon-Narcisse Bozanga would have succeeded to the presidency pending new elections--or handed over to the military.

It was a strange dilemma for a man who, it is said, is basically a democrat, had won presidential elections in March against four opponents, was attempting to promote a multi-party system, and appeared to defend freedom of expression and human rights.

Constitution Offered "Risk of Explosion"

Mr Dacko's refusal to apply the constitution seems to have stemmed from a conviction that giving power to Mr Bozanga to whom opposition leader Ange Patasse has violent objections, would have led inevitably to disorder in Bangui like that which arose between Patasse partisans and security forces after Mr Dacko's election victory.

Since the bombing of a Bangui cinema in July--three people were killed and many injured--tension had been high in Central African Republic.

The opposition was emboldened by the French government's less-than-enthusiastic reaction to Mr Dacko's moves to control the situation (declaration of a state of emergency, suspension or banning of opposition parties) and issued successive calls for the president's ouster.

Mr Patasse and his supporters were seen as a factor of instability. The Central African people, in the vice of economic difficulty, showed growing signs of insecurity.

Mr Dacko apparently felt there was a risk of explosion and Mr Bozanga's nomination would have provided the spark.

The military, led by General Andre Kolingba, was the alternative. Mr Dacko has maintained good relations with the General--a link no doubt strengthened by the fact that they come from the same region, in the south.

CENTRAL AFRICAN POLITICAL PROSPECTS VIEWED

PM140849 Paris LE MONDE in French 9 Sep 81 p 4

[Dispatch by Philippe Decraene: "The Army Chiefs Will Have to Reckon with Mr Patase's Popularity"]

[Text] Bangui--One week after the pseudo-coup d'etat in Bangui, at a time when the Central African capital is going through a period of political truce which may not last long, it is already possible to draw some initial conclusions from this new palace revolution. All the Central African political parties, including the Central African Democratic Union (government party) have been systematically excluded from the operation carried out by agreement between former President Dacko and his chief of staff army Gen Andre Kolingba. Neither Mr Henri Maidou's Republican Progress Party, nor Mr Francois Pehoua's GIRA [expansion unknown], nor Mr Abel Goumba's Ubangi Democratic Front, nor Mr Ange Patasse's Movement for the Liberation of the Central African People, [MPLC] has been consulted or kept informed. Moreover the pseudo-coup d'etat was directed against their leaders and more particularly against Mr Goumba and Mr Patasse.

As far as Mr Goumba is concerned, he is placing himself out of the running by prolonging his absence from the country. Mr Goumba, who was absent from Bangui during the recent events on the pretext that his personal safety was threatened and who only returned to his country last week, gives the impression of expecting the socialist government to place him in power after spending years criticizing those people who turned to France to settle the Central African question.

Mr Ange Patasse however, although he has unsuccessfully tried to win control of the movement headed by General Kolingba, has not given up. His success in the presidential election last March, when he came second with more than one-third of the votes cast, is still present in everybody's mind. The MLPC leader still has strong support in Bangui itself, where the population in the working class districts overwhelmingly support him. Those who are called the "godobes," unemployed or inactive people who are always prepared to take to the streets because they are so poor that they have nothing to lose, form a massive force on which he can rely when he thinks the time is right.

Economic Sabotage

Despite his apparent inconsistency combined with a show of wildness, Mr Patasse is clear about his aims. He is sure that time is on his side, not anxious for a trial of strength with the army at a time when it is aware of its power and is all the more prepared to wait since he has other means of acting than merely Bangui's "godobes." He is supported by activists who are boycotting the authorities in the provinces, especially in the whole region from the north of the capital to the border with Chad, among fellow members of the Sara race but not only among them. For instance crops for export, especially cotton, have been reduced throughout this region because, in order to plunge the government into difficulties by increasing its economic problems, he gave strict orders that all cotton plants should be pulled up--orders which were widely followed.

But there is a more serious factor. Some officers in the army's ranks, and even within the military committee for national recovery, secretly sympathise with the man who, after holding ministerial posts 11 times under the empire, still holds undoubted attraction for the poor people of the capital and for young school children and students. It is probably with the aid of these officers that Mr Patasse might, when the time comes, be tempted to seize a power which he was neither invited to assume nor to share with the men who have now been installed by former President Dacko.

Winning Over the Church

General Kolingba knows that the opposition still constitutes a coherent political force despite its internal quarrels, and he has given priority to the new school and university year which starts soon. His first official engagement was a long visit to the capital's educational institutions--the places from which the wave which was to sweep away the empire started. In the same spirit, and being anxious to win over the church, which remains an important political force, he and his entire government attended a solemn mass celebrated in Bangui Cathedral by Arch-Bishop Joachim Ndayem on Sunday. Finally, like all his predecessors he took the trouble to portray himself as the spiritual son of Barthelemy Boganda, founder-president of the Central African Republic, by going to pay homage at Boganda's tomb in Bobangui.

However, although Mr David Dacko had the disadvantage of having returned to his country thanks to the French paratroopers, he did at least have the merit of having overthrown imperial tyranny. The only advantages General Kolingba has are his good will and his concern to save Central Africa from chaos. Indeed his legitimacy comes from a discredited man even though the latter still have some political skill, as demonstrated by the way in which he stepped down. In the final analysis the future of the Central African regime depends once again on France. But is Paris not less prepared than ever to take a decision? This is at present the greatest fear among General Kolingba's aides.

HABRE FORCES SUCCESSES REPORTED--Al-Junaynah, Sudan, 12 Sep (SUNA)--Heavy casualties and material loss were inflicted on the Libyan occupation forces and the allied forces of Goukouni Oueddei, the president of Chad and his foreign Minister Acyl Ahmat, by the troops of Hussein Habre, the former defence minister, in last week's fight which took place in the area between Guereda and Am Zoer towns. Reports to SUNA from Chad said 25 Libyan soldiers and 104 soldiers of the allied forces were killed while a BRDM armored car and a Toyota equipped with a 106 mm anti-armours gun were destroyed. The news said the Libyan Air Forces have intensified their reconnaissance flights and air bombing of Habre positions using MIG-25 and Tupolev jet fighters in these raids. FINAL COMMUNIQUE OF FOURTH REGULAR CONGRESS OF UJSC

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 605, 15 Aug 81 pp 5-6, 8

[Excerpts] In accordance with the bylaws of the UJSC [Union of Congolese Socialist Youth] and on the convocation of the UJSC Central Committee [CC], the Fourth Regular Congress of the UJSC was held in Brazzaville from 11 to 14 August 1981 with the motto: "Young people of Marien Ngouabi's country, let us rally around the UJSC and behind the PCT [Congolese Labor Party] to strengthen the Movement of 5 February 1979 in unity and to participate effectively in our country's struggle for economic and socio-cultural liberation."

On that occasion, a member of the PCT CC, the first secretary of the UJSC CC and the minister of youth and sports, presented the CC report to the congress.

In his opening speech, the chairman of the PCT CC, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, noted the role and place of youth in general in the Congolese people's struggle. The chairman of the PCT CC then stressed the absolute need for the party and the UJSC to resolutely take the education of youth in hand, to carry high the banner of the struggle to master science and technology and to provide for the training of all classes of youth, in cities and in the interior of the country, in schools and in neighborhoods.

Finally, the chairman of the PCT CC, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, urged Congolese youth to seize the opportunity to be offered by the national civic service to selflessly commit themselves to the historic task of defending the revolution and its achievements and of national construction.

The proceedings of the Fourth Regular Congress were held under the chairmanship of Comrade Jean Michel Bokamba-Yangouma, a member of the Political Bureau of the PCT CC, head of the PCT Department of Organization and general secretary of the CSC [Congolese Trade Union Confederation], according to the following agenda:

The congressional participants approved the internal regulations for the congress and elected its Presidium, composed of the following members: President: Comrade Jean Michel Bokamba-Yangouma, a member of the Political Bureau of the PCT CC, head of the Department of Organization and general secretary of the CSC; first vice president: Comrade Oba-Apounou Gabriel, a member of the PCT CC, first secretary of the UJSC CC and minister of youth and sports; second vice president: a member of the PCT CC, head of the Mass Organization Division, attached to the PCT Department of Organization; reporter: a member of the PCT, secretary of the UJSC CC for propaganda; secretary: Dacon Dumas, a PCT member; members: Kamara Dekamo and Andoyelle Ferdinand, PCT members; Touanga Marcel, PCT member and secretary of the UJSC CC for foreign affairs; Loua Mabika, PCT member.

After approving the agenda, the congressional participants unanimously approved the Central Committee's report to the congress.

Therefore and in accordance with the recommendations which they had made at the close of their local and regional congresses, the participants approved the report submitted for their examination by the outgoing CC.

Congratulating the union on its operations and actions for the 1977-81 period, the congress noted: the UJSC has effectively established itself as the vanguard of Congolese youth, the party's active assistant and a reliable reserve and inexhaustible source for the PCT; the union has raised the awareness of Congolese youth and has enlisted them in the fight led by the party to continue the radical revolutionary process in the Congo.

The congressional participants then examined, amended and approved the union's proposed bylaws.

The union's program for the 1981-85 period was the subject of special attention. In fact, in view of the democratic debate underway in the country concerning the First 5-Year Plan for 1982-86, the congress endorsed the appeal made by the party to the nation's vital forces to support and accomplish the goals of that plan.

With this outlook, a realistic program was adopted by the congress.

The Fourth Regular UJSC Congress was honored by the participation of delegations of friendly youth organizations from Africa, Asia, Latin America, Europe and the socialist community, which brought to Congolese youth, to the Congolese people and to their vanguard, the PCT, and to their president, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, a message of friendship, active solidarity and support for the victories achieved by the Congolese Revolution.

The congressional participants were concerned about the recent development in the international situation. After vehemently condemning imperialism's aggressive actions throughout the world and particularly in Namibia, Angola, southern Africa, the Western Sahara, the Middle East, Asia, Latin America and Central Europe, the Fourth Regular UJSC Congress adopted an international policy statement in which it urged progressive forces and peoples devoted to justice and peace to reinforce their unity of action for the final fight for human dignity and freedom.

In particular, these were the delegations of: the USSR Komsomol [Leninist Communist Youth League]; Free German Youth of the GDR; the WFDY [World Federation of Democratic Youth]; the IUS [International Union of Students]; Romania; China; JMPR [Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution]; PLO; FDJ [expansion unknown]; Korea; Czechoslovakia; Burundi; Jamaica; Tunisia; Bulgaria; Cape Verde; South Yemen; Sao Tome y Principe; Canary Islands; FRG; Togo; Kampuchea; Niari CR [Revolutionary Committee]; Cuban UJSC CS [expansion unknown]; Likouala CR; French CS; Malebo Pool; Italy; Sangha River Valley; river basin region.

Messages from the Youth League of SWAPO, Laos, Mongolia, Albania, the OCCAE [expansion unknown], Communist Youth of Spain, Greece, Chile and Brazil were also read.

The congress expressed its deep gratitude to all those young friends for their interest, sympathy and solidarity toward the UJSC, Congolese youth and the entire Congolese people.

The Fourth Regular UJSC Congress approved the following motions and resolutions:

PRC-CONSTRUCTED PEOPLE'S PALACE SCHEDULED FOR 1984

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 605, 15 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] When we pass by the Boulevard of Armies, and we pass by there often, we notice that a large part of the Goose Foot Forest has been cleared and enclosed with sheets of galvanized metal. What is taking place within that enclosure which no look can penetrate?

The official answer was provided on Thursday, 13 August 1981, at 10 am when Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso laid the cornerstone at the construction site of the People's Palace.

In the presence of members of the national political leadership, the National Popular Assembly and the government, and his excellency, the ambassador of the People's Republic of China, President Denis Sassou-Nguesso gave the go-ahead for the operations which will provide our party with a People's Palace to properly meet the requirements of national life in all its complexity.

Two speeches were delivered on that occasion: by the Chinese ambassador and by Maj Benoit Moundele-Ngolo, a Central Committee member and minister of public works and construction.

After reviewing Sino-Congolese cooperation, Major Moundele-Ngolo provided all useful information about the construction site in his brilliant speech.

The project's cost is estimated at 7.432 billion CFA francs, including 4.977 billion for local expenses, to be assumed by the People's Republic of the Congo.

The work will last 3 years and will include an area of more than 8 hectares, with 30,000 square meters of surface area.

The complex will include a 1,184-seat conference hall, a 500-seat lecture hall, 4 workrooms, 1 banquet hall, a 7-story administrative building and several other rooms for various purposes.

Major Moundele-Ngolo also pointed out in his speech that the crew of Chinese technicians assigned to this project were not housed in hotel rooms, but in a camp of wooden huts built opposite the construction site. This is an original, comprehensive and militant way of solving problems!

The start of this project is a significant event in the interesting and substantial history of cooperation between China and the Congo. Chinese assistance to the Congo is characterized by a sharp practical sense and an obvious concern to be useful to the Congolese Revolution and to the vast majority of the people.

The delicate architecture of the People's Palace, which will be completed at the end of 3 years, will be a dominant feature of rapidly changing Brazzaville. Beyond its esthetic aspects, this building will solve the party's many problems on the occasion of large meetings such as congresses and international conferences. Bravo for the People's Republic of China!

BRIEFS

LOAN AGREEMENTS SIGNED--Two loan agreements were concluded between Iraq and Saudi Arabia on one hand and the People's Republic of Congo on the other. In Baghdad, the accord-totalling 3 billion CFA francs--was signed on 24 August between Congo and the Iraqi fund for external development. The People's Republic of Congo was represented by Comrade Frederic Massenga, adviser in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, while the Iraqi side was represented by (Abdul Ali al-Hambari), president of the Iraqi fund. In Riyadh, an agreement totalling 6 billion CFA francs was signed on 29 August by Comrade Didi Nicholas, adviser in the office of the Ministry of Transport and Civil Aviation and (Dr Kalib al-Ayimasko), deputy general director of the Saudi development fund. It is to be recalled that the loans will be used to finance the project of straightening the Congo-Ocean railroad. [Text] [AB111444 Brazzaville Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 11 Sep 81]

CORPSES, CONFUSION, CONFRONTATION: COUP ATTEMPT DETAILED

Paris LE MATIN in French 17, 18 Aug 81

[Article by Yves de Chazournes]

[17 Aug 81 pp 8-9]

> [Text] From 30 July to 6 August the president of Africa's most peaceful peanut nation experienced the anguish of "international subversion."
> Because he wanted to take a vacation and attend Lady Di's marriage in London, Sir Dawda Jawara almost lost the country of which he is president, Gambia, a 300-km stretch of riverbottom country he himself had wrested from the British crown in 1965. Marxist-Leninist rebels, certain they would get support from "socialist Africa," claimed--but a little too quickly--to have planted a revolutionary flag right in the heart of Senegal. They did not have Qadhdhafi's telephone number. This was their ruin. Yves de Chazournes gives an hour by account of the putsch which almost overthrew Africa's most peaceful "peanut state."

The sun was just rising over London. Prince Charles and Lady Diana here just finishing their wedding night. Next would come Gibraltar, the honeymoon, and vacation. For Sir Dawda Jawara, on the otherhand, the vacation suddenly came to an end. Last night, while he was sleeping after the tremendous festivities of the wedding day, he was president of the Republic of Gambia. At 60 Onnismore Gardens (London, SW 7), in the suite permanently set aside for him at the residence of the Gambian High Commissioner, a wildly agitated telephone call had just woken him from his bed: it was the vice president, Moussa Camara, who was barely in control of himself. Rebels had seized power in Banjul, the capital city; they had just made an announcement on the radio; there was fighting in the streets, there was gunfire everywhere. Communications were poor. They could be interrupted at any moment. The first thing to do was to make a written request for Senegalese assistance. But to whom could this request for assistance be brought? The Senegalese Ambassador was not even in Banjul.

Listeners in Dakar were also paying attention to Gambian radio. The young president, Abdou Diouf, towering, thin as a rake, was still almost a newcomer to the presidency. He had only held the reins of his country's leadership for exactly 7 months now, since old Senghor had passed on the torch and turned over the government to him. The Banjul affair was to be his baptism by fire. He would be in communication with London the whole day. The ousted president asked him to move as quickly as possible. In Banjul, he had his faithful supporters to defend his legitimacy, his ministers, and he was still chief of state. He therefore officially requested him to intervene in accordance with the terms of the assistance agreement of 18 February 1965: "The Republic of Senegal and the government of Gambia, upon the request of either side, will come to each other's assistance to provide for their security and defense against any threat." As for Sir Jawara, he was going to return immediately to Banjul and put down the rebellion. That was his first statement to the press. But things were not to work out exactly as he thought. On that morning, Thursday 30 July 1981, this 57-year-old man, as elegant in a boubou [native garment] as in a suit of very fine English cut, his expression severe behind square-framed glasses, this man who has been the leader of Gambia since that country wrested its independence from the British crown in 1965, was now nothing but the "president" of a country which barely exists.

It is truly an interesting caricature of a country! The very strange and very exotic fruit of colonialism, then of the war which France and Great Britain waged on the black continent. On the map, one might say it had been cut squarely right out of the heart of Senegal, and that those who then drew its borders drew somewhat at random. It comes to an end like some kind of inflamed appendix which, if an operation is not performed immediately, is going to go into peritonitis. Indeed, it is not a country: it is a valley. The valley of the Gambia river. Not even a whole valley, just the first 300 km inland from the Atlantic. The width of this bastard state varies between 25 and 50 km, and its highest elevation is not even 90 meters. Along with Djibouti, it is Africa's Lilliput.

Coming down from St Louis in Senegal, one passes through Gambia in a trice--but with a visa--and on the far side comes to a second Senegal, Casamance. More beautiful than the first, greener, with a Club Med and mosquitos. It is as if, instead of the central massif, one were to find a whole miniature Belgium, On both sides of the border one finds the same tribes: Mandingoes, Diolas, Wolofs, the great majority of them Muslims. In Senegal French is spoken; in Gambia, English. That is all. The other differences come from 300 years of colonization. Tea on one side, wine on the other. And yet! For several years Gambia has been driving on the right and going by the metric system.

In the 18th century Great Britain, mistress of the seas, was the lawgiver on this end of the continent. The Royal Adventurers Trading to Africa, then the Royal Africa Company, had a monopoly on slave trade on the Gambia River.

In the little war between London and Paris, France won the last round; the Treaty of Versailles in 1793 resulted in an inequitable partition: Senegal to the French, the miniscule Gambia to the English. But it was not until the beginning of the 20th century that today's absurd borders were definitively inscribed on the maps. Despite all these congenital weaknesses, Gambia also had some significant strengths, at least up to last year. It was a country with no political prisoners (probably the only one on the continent) and no army. All it had was 400 to 500 "gendarmes" of the Field Forces, and a handful of policemen.

And, with a population of 500,000 at most, it had several political parties which vied for power in a gentlemen's club. In 1965, Sir Dawda Jawara, then-prime minister in the shadow of the British governor and head of the Peoples Progressive Party [PPP] was even offered that opportunity rare in Africa of losing a referendum. And it was only 5 years later, after debates as civilized as those in Westminster, that the Gambians voted by universal suffrage to establish a republic. Gambia--neither wealthy nor poor--was able to make do with little fuss (it was the only British colonial possession where there was no armed uprising) on its few resources: ground-nuts, the sun, and contraband.

The country is in fact a sort of "duty free store," with no taxes or almost none, where gadgets from the West, bought in stupendous quantities, end up on the other side of the borders, not without first having fattened the pockets of several high officials or ministers. The very open-handed and honest Sir Jawara closed his eyes, since after all everyone was satisfied and so was Gambia. Tens of thousands of Swedes, English, and Americans found Gambia's beaches offered their pleasures at a lower cost than neighboring Casamance. The night life and Banjul prostitutes became renowned.

This then is the imaginary country which Sir Jawara had imprudently left for 5 weeks of vacation in England, after finishing a last bit of work at the OAU [Organization of African Unity] summit in Nairobi in late June. In Great Britain, his second homeland, where he pursued his studies to become Gambia's best veterinarian, he had brought with him his aide-de-camp and his wife. His second wife, Lady Djemmeh. As for his first wife, Lady Juel, he had left here in Banjul with his very numerous children, in the care of his somewhat uncouth vice-president, Moussa Camara. In fact, there was a third wife, too, from the time when he was a Christian and went by the name David. But they had divorced and she was dead. People no longer spoke of her. One wife at home, the other vacationing with him, our Muslim gentleman thus gave himself over that rainy July to his favorite sport, golf. The climax of his visit, to be sure, was Prince Charles' wedding, to which he had been invited, along with about a hundred kings and heads of state, so that Britain could proclaim loudly that, while the British Empire might be nothing more now than a faded memory, the Commonwealth was still a big flourishing family.

But he knew very well that this country he had left 5,000 km behind was not just the same as it had been before. Last October a stain besmirched its English morning-coat: the head of the Field Forces, Commander Emmanuel Mahoney, was assassinated when he discovered a conspiracy against President Jawara or when he fell into a dispute with the other plotters (it was never really established which was the case). But for the first time, the Banjul prison held a man condemned to die by hanging: the assassin of the Field Forces officer, Mustapha Danso. Himself a soldier. For the first time, two small political parties were banned: MOJA (Movement for Justice in Africa) and GSRP (Gambian Socialist Revolutionary Party). Finally, Senegalese paratroopers had landed right in the middle of town during Emmanuel Mahoney's funeral to restore order at the request of the Gambian head of state. Right away, diplomatic relations with Libya--which was identified as having instigated the conspiracy--were broken. Its embassy was then occupied by the PLO [Palestine Liberation Organization] representative, who hoisted his flag to the top of the flagpole and took charge of Libya's interests.

At the end of June, Sir Jawara had scarcely left town when fresh troubles broke out. Ground-nut production had fallen from 120,000 tons to 40,000 as a result of drought; gasoline suddenly went up 50 percent on 1 July; fewer Scandinavians were coming to get tans. In short, the "peanut state" had problems. Demonstrations against the high cost of living, a taxi-driver strike in mid-July; a new Gambia, poor and mutinous, was making its appearance, an easy victim for some African predator. But Sir Jawara continued to stay in London for Prince Charles and played golf. A very unpleasant awakening lay in store for the president on Thursday, 30 July 1981.

The same morning there was another man who suspected nothing. His name was Mbaye Mbengue. Accustomed to wearing a sparkling boubou, the constant Fernandel-like smile breaking out on his face: the Senegalese ambassador to Banjul. At the very moment the coup was breaking out, he was getting on the road with his chauffeur, his wife, and his young children. He left Dakar at 0500 to be at his office at around 0900.

If he had listened to Radio Gambia, Mbaye Mbengue would have learned instantly that on the far side of the river something very serious was afoot. At 0700, the radio station--now in the hands of the rebels--announced in fact the President Jawara had been overthrown. At 0900, a certain Kukoi Samba Sanyang spoke on the airwaves. He had created a Supreme Revolutionary Council of a dozen members with the aim of establishing revolutionary socialism in Gambia. "The dictatorship of the proletariat is going to be established under the leadership of a Marxist-Leninst party." In addition to Kukoi Samba Sanyang, the council included eight other civilians and three Field Forces officers. The Ambassador's Peugeot 604 came up to the Gambia River, and he still suspected nothing. The first ferry of the day should cross the river before 1000.

In Banjul, the rebels had already taken the airport, the ferry, and of course the national radio station. They encircles the embassies, the deluxe hotels, and the police station, which resisted. Mbaye Mbengue finally arrived at Barra, at the mouth of the Gambia, where the landing-pier is located. At that point, the river is 5 km wide. Father ahead above Banjul, one could see puffs of black smoke, and the sound of gunfire wafted over from the other side of the river. The Senegalese ambassador sent his wife and children and driver back to Dakar. And he arrived in Banjul--aboard a small motorboat, and in the midst of the bullets which splashed into the water around him--all alone.

Forty thousand inhabitants: a small capital city, rather unattrative with its ramshackle old colonial structures, its houses on pile foundations, and its miserable hovels of corrugated iron. Three or four old Ghanaian tramp steamers lay at anchor in the port. Seaside Avenue, where the Senegalese Ambassader was to make his next appearance, was the showcase of Banjul. Rows and rows of stores, food shops, and even a supermarket, as cheery as a medieval castle, which opened less than 2 years ago with the president of the republic in attendance. It was the crowning jewel, the biggest French commercial establishment in Gambia, the CFAO [French Company of West Africa].

A lengthy argument took place between Mbaye Mbengue and the rebels who homes in on him. At long last, he was escorted to his embassy, a white two-story building bristling with antennas. Dotted with specks of concrete, one might say it looked a little like a waffle sprinkled over with confectioner's sugar. The rebels strongly warned him against calling for his country's assistance. They did not know that within a few hours the Senegalese embassy was to become the general headquarters for the resistance. In Banjul, a large portion of the populace, whether voluntarily or by force, had sided with the rebellion. So had the majority of the Field Forces, too. From atop requisitioned or stolen vehicles, the putschists--who had established their command post at the Field Forces barracks at Bakaus, in the residential suburbs about a dozen kilometers from the capital--were distributing thousands of weapons.

Very quickly, the looting began. On the avenue fronting the sea and in the main business streets, a stone's throw from the Senegalese Embassy, the first stores were burned and ripped apart. The looters, among whom were to be found children 7 and 8 years old, grabbed bottles of liquor, packs of cigarettes, hi-fi equipment. Women carried cooking equipment and small refrigerators on their heads. The first brawls broke out. By noon, there were already dozens of dead bodies on the streets. The rioters, who hardly knew how to load their rifles, were firing in all directions. The heat--it was monsoon season--was overpowering. At 0600 that morning it was already 30 degree C in the shade, with 89 percent humidity. Dead drunk, the demonstrators were killing each other for a quartz watch. They go caught in the crossfire between the putschists, who thought they were outflanked, and the loyalists who were defending themselves against the rebels. In the afternoon of the first day, the national council of the revolution made a twofold radio appeal. First of all, they ordered the looting stopped, and then called for blood donors to come to Victoria in the center of town. They also called on all the doctors in Banjul and all those who had medicine chests at home.

But the scenes of carnage were to last 2 or 3 days. CFAO's warehouses were sacked: in the midst of pools of blood lay dozens of old shoes abandoned there by the rioters. Later, a sort of clown who was well-known in the city and was the leader of the brass band for a local football team was arrested: he had killed some 10 women after having raped them, and fired on the supporters of a rival football team! And in a Peugeot 404 which had crashed into a wall were found six bodies riddled with bullets.

"Father Dear, Do Not Abandon Us"

In Dakar, not much was known of all this. In London, even less was known. But it could already be predicted that establishing a Marxist regime by force that might cut Senegal in two would not be tolerated.

By late afternoon Thursday the first Senegalese helicopter took to the air to drop paratroopers over Banjul. A frightful storm intervened, and the operation had to be delayed. Three battalions of the Senegalese army started moving during the night: commandos, paratroopers arriving from Dakar, from east of Gambia, and from Casamance. More than 1,500 men in all. Also on Thursday night the gray Boeing of the Senegalese head of state took off from Dakar-Yoff airport. It was to return at dawn the following day carrying President Jawara, who would take refuge in Abdou Diouf's palace. Meanwhile, in Banjul, the rebels were going wild. They opened the gates of the prison, a grayish ramshackle structure on the Bakaus road. Two gaily bedecked plaster mannequins--who were supposed to represent armed guards, sat enthroned at the entrance to the prison. As soon as they were freed, the 298 prisoners were recruited by the rebels, who provided them with arms. Among them was the only prisoner on death row, Mustapha Danso. He would be killed in fighting shortly after his liberation.

The Senegalese armored vehicles from Casamance rolled through the night. Friday morning, 24 hours after the coup broke out, the expeditionary force retook Yundum airport, 10 km from the capital. Commandos crossed the Gambia in inflatable boats. The Gambian president had just arrived in Dakar. He told journalists that the legitimate government had not been overthrown.

As for Kukoi Samba Sanyang, he was described as a "renowned nobody at the head of a small band hungry for power." In this country lacking in archives, where the inhabitants are not required to have identification papers, it was impossible to unearth a photo of the head of the rebellion. For a whole week, the Senegalese soldiers responsible for manning the border checkpoints would tear their hair. In reality, this 28-year-old boy was a candidate in the 1977 legislative elections. He had not obtained the minimum 5 percent of the vote that would have entitled him to get back his filing deposit. A student at Saint Augustine school, a Catholic school in Banjul, then at a small seminary, he had been destined to take the cloth. He had been converted and taken the name Dominique. A good sister who had spent several consecutive nights at the hospital for the wounded had known him back then: "He was a boy with just average gifts. He was lost from sight after he began to travel. To Moscow, where he took political studies, to Guinea (Conakry), to Libya, to Denmark."

At Victoria hospital, there was not enough medicine. There was nothing more for the urchins to eat. There was no more electricity in the city. The good sister saw more than 600 corpses in the hospital's morgue alone.

At the Senegalese Embassy, which is lodged almost right up against the Embassy of the Peoples Republic of China, those who remained loyal to the president began taking refuge. One lone minister was there. The others had disappeared. Into the bush or over to the rebel side. But nearby the police station continued to hold out.

The first Senegalese commandos to penetrate the city liberated the Senegalese Embassy from the jaws of the vise in which it was caught. In the streets, the looters who escaped the massacre resold their bottles of Chivas Regal for 3.5 dalassi (Fr 5). Still entrenched at the Bakaus camp, Kukoi Samba Sanyang and his friends tried one last maneuver: they would take some 30 Senegalese and Gambians hostage, among them officers of the Field Forces and the president's first wife, Lady Juel, and four of his children, the youngest of whom was only 6 weeks old. On the radio, for several days, one could hear the voice of Lady Juel and the crying of the young ones.

The president's wife implored him to give the order to the Senegalese army to withdraw, and the children, one after the other, would come to the microphone to say: "I beg you, father dear, do not abandon us." Before being taken to the Bakaus camp, Lady Juel was to meet with the rebel chief for the first time in one of the houses belonging to a former vice-president, Cherif Diba, founder of the principal opposition party, the National Convention Party. Later, during the investigation, Cherif Diba would defend himself: "Kukoi Sanyang came to ask me Qadhdhafi's telephone number. I told him I did not have it. He also asked me to say on the radio that I was siding with the revolution. I refused." Cherif Diba was later released. In fact, it was by telex that the rebel chief tried to make contact with the Libyan leader. And on Radio Gambia's airwaves he appealed to the "comrades in Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Libya, and the Soviet Union." But there was no answer....

> [Text] Putting down the rebellion was harder than Dakar expected. The two countries are now considering creation of "Senegambia." From the very moment the Senegalese army made its presence felt, the Gambian putsch began to turn sour for the rebels, deprived as they were of the "revolutionary support" on which they had counted. After having recounted yesterday the blow-by-blow unfolding of the Banjul insurrection, Yves de Chazournes today fills us in on all the particulars of the retaking of power by President Jawara and his faithful allies and Senegalese protectors. Order has now been restored in Banjul. The Senegalese army is not occupying the country, but it is attending to everything. It is already thinking in terms of "Senegambia."

Friday evening, a communique from the office of the president of the republic of Senegal announced the Gambian rebellion. But it was not until the following day that Abdou Diouf, the new president, would announce on television that the Senegalese army had intervened.

Friday afternoon, 20 km from Banjul out in the sea, 83 Senegalese, mostly fishermen and traveling salesmen, were taken hostage. They would not be freed until the following Thursday, bearded, dressed in rags, and starving.

In camouflage gear, the Senegalese continued their slow advance. The resistance was much greater than Dakar wanted to admit. During the night, a Puma helicopter crashed off the port of Banjul with 18 men abroad. It was not clear what had happened. Had the craft been hit by the rebels? Had the pilot made an error? Only one commando, wounded, make it back to shore after a 2-hour swim. Later in the day, the bulk of the Senegalese army finally crossed Denton Bridge, which connects the little island where the center of town is located with the suburbs. But it would take several more hours to occupy the studios of Radio Gambia which the rebels sacked before abandoning. But these latter had a mobile transmitter mounted on a blue Lada from which they continued to broadcast for 48 hours. At regular intervals, the voices of the president's children filled the airwaves. Nearly 90 corpses rotting in the streets of Banjul were buried in a communal grave. Others were thrown into the sea by bulldozer. Impeccable in his battle-dress, Major Won, who headed operations in Banjul, said several days later: "I filled my trucks full of them." The final tally was 600 dead in Banjul alone.

Sunday 2 August: in the afternoon a Senegalese military aircraft brought Sir Dawda Jawara to Banjul airport. There was hardly anyone there to greet him. Only a handful of Field Forces men had remained loyal. Abdullah Mboup, the head of the retreating soldiers, was himself very downcast. He had not even had time to remove the boubou he had hurriedly pulled over his uniform. But there was the Senegalese Ambassador, still smiling. His white chancery had become sanctuary. One after the other, the ministers emerged from the shadows and sought refuge with him. Sir Jawara himself stayed with the ambassador for 4 nights.

Everyone slept on the carpet.

Senegalese soldiers succeeded in repulsing hundreds of rebels towards the residential neighborhoods of Bakaus and Sera Kunda. On Monday 3 August the Gambian head of state issued his third appeal in less than 48 hours on a privately owned radio station, Radio Sid, which had been established several years back by an old Swedish adventuress.

He had lost his legendary placidity. He asked his people to believe in him, and called on the "group of armed criminals and lunatics financed by their foreign masters" to surrender. He described Kukoi Sanyang and his gang as "sadistic buffoons."

In Dakar, the word had already been out for 2 days that all the trouble was over. But fighting continued to rage. The losses sustained by the Senegalese army continued to rise. Now there was talk of 30 deaths. LE SOLEIL, Dakar's most popular newspaper, announced on Tuesday, finally, and all in the same breath: the attempted coup in Gambia, the intervention of the Senegalese army, and the return to calm "without the spilling of blood."

The newspaper's editorial writer burst forth with the following: "Behind the weak nonentity which is Kukoi Samba Sanyang lurks the hideous and terrifying shadow of the ogre that was going to devour Gambia like an appetizer before feasting on Senegal as the main course. No, the delicate finger [of Gambian territory] inside Senegal must not be transformed into the dagger planted in the heart of our country."

With utmost secrecy, Great Britain dispatched to the scene a commando unit of the elite sharpshooters of the SAS, the Special Air Service. It was they who, on Wednesday 5 August, freed the president's wife and children. They and the 15 members of the intervention group of the Senegalese national constabulary, a team modeled closely on the French GIGN [expansion unknown]. Not a shot was fired in the operation, and the following day, when all the other hostages were freed (in all there had been more than 160), the Senegalse soldiers remained immobile as the few rebels who had still been entrenched in the Field Forces camp at Bakaus passed in front of them. "If one of my men had fired, it would have been a massacre," said the impeccable Major Won the following day. Impeccable and gallant: it was he who took the two Jawara babies in his arms while, under his astonished gaze, the president and his first wife embraced long and tearfully.

That is not quite the end of the story, but already the winds have changed in Banjul. The Field Forces suddenly have brand new uniforms. By contrast, at the reception desk of the Hotel Sunwind, in the midst of piles of cartridges and broken glass, there is an old uniform, a pair of boots, and a Kalachnikov. The tawdry finery of one, ten, a hundred rebels who would reappear in their civilian clothes and swear they were not involved in the coup. The heavyset Spaniard who manages this Swedish hotel which has no tourists because the season is over laments: "As soon as the Senegalese leave, it is going to start all over again. It has nothing to do with Libyans or anyone else, it is among Gambians."

Other deluxe hotels served as refuges for some hundreds of Europeans cloistered there for a week. One hundred sixty people were packed like sardines in the residence of the United States Ambassador. But few foreign houses were looted. "They had given instructions not to touch the/ toubabs (Europeans). /At least it was not a Kolwezi."

The following Saturday, however, a giant RAF Hercules began to shuttle between Dakar and Banjul to evacuate hundreds of Europeans. Mostly tourists, but also some residents. While the hunt for the rebels continued, life began to return to normal despite the curfew and the Panhard light machinegun fire which streaked through the city.

At the /Texaco/ bar (right beside a filling station pump, to be sure) today's heros in uniform, who will probably be despised tomorrow, cruise for pretty Gambian girls. The Senegalese army is no longer an army of occupation, even if it attends to everything, literally everything. In his victory press conference, Sir Jawara, surrounded by his new Senegalese pretorian guard, announced breathelessly that from now on the security services of the two countries would be merged.

It was the beginning of a Senegambia which existed for 25 years at the end of the 18th century. But the two countries will still be separate for a long time to come: a small country wedged inside a large one and obliged to have a regime compatible with it. "We, the Senegalese, find the Gambians to be idiots. And they look on us as sharpies. But in truth we are all each other's relatives and obliged to live together."

The head of the CFAO, a solid and thundering Falstaff from Ardeche, is the consul of France, Belgium, and Denmark. On the wall of his office are hung a swarm of diplomas and proclamations conferred on Mr Hubert Berge. The most handsome of these awards is the National Order of the Lion of Senegal. Indeed, perhaps it is he who is the real president of this awkward little republic.

Established nearly 100 years ago in Gambia, the CFAO, with its antique counters exuding the colonial atmosphere, now has a turnover larger than the national budget. For more than 30 years, Hubert Berge has been giving the orders, keeping open house, regaling ministers and ambassadors behind the scenes and seeing them pass through his office. In other words, he knows the country. For him, as for the Senegalese representative, Mbaye Mbengue, there is no doubt that the armed coup attempt was engineered from outside.

Libya? No one says it officially, not even Sir Jawara. But everyone thinks so. And it is true that the Gambians and Senegalese recruited by "the ayatollah of Kaolak," (a city 150 km from Dakar) were trained in Libyan camps. Today, that ayatollah, (as he is nicknamed) a certain Ahmed Niasse, is in prison in Niger. "And then you have heard this story about the Ladas which fires everyone's imagination here in Banjul!"

Forty-eight hours before the coup, in fact, about 60 Ladas of every color (it is a sort of Fiat 124 built in the USSR) had been offloaded with unusual haste from a Soviet steamer. After having vanished as if by magic, they resurfaced the morning of the putsch in the hands of the rebels who used them to distribute arms to the population. Perhaps, after all, they had been stolen: no one knows. The Lada distributor, a Lebanese, cannot be found. All these unregistered Ladas were later brought back to the Field Forces camp at Bakaus.

As for the 3,000 Kalachnikovs found by the Senegalese, they all had been numbered and indeed came from the Bakaus armory. In 1977, the Soviets, and later the Chinese, had delivered several shipments to Gambia.

Colonel Ngom, the leader of the Senegalese contingent in Gambia, a pudgy and heavily perfumed man with his Bigeard cap is jubilant: he mounted his operation the way he wanted to do it. "According to my methods and in the way I learned at Pau." It was there, at Bearn, that he studied. He did not need the French. "We only took care of the logistics," I was told on the telephone by post captain Bonnavita, who commands the 1,300 French soldiers in Dakar. "Munitions, medical supplies, a little assistance."

At Barra, at the mouth of the Gambia, Senegalese soldiers had dislodged three Gambians bearing arms the other night. At the Gambian police station where I happened to be at the time they were beaten unmercifully for a quater of an hour. It was just in the next room. When the howling became too loud, someone closed the door behind me.

MATCHET'S DIARY: DETAILS ON COUP ATTEMPT GIVEN

London WEST AFRICA in English 24 Aug 81 pp 1914-1916

[Article by Banjul]

[Text]

THERE WERE two significant things about the reopening of the Gambian Parliament last week. Instead of five opposition members sitting opposite the government front bench, there were only three: Sherrif Dibba and Gibou Jagne are in detention.

An empty chair was left symbolically where Sherrif Dibba usually sits. Secondly, at the front of the distinguished visitors' seats was a senior Senegalese officer in camouflage uniform. President Jawara, who used to take pride in driving about his capital without any sort of escort, was preceded on his way to Parliament by a Senegalese armoured car.

The Presidential address was delivered quietly, without any oratorical flourishes but with an emotional intensity when he spoke of the aborted coup.

Parliament would not be open at all, he said, if "that dastardly act perpetrated by a small group of irresponsible renegades and traitors who completely disturbed the civil order, peace and tranquillity of our nation had succeeded . . . the aim of those traitors was to destroy all the cherished institutions that we, the government and people of this country, have all laboured so hard to establish and then to impose on us an alien system by the use of force . . . my government was not prepared simply to hand over the authority that had been vested in us by our people. By the grace of God we managed to survive the crisis.

"The unfortunate eight-day episode has made an ugly addition to this country's history, and our international image of a peaceful and stable nation has been badly tarnished.

"It is indeed regrettable that a handful of rebellious individuals has been to wreak such havoc on our nation in their attempt to destroy some of the basic things that the vast majority of Gambians cherish most. They denied innocent Gambians their right to life and murdered our fellow citizens. They refused to respect the right of ownership of property. They destroyed homes of innocent people, stole cars and looted shops, and in their attempt to impose a new government and political system on our people they were denying them the fundamental right of political participation that is guaranteed by our democratic system of government in our Constitution.

"In the aftermath of this threat to our internal security some have asked whether it would not be appropriate at this time to consolidate both the power of the state and the power of the executive. Let me state categorically and unequivocally that the system of democracy that has always existed will prevail. There will be no dictatorship in The Gambia — neither by President, nor by government, nor by proletariat. There is no room in this country for Marxism-Lennism as a form of government.

"Apart from the fact that the necessary precondition of an industrialised proletariat does not exist, the basic tenets of this doctrine are inimical to some of our most fundamental traditional values.

"For one thing The Gambia and Gambians will never tolerate a socio-political system that prevents them from pursuing their religious beliefs. Some have called the rebellious activity a revolution purely to glorify the whole affair. It was merely anarchy caused by lawless, trigger-happy criminals who, because of their individual and collective inadequacies to face up to the challenges and sacrifices of independence, had abdicated their responsibility to themselves and to their country . . ."

The President listed the large amounts of aid that had been offered by international agencies and by individual countries, including $10m. by Saudi Arabia and an unquantified amount of medical supplies by Nigeria. He then dealt at length with the objectives of the second five-year plan (which will be the subject of a later article in West Africa). The President raised a cheer when he referred to "the timely assistance afforded to my government during the recent crisis by my friend and brother President Abdou Diouf and the government of the Republic of Senegal on the basis of the 1965 agreement on mutual defence assistance."

Apart from legal considerations there was a moral obligation: because the security of Senegal and the The Gambia are inextricably linked they could not condone the usurpation of power by the rebels. "Thus, their magnanimous gesture of assistance during the critical period, for which we give them deepest thanks, calls for all Gambians to respond in like manner and play their own part in cementing further Sene-Gambian co-operation."

The President said that what was needed were qualities of commitment, self-sacrifice and discipline, both in the political leaders and in the people to whom they gave an example. "The eight-day nightmare we endured should serve to underscore for each and every one of us the priceless value of our democracy . . . although the country has returned to normality, the problem is far from over. In order to guarantee peace and stability in the country we must maintain continued vigilance and ensure that we do not rest on our laurels and allow hostile forces to develop in our midst again."

When the President left, Parliament turned to its normal business. It is an indication that the crisis is over that the first question on the order paper referred to the need for a better fence around the Fort Louvel Monument in Stanley Street, Banjul. The matter was receiving the attention of the government, said the reply.

How the word was spread

THE VOICE announcing the rebellion to the world early on Thursday morning was that of Alhaji Soso Ismaila, a staff announcer of Radio Gambia. He told me that as he and a technician arrived at the radio station at about 5.30 am six or seven young men with guns surrounded them and pushed into the studio with them. A script was put into his hands and he was ordered to read it. He protested that he was too nervous with all the guns about and anyway they always started with a recorded reading from the Koran, which he proceeded to put on. This infuriated the gunmen and it had to come off. He then read the script, announcing that a National Revolutionary Council had taken over, suspending the National Assembly, and so on.

One of the young gunmen was Kukoi Samba Sanyang (I am now persuaded that "Kukoi" is a better spelling than "Kekoi", though it is pronounced "Kekoi" and it is true that it means "clean" or "spotless"). He then read his own script.

He was very nervous, Alhaji Ismaila said, but clearly in command. He was frequently at the broadcasting station after that, closely dictating what the hostages were forced to say on the air, including Lady Jawara and her children, who were treated roughly, much to the distress and anger of the staff.

On the Saturday a Sengalese armoured car appeared on the road outside and opened fire on the radio station, but it was not stormed. One technician, Mr. Bamba Sallah, was wounded and later died in hospital. On Saturday night the transmitter at Bonto was damaged by gunfire and no further broadcasts went out. The station was not "liberated" until the Monday. The radio staff thought that stories about Sanyang being able to continue broadcasting from some sort of mobile transmitter were false. [A thought: would it not be a good idea for radio stations in coup-prone countries to have a hidden button somewhere which when pushed in emergencies broke something vital and put the station out of action, at least for some hours? This could prove a serious handicap to coup-makers.]

MOJA leader was shot

SANYANG had, it is believed, no connection with the Movement for Justice in Africa (MOJA). The Gambian leader of MOJA, "King Koro" Sallah, was convicted earlier this year of possessing illegal weapons (a handful of hunting cartridges) and sentenced to a fine. He refused to pay and spent one night in prison before someone else paid. He has now almost certainly been killed. He was shot by loyal police early in the rebellion in circumstances that are not clear. He was taken to hospital but discharged himself, presumably fearing he would be arrested if he stayed. His family now believe he is dead.

His younger brother, Nyanga Sallah, also died tragically. He was a student and a first-class football player just back from Amsterdam and not involved in anything. He was arrested, on the Thursday and held for the night in an overcrowded cell in which he died of suffocation.

The full story of this "black hole of Calcutta scandal" has not yet been told but deserves investigation. Some say that as many as 20 died in that cell, while awaiting interrogation by the Senegalese. A few more facts about Sanyang, gathered from a young man who comes from the same village. He is disliked on his home territory "because of his lies and his lusts". He spent some time in Guinea where he learnt his revolutionary ideas. He has a great admiration for President Sékou Touré and speaks fluent French.

No insurance on "rebellion"

FINALLY, I went to see Mr. Omar Dibba, managing director of the Gambian National Insurance Company, expecting to find him a worried man, having nightmares about the cost of all those burnt-out and looted supermarkets, wrecked and stolen cars, and vandalised houses. However, he was cheerful. He explained that all his policies like most insurance policies, allow damage by "riot, strikes, civil commotion" and some other things, but they exclude "rebellion". In his view, what happened in The Gambia was a "rebellion" and he plans to repudiate all claims. "I shall not have to pay a single butut," he said.

The matter may be tested in the courts. However, even if the decision goes against him, this would not be a disaster for the state-owned Gambian National Insurance Company. Like all major insurance companies, it has reinsurance treaties overseas to help it bear a big loss. The result would only be difficulties in renegotiating these treaties. Meanwhile every time a politician or commentator mentions "rebellion" or "the rebels", there is a song in Mr. Dibba's heart.

BRIEFS

ARCHBISHOP ADVOCATES CHURCH INVOLVEMENT--Accra, September 1--Most reverend Ishmael Samuel Lemaire was enthroned as fifth Anglican archbishop of the province of West Africa at a ceremony at Accra cathedral at the weekend. Earlier the new archbishop, a Ghanaian, told a synod of the Accra diocese that religion and politics had the common objectives of ensuring the welfare of the people and there was a need for interaction between them. Those who said religion and politics did not mix want "to rob religion of its relevance and practicality", the archbishop said in a reference to politicians who warned the church to stay out of politics. "The church will be guilty of dereliction of duty if it does not actively involve itself with all the interests and occupations of the people", Archbishop Lemaire added. Critical problems now confronting Ghana stressed the need for the church to advance into politics, science and education from which it appeared to ahve been expelled, he said. RELATIONS WITH FRENCH SOCIALIST GOVERNMENT SEEN AS QUESTION MARK

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3341, 10 Aug 81 p 1819

[Excerpts] Mr. Sékou Touré said prior to a meeting with Mr. Guy Penne (Mitterrand's advisor on African affairs), that he was "ready to co-operate with any French government". Yet since his government has so far kept quiet on the outcome of his talks with Francois Mitterrand's emissary, the possible turns of Franco-Guinea relations remain unsure.

Commercial exchanges

Some political analysts feel that insofar as she has economic interests in Guinea, it is in the interests of France to improve her bilateral co-operations with the Conakry regime. However, the volume of commercial exchanges between the two countries has decreased since they broke up diplomatic ties in 1965. Guinea's agricultural output is presently assessed as nil in terms of cash crops such as cocoa and coffee. Collective farming killed the production of bananas which used to be exported to France. Apart from FRIGUIA, a joint venture French-built bauxite plant located in Fria, there is little French capital invested in Guinea. Most French companies that were once established in Guinea have long since moved their assets into neighbouring countries. Following Giscard's official visit in December, 1978, a few French companies hesitatingly tested the Guinean ground, but foreign exchange red tape seems to hinder their progress.

On the cultural front, there has been no meaningful progress since 1965, save the fact that an agricultural institute located in Faranah (Mr. Sékou Touré's home town) was named after Valery Giscard D'Estaing. The French language has not been taught in Guinea at the primary school level during the last decade. Books, any sort of books, are simply not on the Guinean market, and the existing French Cultural Centre is strictly reserved for the tiny community of French ex-patriates.

Lots of imagination and goodwill is needed on both sides to build a new base for co-operation between Guinea and France under the new socialist administration.

TOURE CALLS FOR FEDERATION--Livingstone, Zambia, August 27--Visiting Guinean President Ahmed Sekou Touré today called for the formation of a federation of Southern African states to fight apartheid and to promote economic development in the region. "If such a federation was formed, the future would look bright in occupied Namibia (South-West Africa), and apartheid South Africa can quickly join the federation once liberated", Mr. Sekou Touré said as he arrived at Livingstone airport. The visiting leader, accompanied by Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, also said such a federation should have acommon currency. Mr. Kaunda endorsed the idea, saying he would suggest it to his counterparts in the Southern African region. He said he would be interested in a federation foreign minister's post. VIEIRA PRAISES ROLE OF USSR, CUBA IN SUPPORT ACTIVITIES

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 26 Aug 81 p 8

[Excerpt] "Let us make of the PAIGC the party of all the heroes and the fighters for freedom. All comrades must experience, through the PAIGC, the moving force of our revolution which brought about the independence of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde. It was the only liberation movement on the west coast of Africa that achieved independence with arms in hand." This statement was made by commandant Joao Bernardo Vieira at the opening session of the first national conference of the party in the FARP [Revolutionary People's Armed Forces] which was held yesterday and should end today.

With the participation of many hundreds of delegates from all the military units in the country, the conference assumed a special meaning today, following the 14 November events and when efforts are being concentrated on the preparations for the party's extraordinary congress.

"We shall not allow anyone to prevent us from achieving our goals," Comrade Nino said, stressing that at this time our task is to build the country. "We must be vigilant, because the enemy appears under many guises. We cannot jump on the trampoline, but must constantly go ahead, and this is one of the best teachings Cabral left us." Comrade Nino added: "As Cabral used to say, only we can build things, and only we can destroy everything. When we discover that there are people who do not work well, we should expel them and replace them with those who have proved themselves better."

In reference to Guinea-Bissau's economic situation, the chairman of the revolutionary council, who was accompanied by Comrades Victor Saude Maria, deputy chairman of the council, Paulo Correia, member of the revolutionary council and minister of the armed forces and other high military officials, mentioned the Naguicave situation as an example of the lack of responsibility in how things were carried out by the deposed regime. "Everything was done to favor Cape Verde."

"We must consolidate the party in the FARP," Comrade Nino said, "so that all comrades are aware of it and thus prevent cases of corruption, ambition and other evils."

At another point, Comrade Nino stated: "We gratefully acknowledge the support of the socialist countries, mainly the Soviet Union and Cuba. Our solidarity and cooperation will continue to increase. We would like them to feel in Cabral's land as they do in the Soviet Union, homeland of Lenin, and Cuba, homeland of Fidel."

In presenting his report as minister of the armed forces, Comrade Paulo Correia analyzed the role of the FARP at this particular time and the prospects ahead.

"The task of defending our territorial integrity against internal and external enemies demands sacrifices, and love for the homeland. Referring to the importance of the conference, Comrade Correia said that it was made possible by the 14 November movement, which put the party on the right road.

BRIEFS

MOSCOW BOOK FAIR--The Republic of Guinea-Bissau will be represented at the third Moscow book and record exhibition to be held from 2 to 8 September. Comrade Duco Castro Fernandes, in charge of the department of publishing and circulation of books and records (DEDILD) and head of the cultural center, left Bissau for the USSR. He told us before leaving that his trip to Moscow will permit the exchange of experiences with representatives from other countries and publishing houses and will reinforce the ties with the Soviet publishing house Mescskniga, which recently proposed to initiate an advertising campaign to bring our books to the attention of other publishers. He will also take advantage of his stay in the USSR to select a number of Soviet books to be translated into Portuguese so they can be more widely accessible to Guinean readers. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 29 Aug 81 p 3]

STUDENTS TO USSR--A group of 46 students from Guinea-Bissau left yesterday for the Soviet Union to attend various intermediate and higher courses. Another group of 46 students will leave next week for that country as well, while the confirmation for the departure of 30 more students who will enroll in professional courses is awaited. Of the first two groups totaling 96 individuals, 40 were awarded scholarships by the Soviet Government, while the rest are the recipients of grants contributed by the mass organizations, by the Guinea-Bissau-USSR Friendship Association and other international organisms. The award of a considerable number of scholarships by the USSR is aimed at helping our country to urgently train the cadres who are indispensable to the goals of national reconstruction. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 29 Aug 81 p 8]

FRENCH JEEP DONATION--In a ceremony held day before yesterday at the port of Bissau the French Government offered 50 Citroen military jeeps (Mehari type) to the Revolutionary People's Armed Forces. Present at the ceremony were Comrade Paulo Correia, minister of the armed forces and other officials from the FARP general staff, besides Comrade Julio Semedo, secretary general for foreign affairs, and, for the French side, French charge d'affaires Robin and a representative from the cooperation center. Robin stressed that this gesture symbolizes the French Government's willingness to help our people overcome some difficulties in the field of transportation. Comrade Paulo Correia thanked the French Government for this praiseworthy initiative, stating that the vehicles will be used for the efficient mobilization of our armed forces in carrying out the noble mission to defend and protect our sovereignty. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 22 Aug 81 p 8]

GDR DONATION--The GDR recently offered the government of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau a donation in the amount of 1 million dollars (about 35 million Guinean pesos), composed of 1,200 tons of cement, 4 cement-mixing machines and 20 sewing machines. The goods arrived in Bissau on the German ship "Anton Saefkow." This donation is proof of the traditional ties of cooperation, friendship and solidarity between the two countries, parties and governments, forged and cemented during the long years of our struggle for national liberation. It should be noted that the GDR has been one of the nations which have contributed the most to our country, while GDR technicians have significantly contributed to the development of Guinea-Bissau in the fields of livestock, industry, energy, education, health and information. PORTUGUESE CC NEWSPAPER CELEBRATION--The PAIGC will be represented at the celebrations organized by the newspaper AVANTE, organ of the Portuguese Communist Party, to be held in Lisbon from 4 to 6 September. The party representative will be Comrade Helder Proenca from the information and propaganda department of the CNG [National Council of Guinea] secretariat. Our party will set up a stand with a photo exhibition and documents on our armed struggle for national liberation and on the 14 November events. The celebrations will also include a small theater that will present a cultural program related to African cinematography. A number of films will be shown that will focus on the achievements of the young Portuguese-speaking African nations. [Excerpt] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 2 Sep 81 p 3]

RICE SHIPMENT--A shipment of 10,000 tons of rice is being offloaded in the port of Bissau, 5,000 of which were donated by the Pakistani Government to the Republic of Guinea-Bissau, while the rest were bought from that country by our government. According to statistics provided by the Ministry of Trade, Fisheries and Artisans, this rice shipment will satisfy the needs of the population for approximately 3 months, that is, until the time of this year's harvest. This shipment is the result of a mission to Pakistan last March. It should be noted that the arrival of 10,000 more tons of rice is awaited, the initial transaction having involved 20,000 tons. DELEGATIONS TO USSR, PORTUGAL--After having participated in the assembly of the founders of the Estrela do Mar mixed Guinea-Bissau-USSR fishing company, which was held in Moscow from 7 to 14 August, a delegation from our country returned to Bissau yesterday. It was led by Comrade Godinho Gomes, secretary general of the Ministry of Commerce, Fisheries and Artisans. According to his statements, the results of the assembly were positive and will permit the further development of the Estrela do Mar company, as well as expand cooperation in the administrative field. On his way back from the USSR, Comrade Gomes visited Portugal at the head of a trade delegation which established contacts with the state secretariat for trade, the state secretariat for fisheries and other Portuguese Government departments. At the same time, a delegation from the National Bank of Guinea-Bissau visited Portugal to open negotiations with Portuguese banks for a line of credit that will permit the importation of goods to Guinea-Bissau. DELEGATION TO DPRK--A Guinea-Bissauan delegation from the Ministry of Rural Development is in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to participate in a meeting of the nonaligned and developing countries related to programs aimed at developing agricultural and food production. Our delegation includes Comrades Antonio Mandinga, director general of livestock services and Roberto Cuino, director of SUINAVE [expansion unknown], who left Bissau last Wednesday. At this symposium, which will be held from 26 to 31 August, Guinea-Bissau's representatives will draw attention to our strategy to increase production, our limitations and the successes achieved in developing rice growing, and the increase in irrigated and cultivated areas. According to Comrade Antonio Mandinga, this meeting is aimed at pointing out that developing countries must study the methods to achieve self-sufficiency in food production. CULTURAL DELEGATION TO USSR--A cultural delegation from our country composed of 56 persons, including the ballet "This is our Beloved Country," the national orchestra, representatives from the national film institute and two painters, left on 21 August for the Soviet Union for approximately 15 days. The delegation is led by filmmaker Sana N'Hada. According to information received from Comrade Luisa Borges, director general for culture, the Guinean artists will give shows in various cities of the USSR. An exhibition of paintings from our country will also be held. [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 26 Aug 81 p 3]

FORMATION OF JOINT ASSOCIATION WITH LIBYA REPORTED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 7 Aug 81 pp 1, 6, 8

[Text] The first association between African countries to be established in Madagascar was born on 20 March. This is the National Association for Malagasy-Libyan Friendship, which was introduced to the press by the honorary president, CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] member Marojama Razanabahiny, and the president, Minister Koussay Said Ali, at Tsimbazaza Palace.

The objectives of the association are the consolidation and improvement of friendship and understanding in the relations between the Malagasy and Libyan peoples. These relations are founded on the views shared by the two presidents in the ideological and political domain as well as in the social and economic fields.

But let us look at the history of the association.

Diplomatic relations between Libya and Madagascar began to intensify in 1973, when Malagasy diplomacy opened up in all directions.

Thus the relations of friendship and cooperation between our two countries go back to 1974, to the time of the official visit by Mr Didier Ratsiraka, then minister of foreign affairs. Since then, the ties of friendship and brotherhood between our two countries have continued to improve; and the first visit to Madagascar by a Libyan delegation led by Minister Abdul Majid in 1977 confirmed those good relations. Thus, the joint commission between our two governments was created in order to promote cooperation between our two peoples.

At the time of the first meeting of the commission in 1978 in Antananarivo, it was agreed that a Libyan-Malagasy friendship association would be created.

Thus, on 20 March 1981, a meeting of members of the CSR, notably the presidents of the national revolutionary organizations of the Front and the ministers, was held at the ministry of foreign affairs, in order to create the executive bureau, which was elected from among the founding members. Those elected were Razanabahiny Marojama, honorary president; Koussay Said Ali, president; Seramila Beza and Todiarivo Pierre, vice-presidents; Rajaonson Francois and Heurtier Georges, secretaries-general; Leaby Jean Bosco and Randria Rene, treasurers; and Razafindrazaka Laurent and Soudjay Bachir Adehame, advisers.

The association, since its creation, has established a program of activities primarily involved with the creation of sections within the decentralized communities sensitization and education of the popular masses about the political and social life of Libya, by means of films, expositions, conferences, the organization of demonstrations of friendship on Libya's national day, Libyan anniversaries, or historic dates in Libya's history, and the exchange of cultural delegations, athletic teams.... It should be stressed that anybody who applied for membership (temporary headquarters at the ministry of youth) and sponsored by a revolutionary organization can join the association, which also accepts supporting members and sustaining members. There are no fees to be paid. However, members will be asked to participate voluntarily in specific activities as they come up.

It should be noted that the Libyan-Malagasy association, the counterpart to our own, already exists in the Libyan Arab Socialist People's Jamahiriya, and its president is Mohamed Chouedi, secretary of the people's committee on information.

DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS FOR SOUTH DESCRIBED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 6 Aug 81 pp 1, 3-4, 6

[Excerpts] In the Toliara faritany [higher administrative unit], reputed to be a vast garden of projects, a new factory is not necessarily one more factory. If, when SUMATEX [Southern Madagascar Textile] opens its doors, the SNHU [New Oil Works Company (of Toliary)] is closing down or "Toly" is slowing down operations, one has difficulty seeing what real economic boom the region can expect.

And yet, ever since the South has existed, all officials have dreamed, promised and sometimes even "felt and seen" the signs pointing to authentic development. Even so, it is not surprising that for the inhabitants of the region, hope is not necessarily a project. Not much water flows under the bridges in the region, but a lot will flow before Sakoa, Manantenina and other Mandrare look like a concrete reality to the people of the South.

"Tulear is a city in the midst of full development. For once, this is not the usual official trite statement, but rather, the truth, which is strikingly obvious to the visitor. It is impossible not to be struck by the many construction sites around the young city."

This was the impression of a journalist reporting from the capital of the South 30 years ago. When leafing through the old newspapers and rereading reports and studies from the last 50 years, one is impressed by the enthusiasm of the successive leaders over the future of the city and its region.

Every time, the initial thrust was there.

That may very well be, but a close examination of the economic situation of the faritany and more particularly, of the Toliara region, prevents one from being so categorical and enthusiastic.

Naturally, there are encouraging signs, a manifest resumption of activity, despite the national situation. Unfortunately, the accomplishments, whether recent or from the past, lose their steam and fail to maintain their cruising speed. If there is not some remedy, it is to be feared that a new factory will not necessarily be one more factory!

Sufficient

The South, and the Toliara region in particular, is basically agricultural, even if that dependency tends to be attenuated with units such as Toly, which relies on imported raw materials or the Star Breweries project. The SNHU, for example, was totally inactive in April because of the impossibility of obtaining peanuts. There has been a spectacular drop in production due to the drought, but also due to new cultural orientations on the part of farmers. Henceforth, the SNHU should grow its own peanuts and become involved in cottonseed in order to be able to maintain an adequate level of refining. Other causes of its current problems are the age of the oilworks' equipment and the difficulty in finding spare parts.

This interruption in local raw materials should not affect SUMATEX, which relies on cotton from the South in order to operate normally. The chairman of the faritany executive committee, Jean Baptiste Ernest, is ready, if necessary, to issue an order banning the shipping of Toliara cotton out of the faritany, so anxious is he to see that brand-new plant operate normally and not follow the pattern of the others.

However, the faritany's farm production is worrisome, even if one can expect better results this year than in previous years because of favorable rainfall. Little rain is needed in the South in order for it to "flourish: 100 mm a month from December to March, or an average of some 3 mm a day. This is adequate if labor, the supply of quality seed and the certainty of a profitable collection follow, ensuring the region of a normal economic situation.

Drops

Cotton is grown in the province on 8,397 hectares, distributed between Samangoky (3,250), Toliara (3,802), Ihosy (795) and Sodemo (600). In 1980, production was 4,412 tons in Samangoky, 1,529 tons in Toliara (the difference is striking, given the greater cultivated area), 618 tons in Ihosy and 641 tons in Sodemo.

During the same year, the area in peanuts amounted to 5,592 hectares, including 3,692 hectares in Toliara, 700 in Morondava and 1,200 in Tolagnaro. Production was 2,383 tons, 560 tons and 960 tons respectively, with average yields ranging from 640 kilograms per hectare to 800 kilograms per hectare.

The faritany does not grow enough rice for its own needs. The crop covers 21,853 hectares (18,503 in Toliara, 1,905 in Morondava and 1,400 in Tolagnaro), for a production of 26,117 tons, 2,925 tons and 2,240 tons, or a per-hectare yield of 1.6 tons.

Cape peas have dropped drastically, even though this product was for a long time one of the South's main sources of wealth. The drought has had a great effect here: only 3,500 tons on 6,564 hectares.

Corn (16,211 tons on 23,355 hectares) and manioc (129,910 tons on 27,030 hectares) remain steady.

In the face of these difficulties experienced by the region in maintaining its farm production at an adequate level when it should normally be increasing, one can understand the concern of local manufacturers who, like those at SUMATEX, have placed big stakes on the faritany.

SUMATEX

Officials of SUMATEX, which was immediately set up as a socialist enterprise, have made and won an initial bet: In 9 months, the plant was operational after the laying of the cornerstone. This demonstrates a vigor and initiative that deserve to be emphasized, especially when brooding and anxiousness are the general tone in business circles.

This is not at all astonishing with respect to the promoters of SUMATEX, who are none other than those of SOTEMA [Majunga Textile Company].

Nevertheless, they still have to win a second wager, that of keeping SUMATEX in operation. This type of sophisticated plant, which contrasts with the region's "antiques," must operate 24 hours a day in order to maintain its profitability. If a single break in the chain should occur (supply of raw materials, energy, any social conflict, and so on), the plant would be unable to produce, to remain competitive.

The concerns of the SUMATEX officials are of two types: first of all, supplying the plant with raw cotton, from regional production, if possible, or by importing, if need be. Second, it is necessary to train a labor force reputed for its mobility and quickness to go out on strike at the slightest pretext. Will the "house style," that of SOTEMA, which was a success at Mahajanga and which naturally demands sustained efforts with respect to production, but which also provides advantageous social conditions, turn out to be effective in the South? That is somewhat of a mystery at present.

Cotton fiber needs are 2,500 tons a year, in other words, the entire production of the faritany, in order to produce 13 million meters of fabric, one-third of SOTEMA's production. Important for Toliara, SUMATEX therefore remains a modest textile unit on a national scale.

Too Much Water

The economic fallout for the region is obvious if, in addition -- as is hoped -- its existence whips up cotton production. With the exception of some specialized management personnel, all of the labor force, trained locally, is from the region. It numbers some 1,000 persons. When operating at full capacity, the monthly wage mass paid out by SUMATEX will be some 40 million Malagasy francs.

Unfortunately, the port has bogged down and no longer responds to the needs of traffic that is growing again. The draft is limited to 7.4 meters. For a single moored ship, the pier is collapsing. While it is limited to a load of 12 tons, it often has to bear 30, but is being repaired. Actually, a new port is needed at Toliara and that port will come, perhaps, if the Sakoa coal passes through it one day and if traffic from Fianarantsoa grows heavier toward the South after repair of the Ihosy-Sakaraha road. Working conditions, labor and climatic conditions are excellent in Toliara, which is something to be taken into consideration.

Drop of Water

The hope of seeing the Malagasy South gradually emerge from a chronic underdevelopment that is more flagrant here than elsewhere because nature does not make things easier, truly exists, unless once again, the visions and mirages of which all those who have become enamored of this region derange the mind. Has the "drop of water" so long awaited in this dry, poor environment not finally grown larger? Or does every project that becomes a reality in this region, reputed to be a cemetery, conceal the extent of the problem, the exaggerated financial effort that has to be made to make the South a region like all others?

Blunders

For a long time, hope in the South has been named Sakoa (coal), Manantenina (bauxite), Tolagnaro (uranium), and so on. From the colonial administrators to the chiefs of the old provinces, the same hopes, the same dreams existed. Who then would blame the people who quite simply await a little rain, who want to think of their present rather than their future.

Other SUMATEX plants (and cotton) are needed to truly make the people of the South aware, for they face a daily reality of such a nature that it is now impossible to make them take projects for hopes, especially since the failures, like everywhere else, are abundant.

Moreover, the SUMATEX project spread like a spot of oil, bringing about the construction of a new thermal generating station by JIRAMA [Malagasy Electricity and Water Company]. The station supplies the city and shows that if one will indeed take the trouble and if the necessary financial means are brought into play, the water problem could be solved. At 70 meters, SUMATEX found a flow of 120 cubic meters per hour. The only problem has to do with the evacuation of the water.

One of the special features of SUMATEX is the absence of the finishing of fabric. It is sent to SOTEMA, by ship, to be delivered for consumption after printing. Moreover, SUMATEX produces basic, low-cost articles for local consumption, with the more luxurious items kept for export, whether made by SOTEMA or COTONA [Antsirabe Cotton Industry].

Alongside this "real" factory, the region's best, it is said and which undeniably gives hope to faritany officials and to the people of Toliara as well, the other industrial units seem to vegetate. Some, like Toly, await a real takeoff not helped by the contingencies of supplies or social conflicts. Others, like the SNHU, are determined to engage in peanut production in order to remain active.

Port Lives Again

When building goes well, it is said, everything goes well. That is not totally true in Toliara, but it is certain that the sites are busy, as busy as required by arrivals of construction materials. While SUMATEX has experienced no halt in construction, the same cannot be said of the CUR [Regional University Center], the future covered stadium, the pedagogical center, all of which face problems with the supply of cement, iron bars, and so on.

And yet, the port is not stagnant, another encouraging sign of this resumption of activity at the "port" of Toliara. The congestion of Toamasina and Manajanga sends to Toliara goods in transshipment, coffee for the United States, for example, without counting large amounts of equipment and materials going to SUMATEX, Star, OMIPRA [expansion unknown] (engaged in the Bezaha operation) and to Touzet International.

MOSLEM ASSEMBLY--Madagascar's Muslims, who comprise 20 percent of the population, are represented, in the religious assembly of their Indian Ocean co-religionists being held presently on the Isle of Mauritius, by Jailany Slaim, head of the social, coordination, and external relations committee of the national bureau of Mahajanga of the Malagasy Islamic Cultural Association, and by Sahady Ibrahim, president of Skoto Sikam Madagascar. As it was explained to us by the two Malagasy delegates before their departure yesterday for Port Louis (Isle of Mauritius), the aim of the meeting is "to bring young Muslims together so they can discuss their problems and exchange their points of view in order to see how they can better consolidate the practice of Islam in our time." The assembly is being held on the seaside. An ideal setting, in sum, for carrying out the discussions on these various questions. The central theme of the meeting is in fact "the organization of Islamic work in this 15th century of the Hegira." We note that Madagascar's Muslims are beginning to be organized. Thus, every Thursday, from 2200 to 2230, on Malagasy Radio and Television [RTM], the Antananarivo bureau, with the help of the national bureau of Mahajanga of the ACIM [Malagasy Islamic Cultural Association], presents a broadcast on various subjects related to Islam. FOUR YEAR PLAN--President Moussa Traoré recently attended a meeting of the Commission for the Four Year Plan which covers the period 1981-1985. The plan comprises 515 projects. 114 of these concern the rural sector and will cost 270,000m. Malian francs, 127 projects concern the industrial, water supply, energy and mining sectors and will be executed at a cost of 212,700m. Malian francs. Communications, town planning and housing projects, of which there are 111, will cost 217,000m. Malian francs. Finally, 163 projects are in the social sector and will cost 95,500m. Malian francs. The plan's main objective is said to be self sufficiency in food, particularly in the production of cereals. Other objectives are the harnessing of surface and underground water resources (Mali is a victim of the ten year Sahel drought), reconstitution of livestocks and efforts to overcome the handicap of being a landlocked country. LIBYA'S ROLE IN CHAD DEFENDED; AMERICAN ACTION CONDEMNED

People's Bureau on Crocker's Statement

Port Louis THE NATION in French 26 Jul 81 pp 1-2

[Communique from People's Bureau on statement by Crocker published in 21 July 1981 L'EXPRESS]

[Text] First of all, it is clear that the main idea of the anti-Libyan offensive is to divert attention from the policy of the Reagan administration, which is truly terrorist in action, especially from its clear interference in the domestic affairs of Africa, which runs counter to the interests of any self-respecting African country. The Reagan administration pays lip service to an antiterrorist verbalism in order better to practice terrorism alongside the regime of apartheid and the Zionist entity against liberation movements and forces of progress in Africa. It is obvious that the American offensive against the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya is rooted in the fact that the latter dares to hinder such a policy of terrorist domination. In his statement, does Crocker not affirm that "Libya seeks to oppose our interests and objectives in an unprecedented manner"? Here the question is posed: What interests? Are they interests in favor of Africa and the African peoples? Is the policy of America, allied with the regime of apartheid and speaking of a proposed military pact with that racist, terrorist entity, in the interest of Africa and the African peoples?

Is the categorical American position on the question of Namibia's independence in the interest of the Africans? The answer to these questions is found in the final resolutions on American policy adopted by the OAU summit conference held in Nairobi.

Actually, the reality of the American policy on Africa is an open secret. In no way is it in keeping with the interests of Africa. On the contrary, its purpose is to mask an inhuman colonialist policy based on injustice, exploitation, domination and alienation, without taking into consideration any interests but those of the United States. It is an aggressive policy that is hostile to Africa and its unity, hostile to its peoples and their aspirations. The Africa of dignity is opposed to this policy, condemns it and works under the leadership of the Libyan Jamahiriya, which is an integral part of the African continent, to bring about its failure by all means.

It is clear to us that the problems and interests of Africa are linked and common to all and that any solution imposed from the outside is doomed to failure. No, the United States has no right to meddle directly or indirectly in the relations existing between two or several brother countries linked, as Crocker confirms, "by religious and other bonds" and by the ties woven by history.

And since Crocker speaks so much about Chad, we can wonder: What have they done for the Chadian people when the legitimate government was asking for African and international aid in order to put an end to subversion and starvation? No one dared to respond to the pressing appeal of Goukouni's government except the Libyan Revolution, which through its gesture only applied the resolutions adopted by the Freetown summit conference. It restored order and security after a devastating civil war fed by colonialism, a war that impoverished, tore and starved the Chadian people. It is true that this praiseworthy initiative goes against American interests because it restored peace and stability in this part of the continent.

Moreover, of what meddling or intervention are they speaking: of the scandalous American meddling through interposed lackeys, entities and regimes and by means of military bases and weapons, as well as by the intervention of its soldiers in Arab-African countries? Or of sincere cooperation based on mutual interest and bringing massive aid without limitations or conditions to the poorest and most deprived peoples in a common desire and effort to bring the African continent out of its underdevelopment through mixed ventures of which the Jamahiriya is a member, 80 Arab-Libyan African companies and 18 development banks?

In other words, we are confronted with diametrically opposed attitudes: an American attitude that symbolizes domination, racism, alienation, Zionism and exploitation and a Libyan position crystallized in its positions that are hostile to all these practices. These are two positions that contradict one another and are opposed to one another: The interest of the United States is found in the looting, by its multinational companies, of the resources of Africa, alongside the regime of apartheid, while the interest of the Libyan Jamahiriya is that of Africa for total liberation on the economic, political and cultural levels. This position, dictated by African interests, naturally imposes some confrontations between the Jamahiriya and the lackeys of the Americans and of imperialism in general in Africa, but this should not prevent us from doing our duty of coming to the aid of the movements of liberation, confrontation and struggle against imperialism and consequently, of "hindering the imperial interests of the Americans" on the continent, as Crocker affirms. This is the true reason for the insults and attacks on the Jamahiriya, attempting to intimidate it and prevent it from playing its role alongside the forces of progress.

Furthermore, does the American position, as reflected in Crocker's statement, not constitute a flagrant interference in the internal affairs of the African countries, thereby affirming a definite paternalistic, colonialistic mentality of another age, for by what right can the Reagan administration control, not a single country, but an entire continent, independent, sovereign African countries? And if America is truly working for the defense of the countries threatened, why does it not aid the front line countries to defend themselves against the institutionalized terrorism which the white racist regime in South Africa is? Why does it aid the reactionaries against the legal government of Angola? Why does this Reagan administration try to destabilize Mozambique through the CIA, whose diplomat-agents were also kicked out of Zambia? Why? The answer to these questions is well known to the Reagan administration. It knows that its so-called aid to the allegedly threatened African countries is in fact only aimed: 1) at selling arms to shaky regimes that use them against their rebellious people and at making its lackeys the dictators heading these regimes; 2) at thereby establishing outposts in Africa for the defense of its interests; and 3) at destabilizing the front-line countries and progressive countries in general in the process.

Within the immediate context, this policy is more precisely aimed at diverting attention from the shameful American cooperation with the regime of apartheid, from its position on the Namibian question, from its terrorist attacks in Africa through the CIA and from the military bases and facilities it is installing in the Sudan, Egypt, Somalia, Kenya and elsewhere.

In truth, Reagan's America is not trying to help Africa. It is trying to relegate to a secondary levels such prime questions for Africa as the independence of Namibia, the arrogance of the regime of apartheid and the organized exploitation of the resources of Africa by the imperialist multinational companies. It defends its own selfish interests even if that implies the massacre of thousands of blacks by the weapons it supplies to the racists and programmed starvation by the policy of organized exploitation by its multinationals. The millions of permanently crushed and humiliated Africans are moreover witnesses to the fact that the hand of the Reagan administration is stained with their blood. It is the same for the Palestinians, the Lebanese and Arabs in general. When Crocker speaks of Libyan interference in the affairs of the Middle East, it would be funny if the situation were not so tragic in this part of the world and if our brothers were not dying under the Zionist bullets supplied by the Americans.

In fact, the Libyan Revolution, convinced from its very advent of effective Arab unity, took the initiative of doing away with Libyan nationality and adopting Arab nationality. Consequently, entry visas for Arabs have been eliminated. The Jamahiriya has therefore become the homeland of all Arab citizens.

On the other hand, the historic American hostility is rooted in the expulsion, by the Glorious 1 September Revolution upon its advent, from the largest American base outside its own territory in Libya. This hostility was recently accentuated after the speech by our brother leader Mu'ammar Qadhdhafi on the occasion of the 11th anniversary of the evacuation of the American bases from Libyan territory, when he designed a strategy of unity for the Arab world, backed by the greatest means, which is naturally against the American neocolonialist dictates in the Arab world.

In addition, the hostility manifested by the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya toward the Zionist plots and the subservient, neocolonialist plans in the Middle Eastfor the purpose of imposing the Zionist entity on the Arab nation, liquidating the Palestinian question, expropriating Al Quods (Jerusalem), and of destroying the unity of the Arabs, which represents a threat to the existence of the Arab-Muslim nation, proves that the United States is aware that the Libyan position works for a just peace and that a peace not based on equity and justice fatally leads to war.

Through Crocker, the United States had to be surprised at the Libyan position, which was behind the formation of the Front of Rejection and Firmness and the Arab People's Progressive Front, which the Congress of the Arab People, set up in Tripoli following the visit of shame and surrender, is.

Accusing others will not excuse America for what is now happening in Lebanon or in the past, at the time of the imposition of the Zionist entity in occupied Palestine. America, which is at the root of the establishment of a foreign state in occupied Palestine, which feeds 100 percent of its (Zionist) budget, which has heightened its arrogance with the most sophisticated weapons, which has stimulated its aggressiveness with its policy of the veto and which naturally fights those who dare raise their voices and arms against its monstrous terrorist creation: That America knows better than anyone else the reason it manifests such hostility to the Libyan revolution, which it accuses of all the sins...of Israel. But the Libyan revolution, which is in the forefront of the Front of Rejection and Firmness, will never accept the solution of capitulation which the American-Sadat-Zionist coalition wants to impose on the Palestinian resistance.

But America and its lackeys cannot understand this. It is clear that the African, Arab and Third World peoples in general, those who personally suffer the consequences of the policy of American imperialism, know how to differentiate between their enemies and friends and they know better where their interests lie. As for us, no force in the world will divert us from our duties to Africa and the Third World in our common fight against imperialism.

We have no lesson to learn from imperialism, much less America, which should be the last nation on earth to speak of terrorism after its crimes against millions of the world's people on all five continents, in Vietnam, Iran, El Salvador and elsewhere, backed by its terrorist policy of the dictatorship of the veto, economic and diplomatic blackmail and its bases, missiles and bombs that terrorize the peoples of small countries.

We have no need of a certificate of good conduct and assiduousness from that country and we are aware that that frantic anti-Libyan offensive will never stop because the American dictionary recognizes only this parabole: "If you are not my lackey, you are my enemy."

As for us, we have chosen to be ourselves, whether or not the Americans and their valets like it! And as the leader of the glorious 1 September revolution has stated:

"We are totally resolved to defend our legitimate rights on earth and under the sun, at the cost of our very lives. We shall never back down; the intensity of the forces of the United States against us will never force us to retreat. We shall offer all the means at our disposal to the Palestinian people in order to free occupied Palestine."

Peeroo Defends Libya's Role

Port Louis THE NATION in French 31 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[30 July interview with Razack Peeroo, minister of labor and industrial relations, by M. A. Salauroo]

[Text] A statement by Chester Crocker, deputy secretary of state for Africa, in the 21 July issue of L'EXPRESS, gave rise to strong reactions in pro-Libyan circles in Mauritius. Following the detailed explanations of the Libyan People's Bureau of the role of the Jamahirya in Africa (see LA NATION of 26 July 1981), it is now the turn of Razack Peeroo, minister of labor and industrial relations, to take a position in favor of Libya and to reject criticisms formulated by the Americans against Colonel Qadhdhafi. Questioned yesterday, Peeroo said the following:

For me, Qadhdhafi is and remains the most powerful man of the Third World and he is the defender of the oppressed people of Africa, Asia and the Middle East. I find that it is completely natural that for the imperialists and the little regimes that are the lackeys of imperialism, Qadhdhafi is the most dangerous man. The reason, it is clear, is that Qadhdhafi represents a danger to the interests of the United States. Let us look at what Crocker says: "Libya has adopted a type of diplomacy that seeks to oppose, in an unprecedented manner, our own interests and objectives." Let us try to see the interests that Qadhdhafi represents and those of the United States. Qadhdhafi seeks to liberate oppressed peoples, which -- and this goes without saying -- runs counter to the interests of the imperialists, who, for their part, seek only to oppress and exploit peoples and loot their natural resources. In order to understand this, you have but to imagine the case of a slave trader and a slave emancipator. The two have different, diametrically opposed interests. It is therefore easy to understand that Qadhdhafi's moves will not please the gun merchants, which the imperialists are."

[Question] In one of your recent statements, you said: "The Libyan revolution, under Qadhdhafi's guidance, has taken on a very important dimension, that of awakening in all Muslims in the world a feeling of belonging to Islam. Consequently, the notion of the "ummah" [community] was effectively applied, while Crocker, in his statement, speaks of the creation of an Arab-Islamic bloc embracing the Muslims of Africa and the Middle East. He also speaks of Libyan expansionist policies. What are your conclusions?

[Answer] The West has always opposed the unity of Muslims in the world. Islamic peoples have been dominated throughout the world and one must remember the colonial period. But the Muslims have always fought for their liberation. One will recall, for example, the Algerian revolution, the Libyan revolution, and quite recently, the Iranian revolution. With these revolutions, the interests of the Westerners have been alienated. Formerly, the colonialists imposed their cultures, languages and civilizations. The Libyan revolution was an Islamic revolution whose source of inspiration was Islam. In contrast with a few Islamic leaders, lackeys of imperialism, the Islamic peoples are for the rallying of an Islamic force in the world. Try to imagine a rallying of all Muslims in the world. It represents an impressive force, which is why the imperialists are trying to sow division. Formerly, Islam was in the background in the Islamic countries, but the advent of the Libyan revolution has restored its proper value to Islam, recommending the rules written in the Koran concerning: how to regulate activities by the people's committees, which forcefully demonstrates the authority of the mass of the Islamic people. Therefore, in this sense, the Libyan revolution is a beacon for Islamic peoples throughout the world, for we know all the results of the Libyan experience. That is why the thoughts of Qadhdhafi inspire confidence in all Muslims in the world and it is in this same breath that the Iranian revolution took place. Actually, there would have been more revolutions, but they were stifled by the Westerners and communists. In Afghanistan, for example, the communists stifled the revolution of the Afghani people.

[Question] What do you think of Crocker's statements on the Libyan intervention in Chad?

[Answer] I have already said in Masjid Al Aqsa, in Plaine Verte, that the Libyan intervention in Chad was necessary in order to give those people peace and stability. I maintain what I said. Crocker should be the last person to speak about aggression or intervention, for we know the acts of the United States throughout the world and the establishment of military bases everywhere in the world and in the heart of the Arab nation, in Egypt, which is dishonorable and shameful. It is clear that if today Israel commits acts of aggression and crimes in Lebanon, it is with the blessing of the United States. The difference between the Libyan intervention in Chad and the American interventions throughout the world is that Libya intervened to ensure the peace, stability and independence of the Chadian people, while the American interventions are aimed at destabilizing and exploiting peoples. Libya was asked by the legitimate, legal government of Goukouni Oueddei to intervene, while the Americans practice a policy of subversion through the CIA.

[Question] What is your opinion of what Crocker says about Qadhdhafi's advances in the Indian Ocean? You have undoubtedly read LE CERNEEN of 27 July 1981, which published an article from LE POINT which went as follows: "Qadhahafi would like to buy the Mauritian newspapers."

[Answer] I know of no Libyan military or nuclear base in the Indian Ocean. I am also unaware of the presence of any Libyan fleets in the Indian Ocean, just as I do not know whether the Libyans would have a base with sophisticated weapons in the Indian Ocean enabling one to talk about Qadhdhafi's advances in the Indian Ocean. The United States has military bases in Somalia, Egypt, the Sudan, Oman and Diego Garcia, to mention but a few. To answer the second part of your question, I would say that the newspapers of the island Mauritius are independent and can publish articles on Libya and about what is done in the Libyan Jamahirya. And if the newspapers publish articles on Libya, is one to say that the newspapers are "bought"? No, that is infantile reasoning.

[Question] Do you have any particular wish to formulate?

[Answer] Before concluding, I would like to add that I hope from the bottom of my heart that the relations existing between Mauritius and Libya will grow stronger and be consolidated in the interest of those two peoples. Mauritius is an African nation, just like Libya. They are both part of the OAU. We are part of the same continent and we have the same objective: the complete liberation of Africa. We should therefore work together and cooperate and we should be solidary in the fight for the dignity of African peoples.

MEF, UNION EFFORTS TO SOLVE UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

Joint Call for National Economic Council

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 30 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The meeting between the employers' federation and the trade unions which takes place today with the purpose of studying ways to improve the employment picture seems to open up a new era in capital-labor relations. In effect, the country's main trade union confederations--FSN, GWF, and FTU [expansion unknown-General Workers Federation-United Workers Federation]--decided yesterday that the unions and employers should speak "the same language" in order to get the government to get the "National Economic Council" in operation.

The NEC [National Economic Council], as everyone knows, is a permanent body bringing together representatives of the government, employers, and the unions. Its establishment, decided upon at the tripartite meetings, was announced by the finance minister in his budget speech. The NEC, the composition of which has already been made official, has not yet begun to function. The body will serve as a forum for the discussion of major questions of nationwide interest and help the government to guide its action in the direction desired by all social partners.

Nevertheless, before reaching this stage, the unions decided yesterday to ask the MEF [Mauritius Employers Federation] to coordinate with other organizations in the private sector on the question of unemployment and job creation. The unions noted, in fact, that the MEF, MSPA [Mauritius Sugar Producers Association] and JEC [expansion unknown] seem to have differing points of view on the question.

However that may be, in today's meeting the labor confederation will be content to receive MEF's suggestions on job creation.

The representatives of the labor confederations will make known their proposals during a subsequent meeting. Other working sessions will follow to permit the two parties to reach an understanding before calling for the convoking of the first meeting of the National Economic Council.

Labor sources do not try to hide the fact that these meetings will be difficult, for the two sides have differing viewpoints on some questions. This is the case with respect to the advisability of unemployment benefits, which the trade unions demand but the employers reject. It is still true, however, that both employers and unions are determined to find solutions to attenuate to some extent the crisis which is presently upsetting the country.

First Meeting 'Positive'

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 31 Jul pp 1, 8

> [Text] The meeting held yesterday between the Mauritius Employers Federation [MEF] and the leaders of the country's principal trade union confederations demonstrated the clear determination of both social partners to join forces to help the country get through the current crisis. This at least was the impression one gathered in labor circles at the conclusion of the meeting, an impression which was to be confirmed that afternoon by the publication of a joint communique.

The communique says that "taking cognizance of the disturbing economic situation, of which the deficit in the balance of payments, unemployment and lay-offs are the most visible signs, the accredited representatives of the FSN, the MLC [Mauritius Labor Congress], the GWF, and the FTU on the labor side, and the representatives of the MEF on the other side, have agreed in principle to hold regular meetings with the purpose of discussing the economic crisis and ways of escaping from it, and all issues related to employer-employee relations, in order to enable the Mauritian economy to get a fresh start, and thereby to promote more jobs."

Yesterday's meeting, which followed a preliminary meeting on 16 July, was described by the communique as marked by "frank and cordial" exchange of views.

In fact, after having made a general survey of the situation, the representatives of the employers and unions decided first to specify the various elements contributing to the crisis, then to look at ways both in the short and long term to take remedial action, and finally to see to was extent each partner might contribute to solutions. It was also decided, as we announced yesterday, to write to the president of the national tripartite committee to ask that the National Economic Council begin its work with the shortest possible delay.

Participating in yesterday's meeting were Dawood Rawat, Francis Rey, and R. Tranquille representing the MEF; and union representatives included Venkatasamy, C. Genevieve, and P. Sarah (FSN), Paul Berenger, F. Soopramanien, and R. Tirvengadum (GWF), C. Bhagirutty (MLC), and A. Laridon (FTU).

CUTBACKS, INTERNATIONAL HELP SOUGHT TO SOLVE UNEMPLOYMENT

Shortening of Work-Week Proposed

Port Louis THE NATION in French 22 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

> [Text] The Mauritian Employers Federation [MEF], aware of the serious problem posed by lay-offs, has taken several measures under the dynamic leadership of acting president Dawood Rawat. MEF, which 2 or 3 months ago called on its members to pinch pennies in order to avoid discharging employees, has submitted a memorandum to the government. Yesterday it issued a stirring appeal to all Mauritians to make a concerted effort to surmount the very difficult problems of the current decade. The appeal is aimed especially at the social partners of the employers. Rawat and Francis Rey emphasized the fact that time has already been lost, and action must be taken.

According to MEF, the rise in unemployment is first of all the result of circumstnaces. The world recession has substantially restricted our access to external markets, as a result of protectionist policies in the developed countries. Mauritian industry is having problems surviving in the face of the very lively competition from its rivals. Fluctuations in the exchange rate have endangered certain exporters who are obliged to price their wares in foreign currency.

The far-reaching effects of the oil shock cannot be emphasized enough: in 1974, our oil imports cost 161.5 million rupees. In 1980 they reached 667.3 million rupees, an increase of more than 313.2 percent.

In 1980, no less than four hurricanes hit the country. In early 1981, the drought was making its effects felt. The consequences of these natural disasters endure for years, because in order to rebuild houses and infrastructure money must be borrowed. In addition, production losses cannot be made up.

Technological and Local Causes

According to MEF, some enterprises have shut down, because technological advances made in other countries have rendered their manual production methods--or even the products themselves--obsolete.

However, some local causes are not without significance. Fiscal and customs measures taken by the government to curb imports in order to bolster the balance of trade caused layoffs in commerce and related fields. The substantial slowdown in investment--both public and private--for lack of available capital has created unemployment in certain industries, such as the building trade. Even the press has not been spared.

In 1980, layoffs submitted to the Termination of Contracts Service Board [TCSB] rose to 2,530, broken down as follows: 151 in January; 122 in February; 284 in March; 75 in April; 221 in May; 94 in June; 478 in July; 441 in August; 335 in September; 139 in October; 82 in November, and 108 in December.

By contrast, from January through May 1981, only 393 cases were brought to the TCSB: 125 in January; 67 in February; 32 in March; 135 in April, and 34 in May.

There have obviously been cases that were not submitted, but in large terms the MEF believes that the tendency is toward stabilization, if not decline. The MEF also believes it must be noted that 1,500 jobs were created in 1980.

Losses Sustained

The MEF asserts that from 1979 to 1981 (end of June) investors, banks and other financial institutions lost altogether some 141,249,000 rupees--including 53,937,000 for investors alone. The figures are as follows:

	Investors	Institutions
1979	Rs 18,050,000	Rs 16,963,000
1980	22,650,000	33,991,000
1981	13,237,000	36,358,000

The MEF concludes, therefore, that the shareholders are also losers when an enterprise shuts down. These are often people with modest savings who risked their savings to invest.

Unemployment

Over and above the layoffs, each year brings about 10,000 new job-seekers. Nevertheless, MEF contests the publicized figure of 55,000 jobless workers, and notes an abnormally high number of people newly added to the jobless list. It therefore calls for a more detailed investigation, followed by a purging of the list, in order to determine the number of fraudulent unemployed workers.

The MEF asserts that the lack of training of unemployed workers creates an anomaly. Some vacant positions cannot be filled, because no jobless worker can be found with either the competence or the requisite experience for the job. It suggests that training could fill the gap between supply and demand.

The Wrong Way

The MEF does not believe that an anti-layoff law can resolve the problem. Higher indemnities on termination of employment would only aggravate the problem, for existing indemnities are already among the highest in the world for justified layoffs, and the very highest for unjustified layoffs. The MEF is thus of the opinion that an increase in indemnities would lead to the bankruptcy of enterprises proceeding with partial layoffs.

According to MEF, unemployment benefits are also no solution. It says that the cost is excessive and that Mauritius does not have sufficient means to finance such a system. It is also necessary to avoid encouraging people to be idle, because otherwise they rapidly lose their self-respect and become unemployable. An unemployment benefits system would hinder the operation of the labor market, positions would remain unfilled, and the unemployed would be on the dole. Then it would also be necessary to define unemployed status, because the wife might well claim benefits in her own right.

Solutions

In the short term, MEF has already urged, in addition to distributing a circular recommending an "economy drive," the creation of an "ad hoc" committee to help enterprises avoid planned layoffs and get discharged workers re-hired, MEF personnel are also helping enterprises that want to obtain some facilities from the authorities in order to keep employment up.

The MEF also suggests:

(1) a shortening of the work-week. Instead of layoffs of employees, an enterprise might, with the consent of the ministry of labor, shorten the work-week of its employees and proportionately reduce their salaries.

(2) prohibition of moonlighting. A substantial number of jobs could be created in the fields of electrical installation, plumbing, painting, and house repairs and [line dropped]

(3) "shift" work should replace overtime.

Other solutions for the long-term problem suggested by MEF include:

(1) a mission will be sent to Europe and the United States in hopes of finding new lucrative markets for our products, especially those manufactured by small industries;

(2) the eight points of the memorandum submitted to the minister of finance have been partially accepted. It will be necessary to provide fiscal incentives for worker training, and reduce corporate taxes.

Urgent Dialogue

For the moment the MEF is asking for a climate of cooperation between social partners, rather than confrontation. It is calling for dialogue, and emphasizes that the country cannot escape from the crisis unless there is a spirit of unity and cooperation. The MEF does not believe in rigidity about structures or principles: it is asking all Mauritians to close ranks.

Search For External Openings

Port Louis THE NATION in French 27 Jul 81 p 1

> [Text] The government has solicited the assistance of international bodies to get African governments to hire unemployed Mauritain university graduates. This line is being pursued by the government in an attempt to re-absorb to some extent the growing unemployment, which is affecting this stratum of Mauritians.

Contacts have already been made to this end with the representatives of international organizations who have visited Mauritius in recent months. The most recent goes back several days ago, when officials from the ministry of employment had talks with a high-ranking team from an African financial body. The talks were focused principally on prospects for the employment of jobless graduates via contracts to work in African countries.

The sectors in which openings exist have been identified, and include teaching as well as civil engineering field.

Should openings be obtained, a substantial number of unemployed graduates could get work contracts.

At this point in time, there are no less than 1,080 graduates who are in search of jobs, according to the latest statistics compiled by the "Youth Guidance Service" of the ministry of employment. This figure will reach 1,400 between now and the end of August with the arrival during the next few weeks of the new diplomats who have finished their university studies this year, according to projections from the ministry of employment.

It is fitting to emphasize that the majority of those graduates obtained diplomas in the fields of general languages, economy, and sociology. As the market in these disciplines has been saturated, offers for this category of graduate on the job market are becoming harder and harder to find.

Government Training Courses Given

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 28 Jul 81 p 4

> [Text] "A new insult to the doctors," hospital personnel are saying. For the last 2 weeks "medical orientation courses" have been given at the ministry of health to 35 newly recruited doctors joining the hospital service. While opposed to the idea, these doctors are obliged to attend such courses, which are given daily, because of the fact that they have to register their presence on a log-book. The government has called on various medical specialists, and on officials of the Mauritius Family Planning Association (MFPA) to teach the courses.

In medical circles, such an initiative on the part of the government is considered "a new insult" to the unemployed doctors who were recruited last month on the basis of "examinations" [translation unknown] and at ridiculously low salaries. Outrage is increased by the fact that "non-physicians" are to be found among those on whom the government has called to teach the orientation courses.

The same circles do not explain how the government could judge is necessary to organize courses for the benefit of doctors who took their diplomas following university studies abroad, diplomas which are duly recognized on the Isle of Mauritius.

FAILURE OF IAMB, ANOTHER OCAM PROJECT, SEEN LIKELY

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 16 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Article--passages enclosed in slantlines printed in italics]

[Text] /The African and Mauritian Institute of Bilingualism (IAMB) at Moka may very well soon be added to the already long list of OCAM [African-Mauritian Common Organization] failures. This is what the Isle of Mauritius is apparently discovering, very late in the game. Yesterday, at the meeting of the board of directors, the Mauritian minister of foreign affairs, Sir Harold Walter, threatened to shut down the institute if the member countries continue to default on their share of financial support. Also, the very conspicuous absence of OCAM's secretary general, Ismael Amri Sued, of the Senegalese delegation, and Dan Dicko, secretary general of ACCT (Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency) was noted./

IAMB thus appears very likely, after yesterday's meeting, to go down in history as one of those numerous white elephants which illustrate the failure of a certain style of international relations.

"The Mauritian Government has done the impossible in keeping the institute alive, and at this point there can be no question of the Mauritian Government subsidizing it further, if the contributions owed by the other countries are not paid," said Sir Harold. He added that the Isle of Mauritius will in the meantime continue to meet its own commitments to IAMB.

The minister also discussed a report from the /Commonwealth Technical Foundation/ and the visit by a representative of /ACCT/, which has offered financial assistance to enable the institute to survive. According to the minister, the CTF report suggests that the institution be merged into another body. In such a case, Sir Harold believes, the University of Mauritius could take IAMB "under its wing." However, everything will depend on the will of OCAM member countries to ensure the survival of the institution. The minister will stress these questions at the next OCAM ministerial meeting.

Still in the same vein, the minister proposed that IAMB, just like the tourist industry, form a /marketing /company in several African countries. "Even English-speaking countries are interested in the institute."

The minister also reviewed the history of IAMB, which was created 7 years ago following a resolution adopted by the heads of state at an OCAM meeting. Earlier, the minister had strongly deplored the absence of the OCAM secretary general, Ismael Amri Sued, who was to arrive 13 July, as well as the absence of the ACCT secretary, Dan Dicko, and of the Senegalese delegation, which was to arrive yesterday.

PARTICIPATION IN FORMATION OF ACP CHAMBER OF COMMERCE REPORTED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 30 Jul 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] Cooperation in trade matters among the ACP [African-Caribbean-Pacific] countries is expected to gain fresh momentum with the decision made in Togo early this month to create a federation of ACP chambers of commerce and industry. The Isle of Mauritius is participating actively in this federation, which is currently in the process of formation. Miss Ghislaine Dalais, the representative of the chamber of commerce and industry in Brussels, who participated in the work of the ad hoc committee, is presently in Mauritius to report progress made to the chamber.

The ad hoc committee established various subcommittees, including one on intra-ACP cooperation, headed by Raymond Chasles, the Mauritian Ambassador to Brussels. The two other subcommittees are respectively technical and political. The first will deal with the dissemination of information between and among the countries of the group, and collaboration in the areas of commerce, maritime transport, etc.; the second will deal with the structuring of the federation and finance.

The ad hoc committee, which is working on preparation for a summit meeting of the ACP heads of state, is composed of the following countries: Togo and Nigeria (West Africa), Mauritius and Kenya (East Africa), Cameroon and Gabon (central Africa), Zimbabwe and Lesotho (southern Africa), Jamaica and Barbados (the Caribbean), and Papua New Guinea (Pacific).

The idea of such a body was first promoted by President Eyadema of Togo last year, at the signing of the Lome II convention. Since then, the idea has continued to gain ground, and more than 100 economic experts from the ACP countries met in the Togolese capital to work on the project. Plans have been elaborated, and a special unit is henceforth to be in operation at the ACP secretariat-general offices in Brussels. This unit will work toward implementing the Lome decisions with a view toward launching the ACP chamber of commerce as soon as possible.

It was apparent at Lome that it would be necessary to request that the governments of the ACP countries take measures to help free up commercial transactions between the various member states, and disseminate information in order to facilitate better information about the production, needs, and potential of the signatory countries. All that will assist the future ACP chamber of commerce to be practical and thereby to participate in the promotion of trade between the member countries.

Questioned by LE MAURICIEN, Jean-Claude Montocchio, secretary-general of the chamber of commerce and industry, expressed his view that the Isle of Mauritius, by virtue of its available structures (free zone, international communications network, port infrastructure, etc.) is expected to play a major role in this federation. Mauritius has already acquired a body of industrial experience which several ACP countries do not yet have. There exists great potential for cooperation between Mauritius and the other countries of the group, and the panoply is extremely vast, according to Montocchio. This operation could well extend beyond the field of commerce and possibly go into industries such as tourism, Mr Montocchio thinks.

We also note that the government has just transferred Mr T. Narain, a high official in the ministry of agriculture, to the ACP secretariat-general offices in Brussels.

CONSULTANT FIRM HIRED TO INCREASE BUSINESS WITH MIDDLE EAST

Port Louis THE NATION in French 28 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Together with the English consultant firm Maxwell Stamp, the government will undertake a study of markets in several Middle Eastern countries in August. This commercial promotion and exportation project is aimed at making locally-made manufactured products known in Arab countries and at studying prospects of potential markets.

The tour will be entirely financed by the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Cooperation and undertaken by two experts from the consultant firm Maxwell Stamp: Martin Kebbell, director of the Brian Finn firm, and a senior economist assigned to the Ministry of Commerce and Industry Department of Commercial Promotion. It will last six weeks.

The project was planned by the government as early as June. Together with the consultant firm, the government identified several countries in the Middle East where Mauritian products could be marketed.

The mission, which leaves on 5 August, will go to Saudi Arabia, Libya, the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, Bahrein, Qatar and Egypt. The members of the mission will establish contacts with the government and businessmen in those countries and ga gather the maximum amount of information possible. They will also study commercial structures, import regulations, customs systems, potential markets, transport and communications, and finally, the control of monetary exchanges.

A whole range of locally-made products has been chosen as part of the promotion: canned goods, tea, ready-to-wear clothing, watches, sunglasses, razor blades, flowers, candies and other sugar-based products.

In the light of information gathered, the government will define its orientations. If positive results are found, the government will implement its plan of commercial promotion.

This opening to Middle Eastern countries is another step forward in the field of global commercial promotion. After solidifying its bases in Europe through the advantages of the Lome Convention, the government's new strategy (concerning the promotion of exports) is to turn to the Third World, particularly Africa.

A market study has just been completed by a group of consultants: International Marketing and Economic Services, in a number of countries on the Black continent, in order to explore markets.

Exploration of Middle Eastern markets confirms the government's effort to promote its exports of manufactured products in a rational manner. This offensive coincides with the establishment of new commercial and monetary structures, particularly the Export Guarantee Scheme of the Development Bank, the Forward Cover of the Bank of Mauritius and the creation of an Export Promotion Unit in the Ministry of Commerce and Industry.

SUGAR INDUSTRY PROBLEMS OUTLINED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 29 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] 1980 (Estimates)

1. The 1980 harvest, as is well known, was hard hit by a series of cyclones and by floods at the beginning of the year. It only amounted to 475,494 tons, of which 442,235 were sold to the European Common Market, and 31,887 were consumed locally.

2. Total revenues (f.o.b.) from the 21 sugar plants that year came to 1,557 million Rs (sugar, molasses, other by-products, and insurance equalization fund).

3. This is how the revenue was spent.

Notes:

1. Supplies include fertilizers, herbicides, spare parts, etc.

2. Amortization was calculated in accordance with replacement cost.

3. "Other costs" include: marketing costs, transport of sugar, interest on overdrafts, water, electricity, various insurance costs, etc.

4. Taxes and deductions are divided as follows: sugar export tax 234 million Rs; droit d'usinage [translation unknown] 9 million; [sub-total]--243 million Rs; Deductions: Assessment for the MSIRI [Mauritius Sugar Industry Research Institute], the Control Board, the Marine Authority, the Development Fund, SILWF [Sugar Industry Labor Welfare Fund] 35 million; total 278 million Rs.

5. For the year as a whole therefore, the net loss was estimated at 164 million Rs.

DEPENSES

Key:

1. Wages and salaries 629 million Rs, 37 percent
2. Supplies 298 million Rs, 17 percent
3. Revenue 1,557 million Rs
4. Amortization 254 million Rs, 15 percent
5. Insurance premiums and other costs, 262 million Rs, 15 percent
6. Taxes and deductions 278 million Rs, 16 percent.

MDA SUGAR LOSSES ESTIMATED AT 17 MILLION RS

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 31 Jul 81 pp 1, 6

[Text] Mr Roger de Chazal, president of the "Mon Desert Alma Ltd" [MDA] Company, speaking before the general meeting of the company's shareholders Wednesday in Port Louis, estimated that his company's losses for the 1981 sugar season amount to 17 million Rs. The company lost 4,175,000 Rs last year, and its financial situation this year was aggravated by the increases in wages and a 15 percent downturn in the sugar harvest.

According to the company, the harvest was affected by hurricanes Florine and Helyette. The harvest, which was predicted to be 35,860 tons of cane, will now be no more than 33,300 tons. This represents a loss on the order of 6,114,400 Rs.

At the Savannah sugar plant, prospects are scarcely brighter. Losses there for this year's harvest [dropped line or incomplete sentence] which up until quite recently was expected to be one of the factory's most productive. Last season the Savannah Ltd Company made profits on the order of 7,445,000 Rs, compared to 12,413,000 in 1979.

In order to rectify this catastrophic financial situation in the two companies, their chiefs are asking the government initially to remove the surcharge on the export tax on sugar, which is approximately 75 percent. This surcharge was temporarily imposed by the government in 1979 after the devaluation of the rupee. Since then, the surcharge has not been lifted.

In that connection, Mr Roger de Chazal says in his annual report: "The surcharge of 75 percent imposed in 1979 to mop up the windfall resulting from devaluation has not been removed and has actually been retained in the 1981 budget. I am afraid that once more government, with its majestic ability, will be contrived to turn what has been introduced as a temporary measure into a permanent one. This discriminatory and crippling tax has the unwelcome effect of penalizing the most efficient producer."

He adds: "it is high time for government ot face reality, however stark it may be, and undertake a thorough revision of its policy with regard to the sugar industry. At a time when production costs keep increasing and revenue shows signs of a marked stabilization, government has virtually reached the point of killing the proverbial goose that lays the golden egg as happened in the French Caribbean islands of Guadeloupe and Martinique, where most of sugar factories have had to close down on this count."

Moreover, the financial problems currently being encountered by MDA Ltd and Savannah Ltd are identical to those facing the other sugar companies: the growth of wages as a whole and increasing equipment costs.

The Mauritius Sugar Producers Association (MSPA), composed of officials of the country's 21 sugar companies, announced several days ago that the 1981 harvest will be about 305 million Rs in deficit.

Last Friday, representatives of the sugar industry met with the finance minister, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, in order to demand the abolition of the 75 percent surcharge on the sugar export tax, and other measures to help the sugar industry recover, but faced with the intransigence of Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo, the meeting came to nothing.

BRIEFS

SUGAR PRODUCTION ESTIMATE--The official estimate of the sugar harvest (620,000 tons) made by the chamber of agriculture at the beginning of the season may be revised down to 600,000 tons. This revision is due to the poor extraction rate shown since the beginning of the cutting. According to the bulletin of the Institute of Research, as of 11 July the rate was only 9.58 percent, compared to 10.15 in 1979. It should also be noted that 1979 was not considered a "good year." In sugar industry circles, there had been hope for improvement in the extraction rate, because of propitious weather. But the situation has scarcely changed, and the poor rate has become a cause for concern. The chamber of agriculture will probably meet next week to revise the estimates. Also, the slow start of the present season has been noted. Again as of 11 July, sugar production stood at 54,086 tons, compared to 97,342 tons in 1979. The quantity of crushed cane saw the same trend: 564,497 tons, compared to 968,407 tons in 1979. The declining sugar yield per acre should also be noted: 3.20 tons, compared to 3.80 tons in 1979. CHINESE SHIPMENT SPOILED--Out of a hundred tons of garlic received from China, only about 30 tons can be put on the market, the other 70 percent of the cargo having been damaged. The reasons for the damage to the cargo are climatic. In fact, the entire 100 tons of cargo had been put in hermetically sealed containers. As explained to us by B. Joynathsingh, head of the Marketing Office, that should not have been done. This seasoning agent should be transported in temperature-controlled containers. Another reason for the deterioration in quality: the delay in shipping. The cargo should have arrived on 19 June. However, it was warehoused in Hong Kong, while waiting several weeks for departure on the "Oriental Express." The price of garlic is expected to go down within the next few days. Garlic may sell at around 8 Rs per pound. [Text] [Port Louis Le MAURICIEN in French 30 Jul 81 p 1] 9516

LIMPOPO VALLEY OFFICIALS PROMISE AID TO PRIVATE FARMERS

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 12 Jul 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] "All the private growers and livestock farmers in the Limpopo and Incomati valleys have a very important role in the 1981/1982 campaign."

With these words, Rui Gonzalez, secretary of state for development of the Limpopo and Incomati valleys, opened the first meeting, hold day before yesterday, with about 30 enterpreneurs from those regions. The meeting was the first step in a real rapprochement between the state and the private farmers, who are responsible for a large percentage of the nation's production of consumer goods.

Defining the economic importance of the Limpopo and Incomati valleys, Rui Gonzalez informed the private farmers of the large irrigation projects that have already been approved. In this respect, he reported that construction of the Corromene dam on the Incomati River will begin this year, and the Moamba and Mapai dams will be constructed in the second half of this decade.

These are projects that, when completed, will lessen the negative effects of weather and could permit larger crops. In addition, the agency responsible for development of the zone expects to create the conditions for irrigation.

Within this framework, the first contacts are being made with the private sector, so that it will be prepared to make organized use of its share of the immense potential, to the benefit of the national economy and the wellbeing of the society.

For greater support to and enlistment of the private sector, the Program for Accelerated Development of the Limpopo and Incomati Valleys is creating conditions to carry out this idea.

For the 1981/1982 campaign, and within its capabilities, the agency has promised to provide machinery, seed, herbicides and other production materials.

Organize Recovery of Vast Areas

As Rui Gonzalez emphasized during the meeting, private interests should respond to this state decision by increasing their production level, although this does not mean they can expect to receive much equipment. In this matter, he made it very clear that although the state has decided to give effective support to private interests in the region, this in no way should be taken to mean that large material resources are available. He also noted that the great projects of the decade require enormous investments, which means that the private interests must make rational use of the means they will be receiving from now on.

Many businessmen made it very clear during the meeting that the situation in the private sector is critical, despite all their willing efforts. Many enterprises are having a difficult time meeting the goals of the 1980/1981 agricultural campaign, now in the harvest phase. Generally speaking, however, the participants expressed their appreciation for the plans to provide them with the necessary support. Once in effect, this support will be a factor in the recovery of vast areas that have been abandoned for lack of resources.

This was the first experience of meeting with the Secretariat of State, and the participants were unanimous in declaring that the coordination should be ongoing.

As the first step in the overall planning of the activities of the private sector, the Management Direction Unit, the agency responsible for handling the support activity, requested delivery, within 8 days, of all data relative to the 1981/1982 campaign, namely, the present capacity of each enterprise, expected investments and supplies.

ADB, ITALIAN, DUTCH LOANS FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 10 Jul 81 pp 1-2

[Text] The African Development Bank, the Republic of Italy and the Government of the Netherlands have granted credit with a total value of over 1 million contos to Mozambique to finance various development projects in our country.

An accord to this end signed day before yesterday in Maputo between the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM] and the Italian Republic provides for about 750,000 contos in credit to our country. The sum will go to finance various economic development projects. The long-term loan has a low interest rate.

The credit will basically be used for agricultural projects to be developed with the participation of Italian firms. Sergio Vieira, governor of the Bank of Mozambique, and the Italian ambassador in Maputo signed the loan agreement.

Impetus for Recovery of Tea Industry

Meanwhile, the ADB has granted a loan of about 400,000 contos to Mozambique to finance the second phase of the program to rehabilitate the tea industry. The loan, pursuant to an accord signed between the two parties, is repayable in 20 years and will be used to build three new tea processing plants, to acquire a stock of parts for the maintenance of 20 factories and to defray the costs of transportation and supervision of the operations.

The first phase, initiated in 1979 and extending to 1983, is also being financed with a $6 million loan from the ADB. This phase includes the modernization of 19 plants of the state company EMOCHA [State Tea Enterprise of Mozambique] and the reorganization of its administration.

According to a release from the Mozambique Information Agency, the ADB loan will cover 66 percent of the overall cost of the project, and the rest will be guaranteed by the Mozambican authorities.

The third phase of the general plan for the program is aimed at improving the quality of the tea produced in the country, as well as production capacity, to consolidate Mozambique's position in the international market, where it currently holds 10th place in exports and 13th place in world production.

200,000 Contos From the Netherlands

For its part, through the Dutch Investment Bank, the Government of the Netherlands has granted 200,000 contos in credit to Mozambique. The terms are generous, with a symbolic interest rate and a 50-year period of repayment and a 10-year grace period. The loan will be used to finance economic development projects inthe RPM.

The loan agreement was signed day before yesterday in Maputo. On that occasion, Mahomed Asman, administrator of the Bank of Mozambique, declared that the loan reflects the strengthening of the bonds of friendship between the Mozambican and Dutch peoples.

SWEDISH ASSISTANCE, TRADE AGREEMENT SIGNED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Yesterday at the end of Thorbjorn Falldin's visit to Mozambique, important agreements were signed between the two countries. In addition to the Agreement on Development Cooperation and another on trade, the groundwork was laid for a third, calling for a loan of $20 million with favorable terms.

Through the new Agreement on Development Cooperation, valid until June 1983, Sweden will grant Mozambique assistance of about 3 million contos. This aid is to be used to strengthen Mozambican development principally in the agriculture, forest industry and education sectors. The accord also calls for Swedish aid in the form of consultation studies and imports designed to strengthen development.

During the meetings it was also agreed to pave the way for future cooperation within the framework of Mozambique's industrial reconstruction. Cooperation pertaining to the development of Mozambique's energy resources was also discussed.

A Trade Agreement was also signed yesterday whereby Sweden and Mozambique are granting each other preferential status in trade relations. This document is aimed at facilitating trade negotiations between the two countries and promoting trade agreements between their firms and organizations.

In addition to the Agreement on Development Cooperation for the 1981-1982 and 1982-1983 periods and the Trade Agreement, the delegations laid the groundwork for a third agreement, still to be reached this year, calling for a credit arrangement of $20 million (more than 7 million contos) between AB Svensk Exportkredit and the Bank of Mozambique.

The loan is to be used to finance imports of goods and services from Sweden and is a supplement to the Import Assistance Agreement already in effect between Sweden and Mozambique.

RULES, REGULATIONS SHOULD NOT BE CARRIED TO EXTREMES

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 30 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Pedro Tivane: "Inflexibility that Covers Us with Ridicule"]

[Text] For some time now the Polana Hotel food service has been reserved only for guests. This is not what we intend to discuss here. It has been necessary to do so and the need is still there. Up to this point, there is no difficulty.

Things begin to become more complicated when we reach the extremes of complete inflexibility and rigid attitudes that sometimes cover us with ridicule.

This is what happened the other day. An official from the Ministry of Industry and Energy went to the Polana Hotel in the late evening. He was not visiting a friend or spending some idle time. He was supposed to meet with a representative of a foreign firm.

Such meetings often last longer than previously planned, in order to exchange points of view and ideas. The Mozambican found that he had to buy a pack of cigarettes. He called a hotel employee and asked him to do that for him. The answer immediately came back under the form of a question: "What is the number of your room, sir?" The man answered that he was not a guest, he was there on business.

"Then we cannot help you," the waiter answered mechanically. As a result, the visitor offered to buy the pack of cigarettes himself.

This is the end of this vignette. But the problem persists. Its repercussions are many. The FACIM [Maputo Trade Fair] is in full swing. We are receiving, as a result, numerous visitors from abroad, who are staying at the Polana Hotel. Obviously, it is not advisable for persons who have nothing to do with this activity to visit the hotel at this time. However, it is not right that those who frequent this hotel for business purposes of interest to the country should be unable to purchase a simple pack of cigarettes there. To serve a simple meal or a drink is something that is a normal part of business activity. It could also be the prelude to an advantageous contract.

We believe that it is not difficult to distinguish between a man who is transacting business and a simple idler who is there only to spend some time.

LESSONS DRAWN FROM AGRO-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX'S ERRORS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 28 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Antonio Souto: "Large New Complexes Must Not Repeat CAIL"]

[Excerpt] Various large agro-industrial complexes will be built soon in the Incomati and Limpopo region. These important undertakings should be accompanied by a solid cooperative movement. However, these prospects for the socialist development of this struggle area of the country should be based on the lessons learned from the failures experienced by the CAIL [Limpopo Agro-Industrial Complex] and the area's cooperatives.

The development of the Limpopo and Incomati region within this framework, as well as the need to learn from the present situation in the CAIL was stated by Marcelino dos Santos, Central Committee secretary for economic policy, during a recent meeting in Chokwe.

At this meeting, a discussion was held on the complex questions arising from such a huge undertaking as the CAIL. In studying the causes for the failures registered during the last two years, it was noted that such errors should be avoided in future complexes.

One of the causes of the CAIL failures was the practice of relying on single crops. More than its consequences on the fertility of the soil, its social and political implications among the workers were reviewed, especially in relation to the low-level productivity.

A series of factors related to deficiencies and errors in supply, maintenance, stock management and others were also discussed. In the course of analyzing these aspects, it became clear that essentially political issues were involved, while technical problems took second place.

Besides the review of the present situation at the CAIL, which afforded lessons for continued rural development and socialization through the establishment of new complexes and a solid cooperative movement, the meeting also provided guidelines that will help to overcome the present crisis in the growth of the CAIL.

Among such guidelines are included the financial redress of the CAIL as a first step toward the future establishment of a mixed enterprise.

During the Chokwe meeting, the state secretary for the Limpopo and Incomati region, Rui Gonzalez, disclosed that a contract has been signed with the "Trakia' complex in Bulgaria, through which the CAIL technical capability will be improved. A number of measures directed at increasing production will also be adopted.

CRITICAL MANPOWER SHORTAGE AFFECTS CABO DELGADO COTTON HARVEST

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 16 Jul 81 p 3

[Article by Daniel Cuambe]

[Text] Devoid of any natural barriers, the cotton plantations of the state sector in Cabo Delgado Province have been seriously affected by the winds, causing severe losses of this product. The damages, which are easily measured, are sometimes inevitable, especially when there is also a shortage of manpower to harvest the cotton. Any analysis of this issue gives rise to highly conflicting opinions.

At first, weak mobilization was identified as the central factor in the poor participation of the peasants in the harvest. Even if this is the case, experience has shown that, beyond this factor, it is necessary to insure first that the canteens near the cultivated areas are fully supplied with essential products, and this provisioning was very poor.

The few people who reported to the fields for the harvest always did so with the expectation of receiving supplies, and they were not very interested in being paid in money. An illustration of this is that peasants would go to units far from their homes in order to harvest cotton in the areas where the local canteens were well stocked.

There were days when only nine people reported to harvest cotton at certain production units. It should be stressed that these same individuals were transported in trucks over distances of 60 kilometers. The logical consequence of this situation are obvious, namely the waste of fuel, among other things.

Even if the number of workers is large, there are problems at another level. There is the precarious situation with respect to local lodging for the peasants who come from areas far from the plantations. This combination of factors led inevitably to the present situation, and corrective measures will take effect only in the next campaign. Thus, construction has already begun on barracks to house a large number of people.

In statements to our correspondent in Montepuez regarding this very serious situation, the director of the Cotton Enterprise stressed several times: "We were taken by surprise. We were not prepared for an operation of this size, so we are having a difficult time."

Actually, it is symptomatic that, in a production unit like that of Namarra, surrounded by two villages with a total population of about 9,000, only 1,500 people reported for the cotton harvest. Commenting on the situation, the official said: "We have to go 100 or 150 kilometers away to pick up peasants for the harvest."

Efforts have already been initiated to resolve this problem. The machinery for the acquisition of products for the campaign has been greatly simplieid, and the agencies involved are increasingly concerned with reinforcing supplies, to complement the political mobilization, [the lack of] which is the subject of so much discussion and is identified as a bottleneck.

Child Labor, the Other Side of the Problem

Hundreds of young people no more than 15 years old must now serve as the manpower for the cotton harvest, whether in Montepuez or Namuno, to the detriment of their schooling. They have been the subject of much discussion and have provoked serious controversies. On one hand, their parents are accused of forcing their children to go to the plantations, claiming that "they are earning money to pay for their educational materials."

Meanwhile, the teachers are complaining that the students are not reporting for classes, and are even writing letters to the production units accusing them of sabotaging the school year. This has provoked moments of real tension, because there does not really seem to be any easy solution.

Actually, the problem is closely linked to the entire organization process for the campaign, which at the moment is not very satisfactory, and even more closely linked to the weak political work and the failure to make clear to the peasants the arrangements for their participation in the harvest.

This task is the responsibility of the district structures, and it was established, at least in the meeting conducted by Governor Armando Panguene in Montepuez, that the task had not been carried out. The efforts were scattered, and the situation was aggravated by the low organizational level of the agency directing the campaign. As of a few days ago, nothing had been done to resolve the problem of child labor, which is obviously detrimental.

There have been experiments with days of volunteer work in the fields, in which young people predominated, particularly on the weekends. Nevertheless, practice has demonstrated that the peasants choose to work for pay rather than participate in days of this type, which--partly because they are poorly organized--have contributed to the stunning decline in the number of people taking part in the cotton harvest.

OFFICIAL STRESSES NEED TO DEVELOP RURAL SOCIALIZATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Aug 81 p 8

[Excerpts] Maj Gen Jose Moiane, governor of the province of Maputo, stated that "we must work harder toward the development of communal villages and fishing cooperatives." The statement was made following his 4-day visit to the Matutuine district where he was assessing the effects of the organizational and political offensive and reviewing the preparatory work for the forthcoming agricultural campaign.

During these 4 days, Jose Moiane visited a number of state farms and communal villages. "We were able to ascertain that significant progress was made in the socioeconomic field, despite various difficulties resulting from the lack of pumps and the delay in the distribution of seeds," he said.

The fundamental issue to which Jose Moiane addressed himself was rural socialization. He noted that "in this district, the development of the cooperative sector is low. We must create the basic conditions for rural socialization."

At a meeting with the workers of the Salamanga production unit, he learned that many of them were unaware of production plans for the present campaign, as well as of the results obtained during the previous year. The lack of such knowledge and the total absence of meetings to analyze the situation were found to be the main cause for the poor relations between workers and management.

During the meetings with the inhabitants of Zitundo and Ponta de Ouro--areas bordering with the racist South African regime--the governor of Maputo province stressed the need to maintain close and active vigilance against the apartheid regime's maneuvers, as well as against all those who leave the country illegally.

"You must maintain close and good relations with the armed forces of Mozambique; soldiers are sons of the people and they need your support to apply combat techniques," Jose Moiane emphasized.

TWO PRIVATE CASHEW PRODUCTION UNITS DECLARED BANKRUPT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] The Industria de Caju Mocita [Mocita Cashew Industry] of Xai-Xai was declared bankrupt by the Gaza People's Court last Friday. The principal stockholder of the Mocita company is the Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, a group which also dominated the Antenes company, which was declared bankrupt last July.

A group of workers from the Mocita addressed themselves to the Gaza People's Court because they were not being paid. They argued that the management had abandoned the company and that the plant was completely paralyzed, thus putting their own future in jeopardy.

This situation, which was threatening the livelihood of hundreds of workers of the Mocita has now been solved. The court has appointed an administrator to manage the plant. He is the director general of the state cashew enterprise, Alfredo Gamito.

The Mocita management relinquished its responsibilities at the same time it did so at the Antenes company located in Angoche.

In the Antenes case, the Bank of Mozambique intervened immediately, taking the company to court because of its enormous debt to this bank, amounting to about 151,000 contos, when its capital was only 28,000 contos.

The fact that both of the companies were abandoned at the same time proves that the principal stockholders of the Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa willfully attempted to destabilize a strategic sector of our national economy. Besides creating problems for hundreds of workers of these two units, both plants stopped carrying out the export quota assigned to them by the State Central plan.

There are 14 plants in Mozambique that process raw cashews to produce both oil and nuts. Eight of these are state production units and the rest belong to private entrepreneurs.

Since both the Antenes and the Mocita are now under review, pending a solution to their financial situation, there are 4 private companies left. These are working normally, and the production at one of them, in the district of Monapo, is among the highest in this sector.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT DISRUPTS BEIRA-SENA LINE

Two Victims Reported

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] Two people died and extensive damage occurred in a railroad accident that took place in the early morning hours of Monday at km 130 of the Beira-Sena line, near the Muanza locality in Sofala.

The accident resulted form the head-on collision of two freight trains. Besides the two machinists who died, a third person traveling in one of the locomotives has not been found as yet. Traffic on this line has been interrupted.

The causes of the accident have not been ascertained yet. It was so violent that some of the cars were derailed.

A commission headed by engineer Julio Hinga was dispatched yesterday to the site and an investigation into the accident was immediately ordered.

Minister of Ports and Transportation Alcantara Santos, accompanied by other railroad officials was in the capital of the province of Sofala yesterday to gather information about the accident.

SABOTAGE CUTS OFF BEIRA POWER, WATER

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 30 Aug 81 p 1

[Text] The water supply system in the city of Beira has been completely re-established following an interruption of nearly 3 hours.

The interruption was caused by damage to the pumping system resulting from a sabotage action at dawn on Friday that left Beira without electricity.

Information from the capital of Sofala province indicates that the sabotage operation destroyed 6 electric pylons over a 1-km area.

The enemy action took place about 25 kms from the Mavuzi hydroelectric plant in the direction of Beira, according to members of the joint team of the Electricity of Mozambique company and the Revue Hydroelectric Company (SHER), who were dispatched immediately to that locality.

The joint team started repairing the damage right away in order to re-establish the supply of electricity to Beira without delay.

Meanwhile, electricity is being rationed, and various areas of the city now have power for set periods of time.

However, the rationing will not hit all consumers, according to a technician in the Beira network. Rationing will last for a few more days until complete normalization.

The Electricity of Mozambique company yesterday appealed to consumers to save as much energy as possible by disconnecting stoves, refrigerators, air-conditioners and other equipment.

DETAILS PROVIDED ON STUDENT SPECIALTIES IN USSR

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Sep 81 p 10

[Text] A total of 111 Mozambican students registered this year in various educational institutions of the Soviet Union. This is the first large group of Mozambicans attending schools in the USSR following independence. Some of them are already in that country, 29 others will follow soon and the rest will leave at a later date.

The twenty-nine students who will soon leave for the USSR met yesterday at the center for cultural studies. They will study dance, music, visual arts and cultural planning.

The Ministry of Ports and Road Transportation of Mozambique has already sent over 17 students who will study at the Odessa Maritime Institute on the Black Sea. They will be trained as maritime officers and mechanics.

Besides these 17 students, another 8 students who are recipients of CEMA scholarships have been sent to the USSR to study finance and credit procedures.

The state secretariat for fisheries has also sent over 15 students to specialize in the field of the fishing industry in the city of Tallin on the Baltic.

Thirteen students were sent by the state secretariat for coal and hydrocarbons to attend intermediate course in the petroleum and coal institute.

The Eduardo Mondlane University sent 14 Mozambicans for graduate studies in biology, mathematics, physics, geography and other scientific subjects.

Most of these grantees' studies are financed by Soviet mass organizations through agreements signed iwth their Mozambican counterparts.

Agreements on scholarships exist between the Union of Soviet Friendship Associations and the Soviet Committee for Afro-Asian Solidarity and the Mozambican Association for Friendship and Solidarity With Peoples; also between the Soviet Women's Committee and the OMM [Mozambican Women's Organization], and finally, between Soviet trade unions and the Mozambican production councils.

Part of the group of 111 Mozambicans registered in Soviet institutions this year on the basis of these agreements. Another group is covered by agreements at the state level within the framework of technical-scientific cooperation established between the two governments.

All of these students will first attend a preparatory course, where they will be taught Russian and other subjects related to their future specialties, so that the technical courses that will follow will be made easier for them.

QUELIMANE SEAFOOD CATCH SATISFACTORY DESPITE PROBLEMS

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 28 Jul 81 pp 1, 6

[Article by Isaac Alfandega]

[Text] This year's earnings should amount to $20 million for the Seafood Cold Storage Enterprise [EFRIPEL] in Mozambique. A joint Mozambican-Japanese enterprise whose base of operations is located in Quelimane, it is the only company of its kind in the country. Within the plan for industrial fishing, it is dedicated to shrimp and lobster fishing and exportation under the legal provisions for exploitation of our natural resources within the 12-mile limit of Mozambique's coastal waters.

The fishing enterprise, considered a pioneer at the national level, expects to catch 3,300 tons of shrimp and 100 tons of lobster for export this year, as well as seafood to supply to the people. In the first case, it has already surpassed the goal set for the first half of the year, thanks to the great technical abilities demonstrated by the Mozambican crew and the Japanese officers.

In previous years the company obtained good net results from its operations, showing a profit of 71 million meticals in 1979 and 5.9 million meticals in 1980. The decline registered in 1980 was the result of increased fuel prices, which created serious financial problems for the structures of the fishing enterprise.

Meanwhile, as is happening to other fishing enterprises, EFRIPEL is undergoing a very critical situation at this time as a result of the physical limitations of the port of Quelimane, which, as is known, does not now meet the necessary requirements for the proper functioning of a strategic port complex.

Thus there are problems with the normal sailing operations of the company's ships: 12 medium-draft shrimp boats and the deep-draft "Rige" and "Altair." The situation is aggravated by the fact that there is only one commercial pier to handle the dozens of fishing vessels that circulate and work in the area.

This combination of problems, added, among other things, to the lack of a specific program for the physical development of the Quelimane port complex, is responsible for some of the most severe bottlenecks, creating roadblocks to the further development of the specialized enterprises in the area, bearing in mind that Zambezia Province has great economic potential. It should be noted in this respect that not only are there products requiring immediate distribution, such as tea and copra, among others, but it is also necessary to create the conditions to receive the merchandise destined for the province.

ZAMBEZIA RAILROAD TO CONVERT FROM WOOD TO COAL

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] Wood-fueled locomotives are to be converted to coal in Zambezia. This measure is the result of an urgent need to improve railroad transportation, according to statements made to our editorial staff by the director of CFM [Mozambican Railroad] in Quelimane. The program, already tested with an experimental train on 5 August, calls for the conversion of the entire fleet.

Inasmush as it is the only means of transportation which connects Quelimane with Mocuba--a distance of 145 km--the railroad has recently had more traffic than ever before in CFM's history. Many reports have been received by our staff from individuals saying that they are traveling more frequently, thus bearing out the fact that railroad traffic is increasing every day.

At present, in Quelimane or in any other part of Zambezia Province there is talk of a train which stops in the middle of its run for lack of wood; the passengers all get out and look for wood so that they may arrive at their destination. A few days ago, a bakery worker in Manacurra, related to the motorman who was taking us to Milange, said in this connection that the locomotive engineers had asked his bakery to supply the train with wood.

Although these assertions have been denied to some extent by the director of Zambezia's branch of the CFM who, however, admitted that there have been frequent stops in the middle of a run, there are many indications of unsatisfactory performance in the passenger transportation sector which has seriously affected communication between Quelimane and Mocuba as well as adjacent areas.

This situation is made all the worse by the lack of transportation capability of CFM'a counterpart, ROMCZA, whose fleet is decreasing drastically.

From Wood to Coal

"Wood is now being cut at considerable distance from the railway line and must be transported to the stations. In the first quarter of this year there was a lack of fuel as it was not possible to transport wood for the locomotives," Claver Dias, director of Zambezia'a CFM branch, said.

Replacing wood-burning steam locomotives with locomotives using coal appears to be the only feasible alternative for increasing the capability of those engines. "The engines are old and, with the present excessive amount of passenger traffic and freight, can never arrive at their destination on time," the railroad official said.

The conversion work on the four operational engines will be carried out completely in Quelimane's CFM shops by local personnel. The fleet numbers seven units, but three are out of service awaiting spare parts.

The coal, produced in Tete, will be transported from Moatize to Caia via Sofala, and from there it will be carried in trucks to Quelimane. It is contemplated to use maritime transportation in the future between Safala and Quelimane as a more economical operation.

According to information released by Claver Dias, a meeting has already been held with CFM-South in which it was agreed that the southern branch would supply a number of used coaches to strengthen the fleet of 10 now operating in inadequate conditions in Quelimane. "In coaches designed for 100 people we now find double or triple that number traveling to their destination. We even have cases of people traveling in coaches loaded with wood," the official said.

MOCIMBOA DA PRAIA PORT FALLS INTO DISREPAIR

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] While Mocimboa da Praia Port in Cabo Delgado is not being reopened to coastal trade, its port and navigational equipment is falling into ever-increasing disrepair. Among the deteriorating equipment are its only two cranes, each of 2-ton capacity, and all the barges moored at the port.

The situation arising from the condition of the equipment in question is very serious and calls for immediate intervention. Otherwise, it will do no good to reopen the port to traffic, since access to the port's facilities requires certain equipment being eaten away be the salt water.

The barges now virtually abandoned at Mocimboa da Praia Port have equipment which is essential in transfer operations in the channel.

In fact, irregularity in the depths of the access channels to the port make it impossible for many of the freight vessels to approach the pier. That is why there are barges to transfer cargoes from ships which cannot get close to the dock.

The barges and cranes are deteriorating because no effort is being made, at least visibly, to correct the situation. When such action is finally taken, some of the barges will probably be beyond repair.

According to our information, it has been 2 years since the last two ships entered the port. The two ships which entered at that time were the "Polana" (once) and the "Sonap-Tanque" (twice).

We have no information of any vessels arriving at that port after 1979. In addition to the problem of deteriorating equipment, there is also the question of surveying.

In fact, there are no up-to-date hydrographic studies on Mocimboa da Praia Port. Such studies are necessary if it is to be reopened for navigation.

With regard to the idle barges, they could be used to transport cargo even if they were not used to transfer cargo from the larger ships. This would assure their maintenance until the port is reopened and not let them deteriorate as is now happening.

Moreover, it is necessary for the Mocimboa port to be reopened as quickly as possible, since supplies to the local people and interior are in large measure dependent upon its operation.

Furthermore, the reopening of that port would be an economically profitable alternative to the problem of highway transportation costs inasmuch as the highway is at present the only means of access.

The restoration of coastal trade at that port is also highly important for regional development. Channeling the people's surplus agricultural products through that port as well as incoming supplies and other merchandise would be done at much lower freight costs.

BRIEFS

NEW DC-10 PURCHASE--Mozambique Airlines (LAM) will purchase this year a new DC-10 airplane. The LAM pavilion at the FACIM-81 [Maputo Trade Fair] is exhibiting a picture of this aircraft already painted with the Mozambican colors. Officials of the U.S. company that manufactures the plane disclosed in Maputo that talks are underway related to the financing of the purchase. Contract modalities have not been defined yet--whether to lease a used plane with an option to buy or acquire a brand-new aircraft. The new plane, manufactured by McDonnell-Douglas will arrive in Maputo in November and will be used on long flights. The LAM started international flights in 1975 when the Portuguese TAP airlines terminated their monopoly in Mozambique. Since then the LAM has signed maintenance and technical assistance contracts successively with ALITALIA, British Midlands and UTA. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Sep 81 p 8]

INCREASED TRADE WITH GDR--Mozambique will export cashews and bagasse to the GDR and will import from that socialist country tractors, medicines, X-ray equipment and hydraulic machinery. The exchanges are covered by various contracts signed yesterday by foreign trade firms in the Mozambican capital. The ENACOMO, MEDIMOC, HIDROMOC and INTERMECANO are the Mozambican companies with which their GDR counterparts signed the contracts. The Mozambican side was represented by the national director for commercial economy of the Ministry of Commerce of Mozambique and director general of the FACIM [Maputo Trade Fair], Daniel Gabriel, and the GDR by the deputy minister of foreign trade, Peter Schmidt. WORKERS IN WEIMAR PLANT--Since August 1980 a total of 150 young Mozambicans between the ages of 18 and 22 have been working at the Weimar VEB Landmaschinenkombinat Fortschritt plant that manufactures agricultural machinery. During their 4-year stay, they will study through the process of "on-the-job-training" to become specialized workers. They are now working as lathe operators, metal milling machine operators, graders and crane drivers. In February 1981 another group of 50 young Mozambican workers arrived in Weimar, accompanied by two interpreters. This brings the total of Mozambican workers in Weimar to 202. PROBLEMS AMONG STUDENTS IN GDR--During his visit to the GDR, Minister Teodato Hunguana met with the Mozambican workers who are being taught a profession in the productive sector itself. It was known that a number of problems had cropped up among these students, but it was found that none was insoluble. The principal issues arose from a lack of coordination between the various structures and the workers themselves. Through Minister Hunguana's visit and with the talks held at the party and government levels, immediate solutions were found for most of these problems and the necessary conditions were created to completely eliminate other negative questions. BREAD SHORTAGE ALLEVIATED--The bread shortage which has been affecting Maputo for a week will be alleviated with the scheduled arrival on Monday of a 5,000-ton shipment of wheat flour offered to our country by Italy. The lack of this vital product, which aggravated the already existing difficulties in the food supply, was due to the delayed arrival of the Italian ship transporting the donated flour. Meanwhile, another part of the 1,400 tons of wheat also donated by that European country has already been offloaded in the port of Beira. A contract has been signed with France for the purchase of a large quantity of wheat, and the first shipment is due to arrive in Mozambique within a month. STUDENTS TO GDR--The GDR will grant professional training scholarships to Mozambicans as a result of a protocol signed in Berlin by Minister Teodato Hunguana. He also signed an agreement in the field of justice, according to which direct relations will be established between the judicial systems of the two countries. This is the first agreement of this type signed by the People's Republic of Mozambique. The above protocol also envisages the construction of professional training centers in Mozambique, as well as the modalities in support of their development. It was recently disclosed in Maputo that the GDR will open a basic school in that country for 800 to 1,000 students. Mozambican students who will attend will receive an eighth-grade education and will then register in professional training centers. This was disclosed on Wednesday by the commercial counselor of the GDR Embassy in Maputo, who noted that the school will open as early as next year. INCOME, EXPENDITURES QUESTIONNAIRE--The inquiry about income and expenditures among the population which had started officially on 1 August in the cities of Maputo, Beira and Nampula ended successfully yesterday. The positive results that were achieved are mainly due to the serious efforts of the families involved as well as to the workers who conducted the inquiry. The process involved 1980 families and 176 workers, as well as many students from the Eduardo Mondlane University. At this time the questionnaires will be reviewed, making sure that they remain in good condition. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 31 Aug 81 p 3]

NEUTRON BOMB CONDEMNED--Referring specifically to United States' insistence on building the neutron bomb, President Samora Machel condemned the warlike positions of the U.S. Government. Speaking Sunday evening at a dinner given in honor of the Swedish prime minister, the Mozambican head of state publicly announced Mozambique's opposition to the construction of that genocidal weapon. Commenting on Washington's increasing lack of responsibility, Samora Machel asserted: "In deciding to manufacture the neutron bomb, refrain from ratifying the Salt II agreement and insist on installing missiles in Europe, thus defying international public opinion, the American government is paving the way for a new world war." MORE USSR CARS--A total of 350 "Lada" cars from the Soviet Union are being offloaded since yesterday in the port of Maputo, Victor Sotnikov, USSR trade representative in Mozambique stated yesterday. He added that more than 700 "UAZ" and "Lada" cars from the Soviet Union arrived in Mozambique during the first semester of this year. In relation to the USSR's participation in the Maputo Trade Fair FACIM-81, he stated that a new make of a K-701 tractor, various agricultural machines and "Kamaz" diesel trucks would be presented. He said that these trucks "have already proved adequate in Mozambique's climate and we expect to draw up contracts with this country to furnish more of the same." PORTUGUESE HOTEL COOPERATION--Portugal will provide training for the cadre who will teach at the future hotel school in Mozambique. Thus a number of Mozambicans with an eleventh grade education will participate in a hotel management course at the hotel and tourism school of Porto. Portugal will also award study grants for training courses involving cooks, pastry cooks, laundry services, waiters and housekeeping. This information was disclosed at a press conference given by the Portuguese delegation visiting our country to hold talks related to cooperation in the field of cadre training for Mozambique's hotel and tourist industry. Members of the delegation include Carlos Lima, chief of the planning division of the national institute for tourism training, Victor Wenceslau, deputy director of the Porto hotel and tourism school and Joao Gageiro, deputy director of the hotel and tourism school of Estoril. MILITIA INFILTRATORS--Beira--"Let us disarm all the OPVDC's [former local members of Portuguese police] infiltrated in the militia who hold FRELIMO weapons. Let us do it right away," Minister of Interior Mariano Matsinha said at the end of his visit to the "Lusalite de Mocambique" installations in the Dondo district. This statement was made following the disclosure by the head of the militia in this unit of production that some former elements of the OPVDC associated with the Portuguese colonial-fascist regime can still be found within this firm. Mariano Matsinha asked: "How could these elements defend this enterprise in terms of vigilance? They can continue to work, but should always be kept under watch." He also ordered that all arms in possession of these elements should be confiscated. The "Lusalite de Mocambique" is affected at present by serious production problems, besides a number of other difficulties. It was noted that production in this strategically important unit is very low. Besides producing construction materials, this firm is also important for export purposes. HUNGARIAN DELEGATION PROMISES SUPPORT--"Hungary may train qualified personnel for the future press corps of the Mozambican Youth Organization [OJM]," said Andras Veres, member of the Executive Council of the Union of Communist Youth of Hungary, yesterday at the Mavalane airport in Maputo. Andras Veres is heading a delegation from his organization which is making a 5-day visit to our country. During the visit a cooperation accord will be signed by the two organizations covering the 1981-1983 period, since the 2-year period 1980-1982 is about to end. "We shall be able to give our entire support to the training of journalists for the Mozambican Youth Organization. In our discussions with the OJM we shall examine the most feasible ways to carry out that project. It may be part of the tasks covered by the agreement we shall be signing," the head of the Hungarian delegation said in responding to a journalist's question. The Hungarian delegation is to supply the OJM with various pieces of equipment for its photography laboratory. The purpose of the equipment is to support the OJM's news gathering efforts. Giving a brief account of the accomplishments of previous accords, Andras Veres said that almost all objectives had been reached. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Aug 81 p 2] 8568

SUGAR TERMINAL--The Zimbabwe and Swaziland sugar industries will jointly finance a project in the amount of 1.4 million dollars (approxiamtely 52 million meticals) to build a sugar terminal in the port of Maputo, the association of sugar producers of Zimbabwe announced. The director of the association, Geoffrey Thomas, disclosed that the decision was made as a result of a problem affecting the present terminal. At this time the shipments destined for export from Zimbabwe and Swaziland are blocked. Both of these countries use the port of Maputo to ship their product abroad. Sources close to the sugar industry in Zimbabwe disclosed that sugar production generated 88 million dollars last years. It is estimated that a record production amounting to 370,000 tons will be reached this year. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Sep 81 p 10]

S. AFRICAN SABOTAGE CHARGED--The late planting of potatoes for the present harvest resulting from South African sabotage in supplying seeds has already compromised the production goals for the next agricultural campaign in the Moamba and Magude state production units. It will also entail another delay in planting the corn, an activity that should be initiated during the month of September and, in a vicious circle, will also affect the planting of potatoes in February, since all this must be done in the same soil. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Aug 81 p 1]

INCREASED EXPORTS TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA--It is possible that Mozambique will rapidly increase its volume of exports of Czechoslovakia. Tea, cashews, cashew and coconut balsam, citrus fruits and others are the products most sought-after on the Czech market, as we were able to ascertain at this country's representation at the FACIM-81 [Maputo Trade Fair]. Czechoslovakia is now buying from Mozambique tea and cashews. It sells our country "Tatra" bricks, construction machinery and various tools. It is expected that Czechoslovakia will help Mozambique to rebuild breweries and to give a new impulse to the ceramics industry. Of course, these projects are still under study. The next meeting of the mixed Mozambique-Czechoslovakia commission will be held in the Mozambican capital before the end of this eyar. [Excerpt] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Sep 81 p 10]

QUALIFIED WORKERS TRAINING--More than 1,000 qualified workers have been trained since the beginning of the year in 40 technical centers and 14 professional technical schools in the People's Republic of Mozambique. The training of qualified workers is one of the main concerns of the FRELIMO and the Mozambican Government. It is estimated that by 1985 the needs of the Mozambican economy in qualified workers will be totally filled. [Text] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 28 Aug 81 p 12]

ETHNICITY DEBATE INVOLVES BROAD POLITICAL ISSUES

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 8 Sep 81 pp 10-12

[Article by David Pieters: "Ethnicity: Cultural, Pragmatic or Political Suicide?"]

[Text] DURING A political seance in the Continental Hotel's Red Room recently a surprised audience witnessed Dr Jan Spies, Editor of Die Republikein, summon the spirit of Hegelian dialectics during his lecture titled "Ethnicity: Politics or Culture?" and accidently dislodge the ghostly "12th population group" from its shrouded half-life in AG Proclamation 8 of 1980.

Like a king's messenger, Dr Johan Jones Secretary for Finance, bought the revelation that the essence of the mysterious population group named "Other Namibians" was an unfortunate oversight in technical formulation of the law when it was first drafted.

Dr Spies learned, like the others present that Namibians could not willy-nilly declassify themselves from one of the earthly 11 ethnic groups and reclassify themselves as holy members of the other.

Just as Hegel's philosophical categories could never find their actual fulfilment on the ground. so the mirage of a 12th Group receded into the distant future of constitutional amendments and a time when its practical realisation in society would merge with the creation of One Namibian Nation.

What started off as an evening lecture innocently posing the question whether ethnicity is politics or culture, ended up as a discourse on the politics of ethnicity.

It may all sound a bit Greek, but then Dr Spies commenced his lecture by tracing the Hellenic concept of "Ethnos" through two and a half thousand years of "history" until today, and ended by tracing ethnicity onto the social fabric of contemporary SWA so that we were left with the puzzle of 11 groups, a mishapen 12th piece that just didn't fit, and an atomised nation which had to be fissioned in the fire of social conflict.

Dr Spies delivered a fine lecture on the concept of Ethnos and introduced some excellent academic discourse into the evening's discussion.

But just as he had to resort to the convenient reminder that language permits its speaker to say only one thing at a time when he found himself in one of those difficult corners into which Dr Kenneth Abrahams' devastating critique had driven him into during question time, so it emerged that the intellectual power of Dr Spies' discourse unleashed the metaphor of social conflict into the Red Room, which, insights into the dialectics of language aside, also served very usefully to lift the veil covering the RP's particular brand of defensive Republicanism.

Dr Spies defined culture as the creative existence of people and discussed the inevitability of changes in the identity of cultural groups.

"I LOVE IT FOR WHAT IT IS"

"I am not speaking of stagnation", he said, "when I speak of ethnicity, I speak of my love for it. I love it for what it is today and also for what it will be tomorrow."

It was Dr Spies who introduced the concept of dialectics into the discussion, defining it as the tension of opposites in the existence of things.

So was it with ethnicity's first born child — nationalism — which could either become a blessing in disguise (uniting a people) or a blessing in the guise of a curse...

"Hitler had a lovely predecessor", observed Dr Spies, "in the form of Cecil John Rhodes who committed the error of absolutising the Anglo Saxon Race as the finest in the world."

"Once a nation absolutises itself, it is the end," he said.

I suppose one could infer from this that in Namibia where nationalism is so far just about absolutely nothing, there has therefore been no beginning...

This is the type of conclusion that one can draw from a concept of history that runs in circles, instead of adopting a view of history that spirals foreward...

Dr Spies concluded his lecture with the remarkable injunction that ethnicity is a fact of life that cannot or should not be done away with in law while at the same time reserving the right to label it as dangerous if overemphasised.

This has a familiar ring to it...

FIREWORKS

Then the fireworks started.

The obvious rhetorical questions came pouring out from the bloodthirsty audience who had waited for their chance to demonstrate their opposition to an ethnic dispensation subscribed to by Dr Spies.

"Do you mean to tell me that the Herero or Nama of today is the same as the Herero or the Nama of precolonial times?" rang out the indignant question.

The answer is simple, explained Dr Spies in a fatherly way. Of course they are not the same ethnicities.

"The Herero and the Nama of today (as examples of all the other population groups) are obviously different Hereros and different Namas from what they were yesterday. That is what I said in my lecture."

As simple as that. In fact, continued Dr Spies, one of the better aspects of colonialism was that, over the decades, it filtered out the weaker elements pertaining to each ethnic group, so that only the essentialities remained for the present.

In that manner, the Herero remained a damn good stock farmer today, and the Owambo as good an agriculturalist, and those who had been urbanised were nevertheless better examples of their changing ethnicities than they were previously.

One wonders how it is possible to measure the "goodness" of Herero-ness today and Herero-ness of yesteryear, in order to compare them with one another, when they have both changed in the first place.

Dr Spies made his point, though, when he countered by stating the pertinent fact that certain people nevertheless continued to regard themselves as Hereros, others as Damaras, and so on.

The question needs to be asked, and it was not that night, namely, is Herero-ness today really the kernel of the concept of Herero-ness, or is it the shell.

People will even clutch at straws, we are told, when they have been decimated, expropriated, and castigated for generations under colonial domination.

Dr Spies made an interesting remark when asked whether the present dispensation was not perhaps too far removed from a balanced harmony between ethnic compartmentalisation and national co-operation.

"I am discovering more about Africa each day in my Black Colleagues and they in turn are discovering the little bit of Europe I still have left in me.

I am amazed to find that each day there are fewer secrets I can keep from my Black colleagues."

And the biggest secret of all showed its icy tip when the prickly question of social conflict models of society versus pluralist-integration models was posed.

Dr Z Ngavirue (Dr Zed) pointed out that unlike pluralists such as Dr Spies, those who held a conflict model of social dynamics aloft, believed that the source of conflict was the struggle for scarce economic resources and political power.

"Our most dangerous conflict situation is discrimination on the grounds of ethnicity", Dr Spies replied, "when the top layers of society are frustrated because of their colour." He then went on to identify the aspirations of the Black middle class – their need for employment and progress – as the most pressing; because the lines of future social conflict in the country would not be between Black and Black, as he put it, but between the Whites and the Black middle classes.

At this point Dr Jones was called upon to say a few words on the question of economic upliftment as a vehicle for political conciliation.

He made the interesting distinction between the "upper" and middle classes, presumably referring to the Black society, saying that the middle classes were less easier to frustrate than the upper classes because they – and by this he must have meant the peasantry as the "middle" Black classes – have access to the land, and are ideologically less resourceful, than the more educated upper Black strata.

There is a certian validity in recognizing that an emergent Black "upper class" harbours greater dangers for White colonial society than the "middle classes" such as the peasantry, on Dr Jones part.

The "bottom classes" however, which neither Dr Jones nor Dr J D Spies even mentioned, are precisely the ones – the vast majority – who feed on the radical ideologies offered by the Black "upper classes" who also happen to be the ideologically most resourceful.

Rare Observer

Mr Werner Neef, who is one of the rare political observers who even dares to utter the word "unemployed proletariat" at this late hour, has at least been able to articulate the connection between a semi-literate and unemployed mass and the growth of totalitarian regimes, from a political platform, be it his own personal one.

But then he is a politician for whom real social distinctions count.

From Dr Spies' few remarks it could easily be gathered that his brand of Republican is prone to reconcile only the reconcilable Black and white elites, while leaving the middle and the bottom layers to continue ranting and raving about the non-existent Namibian people struggling to become a nation.

If these are the realities, how real is "ethnicity"?

Dr Kenneth Abrahams, who like a hawk perches to one side while the hounds weary the prey with their incessant baying, yapping frustrated questions at a victim who has been specially selected for the purpose, much like a bizzare fox hunt, now takes flight and circles in for the kill.

Circles for the Kill

"In this country ethnicity exists as a purely arbitrary definition. People in this country belong to various divisions. They belong to social classes, they are either owners of factories or they are workers, traditionally they belong to different tribes, they belong to different sexes. But of all of these attributes which Namibians possess, government has arbitrarily selected ethnicity as the main defining criterion."

He then goes on to state his belief that "ethnicity is an arbitrary way of dividing Namibians in order, in a very deliberate way, to prevent the development of a single Namibian Nation."

Proclamation AG 8 is then described by Dr Abrahams as a "deliberate" prevention of such a nation forming.

"Without this proclamation Namibians would develop a common culture and move towards a common nation much faster than they are doing at the moment and this proclamation is an obstacle in the way of development towards nationhood."

Ethnicity, according to Dr Abrahams, does not exist in this country as an objective scientific fact, to which Dr Spies conceded, since different criteria are used to define different population groups, in some cases language, in other cases colour, and so on.

"Ethnicity exists only in the minds of people who look at population groups in a very ethnic way," he said.

Cultural, ethnic, linguistic and traditional differences are all lumped together by Dr Spies as constituting ethnicity, challenged Dr Abrahams.

"Proclamation AG 8 must to my mind be changed," retorted Dr Spies on the point of arbitrariness in the number (eleven) of ethnic groups laid down in AG 8. "I wouldn't say abolished, and I wouldn't say changed tonight or tomorrow, but there are certain aspects which I can't accept anymore." he agreed. He did not elaborate on that.

He only attempted to justify the present structure of that proclamation by saying that the blanketing of different criteria into one when it defined 10 Black ethnic groups on the one hand, and grouped Portuguese, German, English and Afrikaans speaking Whites together, on the other hand because of their closer affinity for one another.

FORCING

"If one left it at that level", added Dr Abrahams, "it wouldn't do anybody any harm. But this Government is forcing ethnicity down our throats."

He continued: "I'm very glad that you said Proclamation AG 8 should be changed, because it shows to what extent the DTA is shifting political ground.

"In 1978 the DTA would never have accepted the slogan "One Namibia, One Nation". The fact that the DTA is now using a Swapo slogan shows to what extent the ideology of the DTA has been undermined."

A protest by Dr Spies at the charge "undermined" drew the concession from Dr Abrahams "OK, let's say to what extent the philosophy of the DTA is changing, or being modified by circumstances. Because I think the DTA is aware of the fact that in Namibia at this time ethnicity is not a saleable political commodity and what is more, supporting ethnicity is a quick way of committing political suicide. Now we are speaking politics, we are not speaking philosophy or science.

"Another thing which I think is significant is to hear you say AG 8 should be changed. Now we have felt this for many years, and have been attacking it consistently for many years."

With a note of added triumph Dr Abrahams continued.

"It is good to hear from, shall we say, DTA sources, that even this adherence to AG 8 is undergoing certain changes. What I would like to discuss, of course, is which way do you think it should be changed."

Dr Abrahams then turned to the mysterious 12th group and described the recent discovery by certain Whites that the could not reclassify themselves into the 12th group.

NONSENSE

This made nonsense of Dr Spies' argument that ethnic groups, if not scientifically justifiable, could at least be given de facto substance from peoples' personal feelings of "belongingness."

CHALLENGE

It was then that Dr Abrahams directed his challenge to the Government, which was reported by this newspaper at the time.

"I would like to challenge the Government to create this 12th group and then to see what happens. I can assure you that within 12 months you will have most Namibians reclassifying themselves if given the legal right to do so."

Dr Spies then defended AG Proclamation 8 by saying that people did not necessarily have to have the legal right to classify themselves into "group 12".

They only had to abstain from registering themselves as belonging to any of the other eleven groups, then their public needs would automatically be satisfied by the Central Government.

Dr Jones, referring to that occassion when he also addressed the Namibian Education Forum a fortnight previously then rose to "Dr Spies", he said, "I did in all honesty say that night exactly what you are saying now, and the reason why I said it was, amongst others that that was told to me by the person who wrote the proclamation."

"But," he continued, "he did not write there exactly what he wanted to write. This has only emerged now. It is a technical error in the law and as a result of what transpired here that night, the case is presently being examined by the Ministers' Council, and it is one of the aspects in which there may in the foreseeable future, come a change to bring about what was originally intended."

Dr Jones cautioned that it was not a simple matter. AG 8, he explained, was a constitution and it could not be tampered with lightly from day to day.

But, he added, the person who wrote the proclamation intended it to be changed weekly or monthly during the first years since it was impossible for him to premeditate all the shortcomings in the law as first drafted.

However, Dr Jones went further, the fact of the matter is that the proclamation is regarded today as a constitution which cannot be lightly altered, but that alter it will.

SAW THE LIGHT

Then Dr Spies saw the light. He admitted that he had been labouring under a misapprehension, and went on to insist that each Namibian should have the right to choose whether he wanted to belong to an ethnic group or to be classified only as a Namibian, responsible to and cared for by the Central Government.

So it suddenly seemed as if Dr Abrahams and Dr Spies had found each other on the vanishing point of the Other Category but there are signs that the road to the Other is going to be a difficult one that will, like every concession made by Government, have to be fought for.

PULL THE PLUG

It is difficult to imagine that the Central Government, which thrives on ethnicity in the final costitutional instance, would willingly pull the plug out of its nice ethnic bathtub and watch all its ethnically herded voters disappear down the drian to be gathered into the fold of a growing oppositionist flock.

For the anti-ethniciticians' to coin a phrase, are also largely the oppositionists outside the National Assembly.

Maybe it doesn't matter to the ruling DTA whether in 12 months after it has given the go-ahead for the declassification campaign by amending AG 8, that it will have even less of a majority than it has at present, at the second tier ethnic level. Already it does not have the majority support of the Whites, Basters and Damaras.

But those are answers that lie in store for the future.

In the meanwhile another lesson has been learnt, namely that philosophical idealism is a useful mystification for political reality, but it cannot defend itself against consistent critique once exposed for what it is.

The answer to the question "Is ethnicity culture, or is it politics," has been provisionally answered through the "politics of ethnicity."

The principle of ethnicity, when absolutised centrally into a country's constitution, demonstrates a practical political choice of the rulers.

Dr Spies' defence of ethnicity on philosophical grounds is understandable, since the Republican Party has after all inherited apartheid.

But that is only the historical merit of his case, which politically is becoming intolerable to many.

FRG: S.W. AFRICAN POLITICIANS READY FOR SUPERVISED NAMIBIAN ELECTION

LD081452 Hamburg DPA in German 1307 GMT 8 Sep 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 8 Sep (DPA)--In Bonn today leading South-West African politicians expressed their readiness for internationally supervised elections in Namibia including candidates of the South-West African People's Organization [SWAPO] guerrilla movement. However, they rejected the UN as a "referee." At the same time, Peter Kalangula, Ben Africa and Hans-Juergen von Hase, the leading members of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance [DTA], stressed their determination for a "total political separation from South Africa."

The DTA politicians have been in the Federal Republic since Monday for talks with parties and parliamentary deputies. [Passage omitted explaining Bonn's attitude toward the DTA].

The three [words indistinct] said that the DTA accepted any "truly neutral referee," such as a group of states, including neighboring African states, in supervised elections which would be a preliminary stage to independence. The UN itself had recognized SWAPO, which is involved in a guerrilla war, as the legitimate representative of Namibia and thus was not neutral. The DTA also demanded specific constitutional guarantees such as the observance of human rights, regular new elections, the right to property and a fair chance for DTA election participation.

The DTA representatives warned Bonn against thinking that SWAPO, which is receiving massive support from the USSR, the GDR and Cuba, would take an independent path following an assumption of power. The example of Zimbabwe could not be applied to a Namibia ruled by SWAPO.

ANGOLA LAUNCHES DIPLOMATIC OFFENSIVE TO COUNTER SA RAID

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 28 Aug 81 p 8

[Editorial: "Angola's Tactic"]

[Text] Far from the alleged heavy gunfire in its southern provinces Angola has now launched another battle. It is a ploy to discredit the countries to its south. It is a ploy for which they can count on international sympathy and compel the same where it is not automatically forthcoming.

The key to this diplomatic offensive is to be found in a single phrase in the letter that Angolan President Jose Eduardo dos Santos addressed to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim: "The powers given you by the charter."

What dos Santos was really doing was reminding Waldheim that by virtue of the charter's provisions he is empowered to call a meeting of the security council on the events in the south of Angola. He was probably also being reminded that dos Santos' letter or protest could also be circulated as a security council document.

In the letter Angola mentions a grave development, a threat, a terrifying South African troop strength of 45,000, deserters, mercenaries and foreigners allegedly taking part, etc.

Angola got its anticipated reaction from Waldheim. The secretary general was on vacation, but the gravity he attached to the message was reflected in his immediate return to his headquarters.

Upon his arrival there Waldheim declared: "Events in the south of Angola indicate how unstable the situation in that part of the world will remain as long as SWA/Namibia is not independent."

With the support of a world press it is also clear that Angola wants to mobilize with its propaganda the western world against South Africa and by implication SWA/Namibia too. How convenient therefore that it is precisely FRG's controversial Baron Ruediger von Wechmar who is now chairman of the UN General Assembly.

When in Rome do as the Romans do...

FRG is one of the western countries seeking a solution to the SWA/Namibia issue. So, use von Wechmar and through him FRG and through it exert influence on the other four--Canada, France, Britain and America.

Von Wechmar immediately did what was expected of him: "South Africa's action hinders the search for a peaceful solution in SWA/Namibia."

This FRG position at the UN was echoed in Bonn when the foreign minister almost immediately got in touch with America. While France and Canada held their silence for the moment and the British government did not react as crudely as its press, America's reaction was surprisingly sensible.

Among other things America noted that SWAPO raids from Angola into areas in the north of SWA/Namibia should also be taken into consideration.

But Angola may be aiming at two other targets. With its complaints it may be trying to find justification for the presence of ca. 15,000 Cubans on its territory. Dos Santos appealed to President Fidel Castro precisely because the latter is currently head of the so-called non-aligned nations.

The other target is Africa and South African premier P.W. Botha's standing offer of cooperation. By complaining to the OAU, any possible cooperation may be tossed out the window.

There is also good reason for the somewhat nervous haste with which Angola is conducting its diplomatic offensive. On Thursday the UN General Assembly opens its session and that is the time for delivering an attack against South Africa and SWA/Namibia.

DEBIT, CREDIT ASPECTS OF WESTERN PLAN EXAMINED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 8 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text] The SWA issue has certainly constituted a tremendous contradiction during the past few days.

On the negative side:

- The General Assembly has refused SA and the DTA a platform to present their cases while they in turn have been exceptionally castigated;
- And France is beginning to adopt an increasingly harder line on SA.

On the positive side:

- The Reagan Administration stood by SA in the Security Council last week;
- US Secretary of State Alexander Haig reportedly said during the weekend that SA has agreed to accept Security Council Resolution 435 in presumably a new form;
- And during the weekend the Western five governments reported progress in relations between themselves and SA.

Overall, however, we still have great reservations about the possible success of the Western plan, conceding the Reagan Government's considerable and courageous efforts to overcome the impasse.

Indeed, we express considerable gratitude to General Haig, Dr Chester Crocker and others.

The flies in the ointment are these:

- The UN is becoming increasingly partial when it is expected to become increasingly impartial;
- The Frontline states are adopting an increasingly militant line, dragging in the Eastern bloc and thus hardening local attitudes;
- The war to the north has now reached such proportions that it cannot be easily tempered;
- West Germany and France have tended to negate SA's renewed faith in the US and Britain;
- SA is reluctant to hand over SWA to the UN on the UN's conditions;
- And the DTA is not prepared to enter an election which it cannot win and SA is not prepared to force it to do so.

Clearly, therefore, the nut is still an extremely hard one to crack, if it can be cracked at all!

MORE SWAPO ARRESTS--A further six Swapo members, some of them leadres of lower rank, have been detained by the Security Police at the weekend, bringing the total to 10 presently being held for questioning under AG Proclamation 9. Their names have not been released. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 9 Sep 81 p 3]

TRANSFER OF SECONDED OFFICIALS--Windhoek: Four officials seconded from South Africa to the Owambo Administration in SWA were being transferred, the chairman of the Owambo Executive Committee, Mr Peter Kalangula, said in Windhoek last week. Among them was the Secretary to the Owambo Administration, Mr Callie Reinecke. Die Suidwester newspaper reported in Windhoek that 45 more seconded officials had requested to be transferred, but Mr Kalangula said he could not confirm this report. "I have been away from Owambo and have not heard that anyone else wants to leave. If others wish to go, that is their decision." Mr Kalangula did not want to comment as suggestions that the officials were leaving over differences of interpretation on implementation of non-racial policies of the Owambo Executive Committee, and the democratic alliance on the first tier of government. "But the decision has been taken after consultations at the highest level," he said. The officials who are leaving SWA are Mr Reinecke, Mr Nap Visser, Mr Piet Grundling and Mr Thomas Potgier. Last month the Owambo Executive Committee discussed the position of the officials with the Windhoek representative, Mr Ben Lindeque of the Office of the South African Prime Minister, and the odministrator General of the Territory, Mr Danie Hough. SWAPO'S INFILTRATION TACTIC--SWAPO's tactic in Owambo of recruitment of only its supporters as employes of large industries can be still neutralized this year if legislation can be wrapped up that makes it impossible for employes any longer directly to be recruited by such individuals. Gregor Tibinyane, a member of the council of ministers, announced this the day before yesterday in Omungwelume. Addressing some 700 Wambos, he stated that it had come to the attention of the ministers' council that certain companies' recruitment personnel were bent on recruiting only SWAPO members as employes. "Bureaus will be set up to deal with personnel recruitment. No company or organization will be allowed to recruit employes. The municipalities will act as agents of the government." In an interview with REPUBLIKEIN following the meeting Tibinyane said he was aware that foreign organizations are trying to politically organize SWA employes. Leading the offensive is the African American Labour Centre (AALC) and its executive director, Patrick O'Farrel. "SWAPO is infiltrating schools and churches. But we know who their people are." He stated that the central administration will do all in its power to keep this nation's workers from being manipulated by political organizations and churches. He also indicated that the ministers' council is in the process of identifying and neutralizing groups that have no business getting involved with SWA workers. COMMENTARY SHARPLY CRITICIZES 'RUMORMONGERING'

AB151831 Niamey Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 15 Sep 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] We shall never stop stressing this prerequisite, without which there can be no social development. Well, they try to lie to us in our homes, in our cities, at our work. Who are "they"? "They" is an indefinite pronoun, grammatically, but in the face of realities, we know who "they" are. "They" equals the enemies of Niger Republic, who are jealous of Niger's peace and of the establishment of the society of development. Today, Niger's enemies have taken to rumormongering by cleverly circulating false reports. They make people believe that there have been some arrests. This is a shameful way of lowering the morale of the people. Nobody has been arrested. They are only trying to divert our attention from the task of nation-building.

The supreme military council and the government have taken all the initiatives and decisions to ensure public freedom as well as freedom of movement for everyone. When we talk about security, this is what we mean. When we talk about vigilance, this is what we mean. We must unmask prophets of doom who have a hidden motive for bearing grudges against the tranquility in our country. This is one of the several recommendations made by the head of state in his address to the nation on 2 August 1981, and I quote: "I particularly emphasize that you should be constantly attentive to matters concerning the security of our country." A similar call was recently made at Maradi during the first meeting of the National Bureau of the Local Development Societies.

Also in another message, the chairman of the supreme military council reiterated the armed forces' pledge: "We shall ensure the development of all Niger citizens in the absolute principles of dignity, justice and freedom." The realization of such a national goal is [word indistinct] in this particularly difficult world economic situation. To disturb the peace and tranquility of our country (?at this time) seems anachronistic [words indistinct].

Rumormongering must not take root in our country since the country's leaders, beginning with President Kountche himself, have decided to make Niger a country of dialogue and exchange of views. We can cite as examples the numerous conferences of cadres and the information meetings as well as the meetings of cabinet members with the Niger people. This is Niger's style of democracy which must be supported.

DIRECTOR OF ECOWAS FUND RECEIVED--The head of state today received Mr Robert Tubman, director general of the ECOWAS Fund. After the audience, Mr Tubman, through his interpreter, told us the aim of his talks with the head of state: [Begin Tubman recording in English fading into French translations] The purpose of our visit falls within the framework of contacts which authorities of the two institutions [ECOWAS and ECOWAS Fund] must have with the member states. In my meeting with his excellency this morning, I reported to him on the condition of the ECOWAS Fund. I reported to him that the fund is now in a position to undertake the financing of the telecommunication project in the member states and also that we are very happy that the fund has received very good cooperation from the government of Niger and that they have met all of their obligations and all of their subscriptions. The telecommunication project costs $35 million and this will enable us to set up telecommunication systems in all the community member countries. This will also facilitate communication between the ECOWAS countries; this is very important. [end recording] [Text] [AB111506 Niamey Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 11 Sep 81]

INFORMATION MINISTER HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE

AB101307 Paris AFP in French 0727 GMT 10 Sep 81

[Text] Dakar, 10 Sep (AFP)--Relations between Senegal and Angola may not remain frozen because of the mutual respect that the leaders of the two countries have for each other, Senegalese Information Minister Djibo Ka said while commenting on Senegal's condemnation of the South African military attack on Angola.

Asked at a press conference whether this condemnation could mean that Dakar and Luanda, which do not have diplomatic relations, are becoming closer, the minister emphasized that the Senegalese action was in line with its commitment to respect for the integrity and sovereignty of African states.

Commenting on the extradition of Kukli Samba Sanyang, the leader of the abortive coup d'etat in Gambia, and his nine companions who are now in exile in Guinea-Bissau, Djibo Ka emphasized that there is no ambiguity in the sincerity of relations between Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

After explaining that Senegal has not demanded the extradition--which concerns Bissau and Banjul--the minister observed that the issue should be handled with caution and also stressed the necessity to conserve the fraternal nature of the relations between Senegal and Guinea-Bissau.

He denied allegations that the Senegalese head of state stated that the Senegal-Gambia confederation will come into effect on 1 January 1982 and explained that no date has been set by the Senegalese head of state. Mr Ka said that the project is underway and will be studied by experts before being submitted for ratification by the two countries separately.

Asked about a declaration made to an African weekly by Leopold Sedar Senghor, the former Senegalese head of state, Mr Ka said that the establishment of a complete multi-party system in Senegal is part of the natural evolution of the Senegalese people since independence, and that it has been confirmed by the Senegalese people. Mr Senghor said that the establishment of a multi-party system in Senegal without limiting the number of parties seems premature to him.

Finally, the minister explained that the Ministerial Council of Senegal has adopted a law giving the Supreme Court the power to monitor the electoral campaign, the casting and counting of votes, and the announcement of the final results in the presidential and legislative elections.

MINISTER OF COMMERCE ANNOUNCES SUGAR PRICE INCREASE

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 10 Aug 81 p 5

[8 August speech by Minister of Commerce Falilou Kane]

[Excerpt] In a message to the nation on Saturday evening, the minister of commerce announced an increase in the price of sugar. Lump sugar thus goes from 260 to 325 francs a kilogram, loaf sugar from 295 to 370, granulated sugar from 245 to 305 and caster sugar from 285 to 355 francs. These new prices went into effect yesterday, Sunday, at midnight.

The following is the text of Falilou Kane's message.

My fellow countrymen:

The world in which we live is involved in a crisis whose outcome is difficult to predict. We have but to look around us to realize that in many ways, God has spared us from certain natural disasters and the violence and intolerance that have rocked certain communities and countries. That is why the peace and stability which our dear Senegal enjoys and which are the envy of many other countries must be preserved and safeguarded every instant.

You are aware that because of the interdependency of the countries making up the community of nations, whatever happens in the powerful developed countries and those endowed with energy resources also affects others.

Recovery Effort

As a result, the economic crisis that has shaken the world economy since the increased price of oil beginning in 1973, a crisis made worse by several years of drought, has had consequences on our country:

1) first of all, a drop in our export receipts derived from the products of our soil and subsoil. Peanut products which in 1979 represented over 40 billion CFA francs have dropped to 14,859,000,000 in 1980.

2) second, a steady increase in our oil bill, which went from 29.2 billion in 1979 to 48 billion in 1980.

These negative factors have had as their immediate consequence a continual aggravation in Senegal's trade balance deficit and in its balance of payments.

As you know, the medium-term economic and financial recovery plan adopted in 1979 by the government of Senegal should enable us to take corrective measures to remedy the situation by 1985.

This recovery effort can bear fruit only if every Senegalese man and woman understands the situation of our economy and accepts a sacrifice for the good of the community and the entire nation.

It is within this context that I should like to speak to you this evening about the sugar problem.

The 1980 sugar harvest upset all the factors that had prevailed since 1973. In fact, from July 1979 to July 1980, prices increased 3.5 times. And yet, by massive subsidies, the government was able to hold retail prices steady. A large share of our sugar (52 percent), over half, comes from local sugar taken from cane grown at Richard Toll. The rest is imported raw sugar which is refined locally. The importance of the sugar sector and its place in our diet have led the government to adopt a sugar policy and a cane growing program aimed at the overall coverage of our needs in 2 years. This deadline is not far off. And yet, in the meantime and because we import raw sugar, we shall continue to suffer the effects of the international market.

To date, in order to avoid escalating retail prices, the government has devoted and continues to devote large sums to maintaining consumer prices. In 1980, for a consumption of 75,709 tons, the government, through the Price Standardization and Equalization Fund, has granted subsidies amounting to over 3 billion, which represents 40.208 francs for every kilogram of lump sugar. This means that when the consumer pays 260 francs today, he would be paying 300 francs without the support of the Fund. Instead of decreasing, this effect has steadily grown from year to year. For 1981, with an anticipated overall consumption of 76,000 tons, the subsidy will represent 4,755,000,000, or 62.573 francs a kilogram.

In a normal period, the government could have continued this policy of price supports, as it is still doing for many basic products. Unfortunately, our means prevent us from doing so indefinitely: 1) when the dollar continues its spiral (300 CFA francs for a dollar, when the rate was 240 less than a year ago) and 2) when ocean shipping and overland transport rates increase every time that oil products go up.

What is even more serious, this effort by the government and therefore, by the entire national community, is undermined by the fraud and speculation that cause certain individuals to market this sugar that we are subsidizing to neighboring countries, where prices are much higher than prices set by the Ministry of Commerce.

For all these reasons, the government has decided to modify sugar prices, which will go, effective midnight, 9 August 1981: from 260 to 325 francs per kilogram of lump sugar; from 295 to 370 francs for loaf sugar; from 245 to 305 francs for granulated sugar; and from 285 to 355 francs for a kilogram of caster sugar.

We awaited the end of Ramadan to take these new measures, in order to attenuate the additional burden borne by the consumer during this period of the year when consumption increases heavily.

The effort demanded of you will be neither useless nor isolated. It will be seconded and supported by the government, which continues to grant subsidies which, for the period between now and the end of December 1981, to 3,866,000,000 francs, or 51.8 francs for every kilogram of sugar purchased. This shows how great the government's sugar price support effort is.

RND SECRETARY DISCUSSES ENERGY, NATIONAL LANGUAGES

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 12 Aug 81 p 3

[Report on 31 August press conference of Cheikh Anta Diop, secretary general of the RND (National Democratic Rally)]

[Text] Through its secretary general, Cheikh Anta Diop, the National Democratic Rally (RND) gave a press conference at the Dakar Chamber of Commerce on Monday, based on its program and line of action. The conference was attended by bureau members and a large audience.

Cheikh Anta Diop concentrated on three points: the energy problem, economic integration in Africa and cultural reforms based on the development of national languages so as to permit effective participation by the people in the management of public affairs.

"Resolution of the energy problem is not a matter of book knowledge. We must innovate," Diop said, taking up the first point. The RND's position on the energy problem was presented at length in the form of proposals in six terms. What are the most important points? First of all, according to the leader of the RND, the invention of a technology of hydrogen as an energy vector is undoubtedly the solution of the future. In 30 or 40 years, all fossile fuels, particularly oil and coal, will be very scarce on the planet. "It is hydrogen that we shall burn, which implies the need for a technical revolution to be embarked upon now in order not to be left behind." Diop also emphasized the need to develop renewable forms of energy. The leader of the RND recommends an interconnection of African systems in order to achieve energy independence. "They say that Africa does not have enough energy, which is not true. It is mainly that we see energy only in the fossile form. The solution would be continental organization."

Taking up the hydroelectric dams which countries in the subregion propose to build within the framework of the OMVG [Gambia River Development Organization] and especially the OMVS, Diop indicated that the RND does not join in the criticism concerning these great projects (particularly the Diama Dam). He believes that such criticism is "without grounds." "We are the first to have recommended such projects 30 years ago. Those who criticize these dams are speaking within the framework of food self-sufficiency, but neglect the possibility of producing 800 million kilowatt-hours a year, in addition to the navigability of the river. All of this constitutes solutions for the future."

Concerning economic integration, Diop points to the example of Latin America, which, because it failed in its federation under Bolivar, is nothing but a subcolony of the United States. "And with the Balkanization of Africa, we are witnessing a South Americanization of the continent." No African problem is soluble within the framework of an isolated state. Even lucid egotism would point to a federation in order to emerge from the neocolonial framework in which we are evolving, he stated. Diop recommended the institution of organic bonds between West African nations. Within such a context, it is no longer a question of integrating only the markets through reductions in tariffs.

National Languages

The need to promote national languages has remained a constant objective of the RND. The secretary general of the party supported this by indicating "that it is impossible to overcome underdevelopment by governing people in a foreign language." Less than 10 percent of the Senegalese people speak French fluently, he said. Consequently, he emphasized that even if there is a real desire to establish democracy, the process is distorted insofar as it concerns but less than 10 percent of the population. The RND proposes a gradual introduction of national languages, along with their use in the administration and the courts. French would remain the country's diplomatic language. "But it must no longer occupy the natural place of African national languages."

What is the RND's line? What is its position on the events in Gambia, insofar as it has refused to sign the joint declaration of the opposition condemning that intervention? What does that party think of the action of President Abdou Diouf since he has come to power? These are all questions which Diop answered.

Concerning the line of the RND, Diop stated that no African political grouping has a homogeneous sociological composition. The RND will apply the mass line defined at its congresses. The party would like to derive all its strength from the masses, he said. Its action will essentially be internal.

"As an opposition party, we condemn the use of force in any form. We also believe that the future of Gambia resides in a federation with Senegal, on the basis of free determination. The government has the means to achieve the reconciliation of all Gambian factions, particularly those now called rebels."

According to Diop, this is his party's position on the events in Gambia.

Judging the accomplishments of the president of the republic since his accession to the highest office in the land, the secretary general of the RND indicated, after noting the expansion of the foundations of democracy and the elimination of the exit visa: "I cannot say that his action is not positive; that would not be so." Diop also noted the RND's determination "not to engage in opposition for opposition's sake." It is motivated only by the national interest.

RND HELD UP AS EXEMPLARY OPPOSITION PARTY

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 12 Aug 81 pp 1, 12

[Editorial by Bara Diouf: "From One Opposition to the Other"]

[Text] Without a doubt, Senegal is on its way to winning its wager for democracy.

And why does that wager seem to us, the Socialist Party, to be a fundamental one? It is, first of all, because the single party, totalitarian by nature, does not, whatever its claims, appear to us to be capable of achieving a harmonious, tolerant coexistence of all ways of seeing and thinking, in a word, of all the currents that necessarily emerge in any human community. Whether a dictatorship of the proletariat or a plain dictatorship, the single party is the very negation of freedom, we mean of man, who by his very essence is a free, thinking being.

The government in power has set about lifting this restriction of the Senegalese people's power to act and define themselves as soon as it came into office. By sanctioning a democratic opening without reservations -- except those pertaining to religion, race and ethnic groups, the modification of Article 3 of the constitution is proof of this.

One must without a doubt deplore that explosion of tendencies, that proliferation of trends of thought which have led to the perversion of democracy and to anarchy. But one must hope for a restructuring of parties, desire a trend already emerging toward alliances or mergers which, although astonishingly against nature, will have the merit of simplifying and clarifying the Senegalese political picture. That the PDS [Senegalese Democratic Party] of Abdoulaye Wade, once a good liberal and capitalist, might join with the PIT [Independence and Labor Party] of Dansokho, which is intransigently Marxist, surpasses our understanding! But such an alliance would at least bring the formal democratic interplay within reasonable limits.

Despite these laborious but desirable regroupings, we shall still have to settle the basic problem, that of democratic ethics and morals.

Actually, the Gambian affair ceaselessly forces us to examine the relations that should exist between a so-called opposition party and the government, when the nation's fundamental problem is posed: its security and its survival. Does there exist an opposition morality? In other words, must the fact of not viewing the nation's future in the same way as another necessarily lead to systematic opposition and attitudes that would in the extreme bring about the nation's suicide? Can envying Abdou Diouf's place -- legitimate in itself — justify a choice and behavior that might lead to the death of Senegal? The problem of the democratic opening in Senegal would be found there if, quite fortunately, Cheikh Anta Diop had not, at his Monday press conference, offered us another idea of what a national opposition party worthy of the name could be.

Is there any need to recall that democracy, insofar as it appeals to what there is great and noble in man, cannot be a matter of mediocrity? A system essentially based on unselfishness, devotion to government, respect for one's adversary, tolerance and honesty, democracy appeals to eminently moral values in which national feeling and patriotism occupy a prominent place. As another might say, democracy is a virtue. If the Gambian affair has caused us to suffer the incoherence, the blindness of a certain opposition group which, by dint of distinguishing itself by a systematic, made-to-order anti-Abdou Diouf attitude, finally discredited itself in the eyes of public opinion, it also revealed an RND [Democratic National Rally] which I personally did not expect: firm in its principles, but honest toward its government whose accomplishments it recognizes and whose necessary intervention in Gambia it implicitly approves. We did not expect so much in order to believe in the future of democracy in Senegal.

AND-JEF-MRDN STATEMENT OPPOSING GAMBIAN INTERVENTION

Dakar JAAY DOLLE BI in French No 23, 31 Jul-30 Aug 81 p 4

[Statement from Permanent Bureau of AND JEF-MRDN [Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy]]

[Text] The Senegalese Government has once again attracted the attention of international opinion by intervening militarily in the Republic of Gambia, following the events that occurred in that country. The act, breaking with the good-neighbor traditions of the Senegalese and Gambian peoples, is in a straight line with the interventions of Senghor in Shaba in 1978, Banjul in October 1980 and the incessant threats to Mauritania.

It is thus clearly apparent that the defense agreements signed by the Senegalese Government within the framework of CEAO and with Gambia are less destined to safeguard territorial integrity than to protect the governments of the signatory countries. This type of agreement actually stems from a redefinition of the interventionist policy of Western imperialism, whose objective is the strengthening of neocolonialism.

Despite its opposition in principle to certain forms of a power takeover that would not mobilize the peoples, the AND JEF-MRDN vigorously denounces the intervention of the Senegalese Armed Forces into Gambian territory and the resulting repression. Serious threats face the lives of Senegalese citizens residing in Gambia.

Loyal to the line of sovereignty and independence, the AND JEF-MRDN opposes and will always oppose any interventionism, whatever the source and whatever the pretext.

The AND JEF-MRDN demands the immediate withdrawal of Senegalese troops stationed in the Republic of Gambia.

Long live the solidarity of peoples against imperialism and reactionaries!!!!

GAMBIAN INTERVENTION BELIEVED GIVEN GREEN LIGHT BY FRANCE

Dakar JAAY DOLLE BI in French No 23, 31 Jul-30 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Amadou Top: "The Banjul Coup"]

[Text] The military aggression against Gambia has given rise to general censure and a merciless condemnation on the part of the Senegalese people.

Neither the hysterical propaganda campaigns, in which lies vie with an infantile mentality, nor the vulgar threats to the patriotic opposition have been able to create the climate of chauvinistic fervor and popular support that the regime was counting on in order to camouflage its defeat.

Within the leadership team itself and despite the outward facade of unanimity, the malaise is obvious.

Senegal, which was the champion of noninterference in the internal affairs of other nations and which poured out a stream of demagogic speeches made up of fastidious intransigence in the face of foreign aggression, now embarks upon a paradoxical military intervention whose official motivations are of the same stripe as those in other countries: Chad, the Middle East, Afghanistan.

And yet, the paradox is only apparent. In his attempts -- scarcely convincing, moreover -- to justify "his" war, Abdou Diouf accuses the patriotic opposition of irresponsibility.

But does the supreme irresponsibility not consist of embarking upon a military adventure whose scope the regime does not appear to perceive?

Actually, even if, because of the relative weakness of the rebels compared with the great military means deployed in Gambia, the immediate outcome cannot be doubted, it is only later that the real complications will emerge. This lesson is one that all aggressor countries have learned at their expense, whether it be the United States in Asia, the USSR in Afghanistan or, closer to home, the Moroccan regime bogged down in its war in the sand.

It is that logic characteristic of the reactionary regimes that makes everyone want to be the "superpower" of someone, it is this law of the jungle that has been coldly applied in Gambia.

The circumstances in which the Senegalese regime has unthinkingly strayed gives Daouda Diawara only the status of a provincial chief, a veritable hostage buffeted by the humors of the Senegalese Government, which protects him from prosecution by the Gambian people.

We shall say this forthrightly: We are against the annexation of Gambia by force, even if everyone agrees to admit that despite the vicissitudes of colonization, the many bonds between Senegal and Gambia makes their free union profitable for both peoples.

But this free union in no way means and will never mean the coalition of oppressive, antipopular regimes such as those now in power in those countries.

We are tempted to state that what truly explains this intervention is the Senegalese regime's determination to divert the attention of the working masses tormented by the crisis and increasingly hostile to its disastrous economic policy.

But one would then have to admit that our leaders are shortsighted.

At any rate, the enormous logistical means required by a war of aggression and the maintenance of an army of occupation will quickly wipe out the meager crisis budget so laboriously put together, with as the immediate result of additional difficulties for our people.

Moreover, it is unimaginable that the regime could have itself decided on the intervention in Gambia without at least having a green light from its French "masters."

Despite the equivocal statements of the French Socialist government, everyone knows that the Senegalese Army is equipped and trained by France, whose soldiers, stationed at French military bases in Senegal, cannot not intervene in the case of an escalation or, and this is highly likely, of getting bogged down.

The demand for the immediate withdrawal of the Senegalese troops from Gambia, formulated by the democratic forces, definitely constitutes a major dimension of the anti-imperialist struggle of the Senegalese people and effectively translates the common fate of the Senegalese and Gambian brother peoples.

SIX POLITICAL PARTIES DISCUSS NATION'S ECONOMIC SITUATION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 11 Aug 81 p 5

[Article by Moustapha Mbodj]

[Text] The PDS [Senegalese Democratic Party] certainly invited us to a most instructive gathering on the anniversary of its creation 8 August 1974. The conference held for that reason last Friday at the chamber of commerce, to commemorate the event with a discussion on the subject of "prerequisites for Seneg Senegal's economic recovery" brought together at the same table representatives of six opposition groups and the ruling PS [Socialist Party].

As each political group had the liberty to expound on the causes of the economic crisis which is ravaging the country, and also the privilege of proposing solutions, the evening should have shed considerable light on the rival political platforms. This could have served to clarify the various positions of the groups that have been legally recognized since Article 3 of the constitution was revised to broaden the multi-party system.

However, the number of speakers and the speaking time each was given made it impossible for the respective platforms to be explained in detail, even though the broad outlines were given. Participating in the session were Landing Savane of the And-Jef Movement for a New Democracy, Fara Ndiaye of the PDS, Boubacar Camara of the Democratic League-Movement for the Labor Party, Semou Pathe Gueye for the Independence and Labor Party, Mamour Ousmane Ba for the PS, and Latif Gueye for the Democratic National Rally. "The very fact that this meeting could take place, with the ruling PS on one side and various opposition groups on the other, is certainly satisfying to see in Africa. Your programs diverge: try to work so that they are parallel and can someday converge." Those were the words of Emile Derlin Zinsou, former president of Dahomey, who stressed the uniqueness of such a meeting shortly before [electoral] hostilities.

For Landing Savane and the Marxist-leaning And-Jef group, no recovery is possible without a change in the economic structures created by the "existing neocolonial system dominated by the local bourgeoisie in the service of big foreign monopolies." In his version of recovery what is needed is not reform but rather liquidation of such a system which impedes the liberation of the people and the equitable exploitation of the national wealth. The most important prerequisite for such a recovery remains the mobilization of the masses (workers and peasants within the framework of a people's type of democracy, according to Savane. This idea resurfaced toward the end in the remarks of the Democratic League, the Independence and Labor Party, and the RND [Democratic National Rally]. These groups also singled out the misadministration of the ruling PS as the number one cause of the crisis, of more consequence than the natural phenomena such as the drought, which in their eyes merely highlight or intensify the crisis. The principal cause, according to them, is the extraverted nature of our economy.

Diversified Agriculture

Recovery should therefore be based, from this point of view, on a solid and diversified agricultural sector basically oriented toward the satisfaction of basic needs, on industry oriented toward the processing of those products, which would considerably curb imports, as well as on local processing, rather than exporting, of mineral resources, and on revision of the marketing system both within and outside the country. The PIT [Independence and Labor Party] in particular added some conditions such as the nationalization of vital sectors with the object of recovering national sovereignty, control over the national wealth and economic orientation, with the idea of destroying the class basis of political power. But it also calls for the protection of private capital and a resurgence of popular consumption. This would mean full employment, maintaining the purchasing power of the workers, strangling inflation, and availability of basic necessities.

Pulling out of the crisis would require many sacrifices of which only a people's party would be capable, by bringing the Senegalese together on the essentials. This idea was endorsed by all the opposition parties present, and thus Fara Ndiaye, after denouncing the PS development strategy, spoke of the necessity of forming a coalition of parties on an agreed minimum program in order to carry out these changes called for by each and all. This coalition, front, or rally, could even include the PS. This statement was hurriedly amended by Mr Abdoulaye Wade in a brief presentation stressing that "no coalition calling for change could include the PS.

Is it a case of making advances toward the leadership of the opposition? Does the PDS want to pose as the coalition leader of the opposition forces for the 1983 elections? This question was much discussed in the corridors, especially given the conspicuous absence of Mamadou Dia's Movement for Peoples' Democracy. From that point of view, the maneuvering for alliances is exciting an upsurge of interest in political activity. Serious difficulties lie in the way of the merger of various opposition groups, even if the necessity to create such a front was reiterated many times during the course of the debates by the various orators.

For while And-Jef, the Democratic League, and the PIT--all of Marxist persuasion--have convergent views on certain points concerning the nation's future, particularly the mobilization of the masses in the framework of a people's type democracy, the reference to foreign models led to points of discord which at times seemed irreducible. And-Jef maintained that it was necessary to be vigilant to avoid repeating certain socialist experiments which failed, notably in the countries of Eastern Europe where a state bureaucracy replaced capitalism. And if one is familiar with PIT's position on the European socialist bloc countries, one can get a fair idea of the scope of the differences on this particular point...

External Constraints

As for the ruling PS, accused of all the evils from which Senegalese society is suffering, it was defended by Mamour Ousmane Ba, for whom "one cannot make an economic policy without reference to the world situation and external constraints. A thorough examination of the economic situation Senegal is facing bares the existence of both internal and external factors that are difficult to control in a situation of generalized world crisis. The persistent drought and the sky-rocketing price of hydrocarbons have brought about a reduction of national production and accentuated the deterioration in the terms of trade," said the president of the PS parliamentary group. In addition, the low level of domestic savings, less than 11 percent of the national income, prevented a resurgence of investment, thus leading to the necessity of resorting to external borrowing. Before the persistence of this situation, the government has, according to Mr Ba, set to work on a plan of economic and financial recovery. This plan, which is being labelled a reform, was the object of violent attacks by the opposition parties. This led Ousmane Seck, the minister of economic affairs and finance, "to make several things clear and answer several questions which Senegalese citizens have a legitimate right to ask."

The economic and financial recovery plan was not imposed by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, said the minister for economic affairs and finance. It flowed from the conclusions reached by Senegalese technicians, and is intended to re-balance the budget bill. According to Ousmane Seck, the budget as it was announced at the time contained a potential deficit. The object of the economic and financial recovery plan was to reduce operating expenses, which amounted to 105 billion [Fr CFA?], down to 98 billion. A savings of 7 billion was in this way made on the operating budget. The plan was also intended to reduce the rate of growth of appropriations. Ousmane Seck added, however, that it was reinforced first by the International Monetary Fund, then by the World Bank, and thirdly by an austerity plan elaborated by the prime minister of the time, Abdou Diouf, Senegal, he said, has been colonized by neither the IMF [International Monetary Fund] nor by the World Bank. On the subject of indebtedness, the minister of economic affairs and finance also said that all commitments together total about 158 billion Fr CFA and contracted debt amounted to less than 100 billion, not 300 billion. "We are paying back about 35 billion per year," said Mr Seck. Also discussed were the linkage of the Fr CFA with the French franc, the law against illegal income, and other aspects of our economy, without a consensus being reached. It nevertheless emerges from these debates that the idea of a united opposition has been embraced by the opposition parties represented, even though the basis of that union has not yet been clearly identified.

STATUTES OF AJ-MRDN SET FORTH

Dakar JAAY DOOLE BI in French No 23, 31 Jul-30 Aug 81 p 6

[Statutes of the AJ-MRDN (And-Jef-Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy)]

[Text] Preamble

There is hereby created in Senegal a political party known as the And-Jef-Revolutionary Movement for the New Democracy, whose acronym is AJ-MRDN. Its headquarters are temporarily located at No ....

The AJ-MRDN is a mass political organization. It bases its action primarily on the working class and is open to the peasantry (mainly poor), revolutionary intellectuals, patriots and consistent democrats.

Its purpose is to work to make the proletariat the avant-garde and guide of the political movement for the new democracy and for the triumph of the national democratic people's revolution (RNDP).

In this way, the AJ-MRDN contributes to the establishment of the worker-peasant alliance and the liaison of the proletarian avant-garde with the broad masses. It wages a resolute struggle against all harmful political influences contrary to the revolutionary cause of the proletariat and the people.

The AJ-MRDN is a new-type political group. It organizes the revolutionary struggle around a political program that concentrates the basic interests and the profound patriotic and democratic aspirations of our people.

The AJ-MRDN will constantly fight to see that its leadership is in the hands of authentic revolutionary cadres who are dedicated and capable of achieving the victory within the party of the proletarian style, which mainly consists of linking theory to practice, relating to the masses and practicing internal and external criticism and self-criticism.

The AJ-MRDN will strengthen its unity on the basis of democratic centralism and discipline freely followed.

It will work for the unshakable unity of our people in their fight for progress, social justice, true independence and the territorial integrity of our country.

The AJ-MRDN will also work to strengthen the international solidarity of the proletariat and of peoples and nations against capitalism, imperialism and all reactionaries.

It will conform to the constitution and laws now in effect and remain faithful to the principles of national sovereignty and democracy, while working for the materialization of its program for the establishment of a new democratic government in Senegal.

Chapter I. Members

Article 1. Any worker, peasant, patriot or democrat is eligible for membership in the AJ-MRDN, without discrimination based on race, ethnic groups, sex, religion, sect, language or religion, as long as he accepts the program and statutes, contributes to their application, works in one of its structures, applies its resolutions, observes the discipline, possesses the membership card and pays dues.

Article 2. Admission to the AJ-MRDN is individual and occurs after a training period in one of the structures of the movement, which must approve the candidacy.

Article 3. Any member of the AJ-MRDN must:

1) participate in the life of the movement, observe and defend the movement's discipline at all levels, fight for its unity, strengthen its proletarian revolutionary orientation and courageously practice criticism and self-criticism;

2) contribute to the drafting and extension of the political line of the AJ, assimilate it and work for its application; and

3) be unshakingly faithful to the cause of the RNDP.

Article 4. Every member has the right:

1) to elect officials and be elected in all bodies of the movement. Nevertheless, except in exceptional cases approved by the General Council, no one may be elected to any body until he has worked at least 6 months in the next lower body;

2) be regularly informed of the activities of the movement; and

3) criticize, within the framework of the movement's structures, all activities and all members, whatever their level.

Chapter II. Principles of Organization

Article 6. Democratic centralism governs the life of the AJ-MRDN. This means that:

1) All leadership organs must periodically report on their activities to the members who elected them. They must pay close attention to the rank-and-file opinions and always stimulate initiatives. They must practice collective leadership, combined with individual responsibility.

2) Committees and members at all levels must periodically account for their activities to higher committees.

3) Members must submit to the movement, the minority to the majority, lower committees to higher committees and the entire movement to the General Council.

Chapter III. Structures

Article 7. The rank-and-file committee (CB) is the basic structure of the AJ-MRDN. The rank-and-file committees are formed in the different sectors of activity, in the factories, enterprises, villages, districts, services, schools, and so on.

Every rank-and-file committee must promote revolutionary activity among the masses in its sector of action.

Article 8. The rank-and-file committee assembly elects a secretary and deputies who make up the permanent secretariat of the rank-and-file committee.

This secretariat is in charge of coordinating, organizing and promoting the activities of the rank-and-file committee.

No consideration based on wealth or level of education or any other consideration alien to the revolutionary struggle must intervene in the choice of officials of the rank-and-file committee.

Those elected to the permanent secretariat of the rank-and-file committee and to the other organs of the movement must be active members who have distinguished themselves by their dedication, self-sacrifice and loyalty to the revolutionary cause.

Article 9. The rank-and-file committees are normally made up of at least five persons but not more than fifty.

Article 10. The rank-and-file committee's basic tasks are:

1) to disseminate and carry out the line of the movement, its slogans and political measures thanks to its connection with the masses and through research, adopting the principle of seeking the truth;

2) to engage in activities in its sector of action and to win the masses over to the movement, to direct the activity of members, stimulate their spirit of initiative and strengthen the discipline and unity of thought and action of members;

3) to stimulate the study of revolutionary science in relation to the specific situation, in order to strengthen the political training and temper of members; and

4) to recruit new members and collect dues.

Article 11. The section takes in several rank-and-file committees.

The section committee (CS) is the coordinating body at the section level.

Every rank-and-file committee sends its two highest officials (the secretary and his first deputy) to the section committee. At the section level, the assembly of these delegates make up the section committee.

Article 12. The federation includes several sections. It is headed by a federal committee (CF), which is comprised of the top two leaders (the secretary and his first deputy) of the section committees.

The federal committee elects a secretary and deputies, who constitute the permanent secretariat of the federal committee.

Article 13. The regional council (CR) is the leadership organ at the regional level (administrative region). It can be made up of one or several federations depending on the size of the region and the degree to which the movement has become established there. The CR is elected by the general assembly of the federal committees. The regional council elects a regional executive committee (CER), in charge of heading up activities of the movement in the region between two sessions of the regional council.

Article 14. The congress is the highest body of the AJ-MRDN.

It is convoked every 2 years by the General Council. It can be moved up or postponed 1 year maximum. Nevertheless, special congresses can be called upon the decision of the General Council or at the request of two-thirds of the federations of the movement.

It is the congress' duty:

1) to examine the agenda and the reports drafted by the National Executive Committee (CEN);

2) to draft, refine and adopt the program, statutes, political line and all the resolutions of the movement; and

3) to elect the members of the General Council (CG) of the movement.

The CEN's reports to the regular congress must reach the rank-and-file committees at least 2 months before the convocation of the congress.

Article 15. The congress is made up of the delegates elected by the different federations and the other organs of the movement. The method of election is determined by the General Council. It must take into account the size of the federations and favor the presence of progressive worker and peasant members. It must permit effective and equitable representation of all sections and organizations in the movement.

Article 16. Between two congresses, the General Council (CG) is the highest organ of leadership of the AJ-MRDN. The CG elects from among its members the secretary general of the movement and his two deputies, as well as the heads of the different departments of the movement who make up the National Executive Committee. Alternates are elected for the heads of the different departments. They are not members of the CEN.

The CG oversees the activities of the CEN, ensures that the statutes are enforced, the line followed, and the decisions, directives and resolutions emerging from the congress are carried out.

The guarantor of the line of the congress, the CG defines modes of application.

Article 17. The CG meets at least twice a year. It can be called into a special session by the CEN or at the request of a simple majority of its members.

The CG sets up all specialized organs of the movement that operate under its supervision.

Article 18. The National Executive Committee is in charge of carrying out the directives and resolutions of the CG. It reports to it on its activities and on those of the movement. It calls the meetings of the CG and coordinates the activities of its members.

If a member of the CEN should be unable to carry out his duties, he is automatically replaced by his elected alternate.

Article 19. The CEN elects from among its members a permanent bureau in charge of the enforcement and execution of the general policy and the activities of the federations, regional councils and specialized organizations. It coordinates the activities of the National Executive Committee.

The permanent bureau is responsible to the National Executive Committee.

Article 20. Between two congresses, national conferences can be called by the CEN whenever necessary in order to discuss the movement's policy.

Chapter IV. Operation

Article 21. The meetings of the rank-and-file committees must be held at least once a month. Meetings of the section committees, federations and the regional councils are to be held at least once every quarter. The National Executive Committee meets at least every two months and its permanent bureau meets once a week.

Chapter V. Disciplinary Measures

Article 22. Disciplinary measures that can be applied include warnings, censure, removal from office, surveillance and exclusion.

They can be taken at any time at the prompting of the organs involved. In this case, they must be approved by the higher bodies following consultation with the organs involved.

No sanction may be taken if the violation attributed to the individual has not been duly established.

The organs of the movement must always aid comrades who have made mistakes to correct them.

Chapter VI. Miscellaneous

Article 23. These statutes can only be modified by a congress. A bylaw adopted by the General Council will spell out the terms of application of the various provisions contained in these statutes.

Article 24. Relying first and foremost on its own forces, the AD-MRDN will derive its resources from the sale of cards to members, dues, gifts and legacies from its members and national sympathizers and from the profits made through various demonstrations and activities.

Article 25. Dissolution is decided by the congress with a three-fourths majority. In this case, the property of the organization must be transferred to one or more organizations following the same goals.

Article 26. Until the holding of the constituent congress of the AJ-MRDN, a provisional National Executive Committee will ensure the leadership of the movement. In this capacity, it is empowered to take all conservatory measures in keeping with the orientation of the movement.

Article 27. Any decision contrary to these statutes is null and void.

BRIEFS

U.S.-SOUTH AFRICAN TIES VIEWED--The weekly government newspaper, the SUNDAY NEWS, today comments on the alliance between the South African racist regime and the American administration. The government newspaper starts its editorial by saying: since President Reagan took power early this year, there was a growing alliance, convergence of views and objectives between Washington and Pretoria. The paper says: Mr Reagan was always trying to observe [as heard] his relations with the South African regime as a natural ally of immense strategic importance. This alliance has made the reacist regime escalate its attempts to destabilize the front-line states neighboring it. Furthermore, the paper says: equipped with the moral and diplomatic backing given by the USA, South Africa, which is still occupying Southern Angola, made a raid into Zambia 3 days ago. The SUNDAY NEWS says: indeed, other frontlines states, particularly Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Botswana, must brace themselves against increasing aggression from the South African regime, which knows it has Washington's full approval. The SUNDAY NEWS reminds both the USA and South Africa, that free Africa will fight back with every weapon and assistance at its disposal. The paper says: the responsibility for intensified armed struggle in Namibia, its regionalization, and even possibly its internationalization will rest on Pretoria and Washington. The SUNDAY TIMES ends its editorial by saying: history is on the side of free Africa. [Text] [EA131512 Dar es Salaam in English to Central and Southern Africa 0400 GMT 13 Sep 81]

GOVERNMENT ASKS CPC TO RECTIFY KARIBA POWER DISTRIBUTION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

By Times Reporter

THE Government has asked the Central African Power Corporation (CPC) to rectify an anomaly in which Zimbabwe gets more than her share of electricity from the Kariba complex.

Minister of State for Power in the Ministry of Power, Transport and Communications Mr Francis Chembe said this in an interview at the weekend.

He said this when asked on what steps the Government was taking on reports that as a result of an agreement signed during the colonial era Zambia was being swindled out of her share from the joint hydro-electric Kariba project.

Mr Chembe said the Government was aware of the anomaly and that since Zimbabwe was now independent, the CPC was asked to rectify the position on behalf of the Zambian Government.

The anomaly was first brought to light in July by Zambia Electricity Supply Corporation (ZESCO) general manager Mr Roy Miti who said Zambia was losing 117 megawatts to Zimbabwe because of a biased accord system.

Zambia had been losing electricity to Zimbabwe since colonial days because the agreements over the use of electricity between the two countries were all in favour of Zimbabwe.

"It's true there has been a problem on this matter since the days of UDI in Rhodesia. But we are determined to rectify this through the CPC," Mr Chembe said.

In its 1980 annual report released yesterday, CPC said energy in excess of Zimbabwe's share from the Kariba complex exported from Zambia was paid for at an agreed three-part tariff.

But the report adds that CPC has received a directive recently to give effect to the relevant terms and conditions of a new interim intergovernmental agreement entered into between Zimbabwe and Zambia in July 1980.

The agreement covered a period up to last June 30, after which the two governments were expected to enter into another agreement, according to the report.

RWUZ APPEALS TO GOVERNMENT TO TAKE ACTION AGAINST SCANDAL CULPRITS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

By Times Reporter

THE Railway Workers Union of Zambia has appealed to the Party and its Government to take action against culprits in the dubious purchase of luxury vehicles for senior staff of the Zambia Railways management and the mysterious sale of 12 wagons to the Broken Hill division of Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines.

Union chairman Mr Dominic Katwishi deplored the silence of the authorities on the two scandals. This gave the impression that authorities were involved, he said.

Mr Katwishi said this at the railway workshop in Kabwe yesterday when he showed newsmen and Bwacha Member of Parliament and deputy Chief Whip of the National Assembly Mr Richard Banda part of the sold wagons which had been taken there for repairs.

Mr Katwishi said he was shocked to learn that the wagons were sold at scrap value in 1975 when some of them were manufactured in 1972 with a life span of 40 years.

The union was not against the railway management by exposing scandals in the system. "There is no need for us to use the torch to show the authorities the wrongs," he said.

The union supported Mr Banda on his revelations on the two deals which are said to be still under police investigations.

"The authorities should take action and prove to the nation that they are serious in maintaining the discipline they talk about."

The MP said authorities must take action because if this was not done those who exposed the scandals would be demoralised.

He wondered how new property such as railway wagons, some of which had only served the company for one year, could be sold "like vegetables."

"This is shocking, to say the least. How can the Zambia Railways management and the board of directors afford to lose some of the company's vital rolling stock at a time when the nation is grappling with shortages of transport facilities."

The wagons were shunted to the workshops three weeks ago for repairs under an arrangement between NCCM and Zambia Railways management.

See picture on Page 7

● NCCM made a profit of K13.6 million before tax in the financial year ended March, 1981.

The profit was less by K117.6 million compared with K131.2 million profit the company made during the same period last year.

NCCM chairman Mr James Mapoma attributed the poor performance of the company to adverse factors ranging from the world economic recession, inflation to the strike which rocked the mining industry last January.

MINISTER SEEKS INCREASED LOCAL TRAINING FOR AGRICULTURAL STAFF

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Minister of Agriculture and Water Development, Mr Unia Mwila has called for increased local training for agricultural personnel because overseas training had become highly expensive.

Speaking at the opening of a training seminar for staff of training institutions at the Natural Resources Development College in Lusaka yesterday, Mr Mwila said besides being cheap, local training had added advantages for participants who would be able to understand the aspirations, sociological approach and thinking of the people they were expected to teach.

"The 30 officers attending the current seminar serve as a clear indication that localised training can cater for many more officers at minimal cost," the minister emphasised.

The minister was therefore grateful to the Wolverhampton Polytechnic of Britain and the British Council for planning a similar course for next year.

"Thereafter, it is planned that Zambia will run such courses annually on its own having drawn the required know-how from the Overseas Unit of the Wolverhampton Polytechnic."

The purpose of the seminar was to provide an opportunity to participants for the exchange of ideas on the modern and effective methods of teaching techniques at Zambia's training institutions.

Mr Mwila said if the teaching at local institutions was faulty, then the country would produce extension officers and farmers who would be inadequate in their professions.

"We shall end up with varied standards of application, to the detriment of our farming industry.

"On the other hand, if good knowledge is instilled to the trainees by the application of well co-ordinated and standardised modern teaching techniques, then we shall have achieved the first step towards realising our goal of agricultural development, the minister told the course participants.

MINISTER PREDICTS DOUBLING OF MAIZE PRODUCTION NEXT SEASON

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Aug 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

ZAMBIA's maize production will more than double next season from this year's expected bumper harvest of about 11 million bags if the weather will be favourable, Agriculture and Water Development Minister Mr Unia Mwila predicted in Lusaka yesterday.

Mr Mwila and his two ministers of State Mr Justin Mukando and Mr Noah Dilamonu, have just completed their first round tour of the country to see how farmers and peasants had geared themselves for more food output.

Mr Mwila said during the tour, his team discovered that farmers and peasants had responded favourably to the Party and Government's incentives which were aimed at encouraging them.

He said his team was not satisfied with the speed at which farmers were being paid by cooperative unions.

He directed all cooperatives to pay farmers promptly so they could buy inputs and fertiliser in readiness for the next season.

The minister warned there would be no excuses if cooperatives failed to pay farmers on time because the money had been released to them.

He would not say how much money the Government had allocated to cooperatives for buying maize.

The Southern Province Cooperative and Marketing Union is the only institution which was paying farmers in accordance with the Government's directive.

"Generally, payments to farmers in many parts of the country were not effected during our tour. I left directives that farmers should be paid. I hope they have done so because there will be no excuses," he said.

HEALTH MINISTRY SPOKESMAN GIVES NURSES TRAINING STATISTICS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Sep 81 p 7

[Text]

ZAMBIA is to be self-sufficient in nurses in 1990, a Ministry of Health spokesman announced in Lusaka yesterday.

The spokesman said since 1970 the country had trained 5,930 Zambia enrolled nurses and 2,095 Zambia registered nurses.

These consisted of 4,060 enrolled nurses, 167 psychiatric enrolled nurses and 1,703 enrolled midwife nurses. During the same period 1,499 registered nurses and 596 registered midwife nurses were trained.

The spokesman was denying reports that Zambia Enrolled nurses training schools had been instructed by the ministry to cancel the September in-take of students because they had over-trained the nurses.

"According to the recent manpower survey the country will be self-sufficient (in nurses) by 1990." The spokesman could not say, however, how many nurses the country would have by 1990.

Last July Mrs Cecilia Mundia, wife of Prime Minister Mundia announced that the University of Zambia would this year start offering degree courses in nursing to reduce the country's dependence on expatriates.

Speaking at a combined graduation ceremony of midwifery, registered and theatre nurses held at the University of Zambia, Mrs Mundia said the UTH handled about 1,000 patients a day and the nurses' first priority should be given to the sick and their relatives.

Speaking at the same ceremony Minister of Health Mr Ben Kakoma warned nurses against the danger of abusing their profession as this would tarnish their reputation.

But last month it was reported that the Government planned to recruit 1,600 nurses and midwives outside the country by 1983 if the target figure of 9,895 was not realised as projected in the Third National Development Plan.

According to Central Province permanent secretary Mr Yuyi Libakeni it had been realised that while enormous health projects had been completed and the number of health facilities had increased considerably there was a critical shortage of health personnel.

MULALA ACCUSES KWIBISA OF FLOUTING AUTHORITY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Aug 81 p 7

[Text]

INDUSTRIAL Participatory democracy director Mr Alexander Kwibisa has been described as "latecomer to UNIP who should not upset the applecart".

Provincial political secretary in the department Mr Sikota Mulala said at the weekend that Mr Kwibisa should not insult other leaders whom President Kaunda had chosen to help him in administering policy.

"I am worried that if we allow a situation where a newcomer from nowhere can flout authority this could change the format of the way things are done in UNIP. This could lead to chaos in the country."

He appealed to top civil servants not to tamper with the political leadership but to involve themselves in executing policy directives.

Strained

Mr Mulala said civil servants should remain in the background and not compete with politicians for authority. Relations between politicians and civil servants in the department were strained. He blamed the situation on Mr Kwibisa whom he accused of having assumed "special responsibility for the department."

He alleged that Mr Kwibisa had told the provincial political secretaries in the department he was only prepared to take orders from President Kaunda and Prime Minister Mundia.

He said following his recent visit to Yugoslavia where he had gone on an educational tour, Mr Kwibisa had allegedly refused to submit a report to the Member of the Central Committee for IPD, Mr Shadreck Soko and said he would do so to President Kaunda and the Prime Minister.

"He is too powerful and yet the man is only an assistant secretary," said Mr Mulala.

He said politicians in the department had been denied access to Government circulars, Gazettes and were denied facilities such as telephones and secretaries.

A district governor who had been re-assigned to the department from the Ministry of National Guidance had been denied office space "because he did not have a letter from President Kaunda" although he brought with him papers from Cabinet office, according to Mr Mulala.

Transferred

Citing his own experiences Mr Mulala said he had not been given fuel for his official car for more than five months since he was transferred to the department on December, 13, 1980.

He noted that Mr Kwibisa had not been in the vanguard of the independence struggle when he was working reportedly in Zimbabwe at Wankie although now he "is more UNIP than everybody else."

On Friday Mr Mulala issued a statement in which he called for the Party to discipline Mr Kwibisa.

Following an earlier statement by Mr Mulala the IPD had been "highjacked" by top civil servants, Mr Kwibisa had refused the allegations. He said he was a disciplined Party worker who operated under the guidelines and terms of reference.

BOTH SIDES TRADE ACCUSTATIONS AT ZAMBIA-ZAIRE MEETING

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 2 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] Most of the guns that are being used by bandits to kill and rob people on the Copperbelt, originate from the Zairean Armed Forces, a Member of the Central Committee has revealed.

Mr Alex Shapi, who is responsible for the Copperbelt Province revealed this at the start of a two-day meeting of the Zambia-Zaire Joint Permanent Commission at the council chamber in Kitwe.

Mr Shapi said that the Party and its Government had ample evidence of this and that the weapons would be displayed before delegates to the meeting, which is also being attended by political commissioner of the Shaba Province, Mandungu Bula Nyati.

The Central Committee Member said that Zambia had lost a lot of lives and property because of the activities of armed gangs who in most cases ran into Zaire when pursued by security forces.

He appealed to Mr Nyati and his delegation to see to it that the situation was arrested by making it difficult for unauthorised people to gain access to weapons meant for defence forces.

He added: "It is a sad state that most of the guns recovered from criminals on the Copperbelt are similar to those used by the Zairean Armed Forces.

The Central Committee Member said the people of the two countries should not allow a handful of bandits to go around brandishing guns thereby causing fear, amongst peace-loving citizens.

Mr Shapi, whose speech was to the point, and showed economic use of traditional diplomatic jargon suggested that Zambian and Zairean security forces exchange information which could lead to the rounding up of the robbers.

On smuggling, which Mr Shapi said was now so rife that shortages of essential commodities had been created in areas along the border with Zaire, he called on that country to establish legal marketing with Zambia and that all payments should be in foreign exchange.

The Zairean delegation is due to visit several industries manufacturing essential commodities on the Copperbelt.

And Mr Shapi yesterday expressed the hope that Zaire would make appropriate arrangements with these companies.

The Party and its Government, Mr Shapi said, was also concerned about the harassment of Zambians passing through the Pedicle Road.

The government had information to the effect that some government and privately owned motor vehicles, illegally obtained from Zambia, sometimes at gunpoint, have been seen in Zaire.

Zambia has also called upon the Zairean government to review its transit policy in order to put a stop to the influx of West African nationals into the country for the purpose of mining and trafficking in emeralds and other precious stones.

In reply, Mr Nyati said that he welcomed the suggestion that security forces of the two countries should exchange information which could lead to the arrest of bandits.

It was true, he said, that there were highly organised bandits in both Zambia and Zaire and that these used sophisticated methods.

On smuggling, the commissioner said that "the sugar has no legs" with which to walk across the border into Zaire and that it was some Zambians, who were taking the commodity into his country and selling it there.

There were bandits who were wanted in Zaire but who were in Zambia and vice-versa and that in some cases when a group of bandits were arrested some were discovered to be Zambians.

Mr Nyati said that when Senegalese and Malian immigrants are expelled from Zambia, the Zairean authorities are never informed [illegible] a result they come back to smuggle emeralds and cobalt.

The talks are expected to continue today and will go on until 17.00 hours.

POSSIBLE PRC PROJECT ABANDONMENT

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Chinese workers and technicians working on the construction of the Serenje/Samfya/Mansa Road have threatened to abandon the whole project unless the Government allocates more funds by mid-September to enable them continue with the work.

The K600,000 which the Government has released has been described as not enough.

In an interview at Musaba Chinese Road reconstruction camp in Samfya on Sunday, Chinese team leader Mr Qu Wenliang said that if the Chinese got more money, they would be able to build the 17 km surface sub-base from Musaba up to Samfya turn-off before the start of heavy rains.

Mr Qu added that out of the K600,000 only K400,000 had been received for buying beams and cement for the Mukuku Bridge and for buying fuel. The remaining K200,000 was used for workers wages.

On the 135 Zambian workers who were laid off on August 12, 68 from Musaba and 67 from Kasanka, Mr. Qu said more workers could not be employed because there was no money to pay them and to buy fuel.

"But if we get more money, then we will employ more workers but not with K400,000. We do understand the economic problems of this country, but do hope that the Government will do all it can to raise money," he said.

GDR OFFERS ONE THOUSAND SCHOLARSHIPS IN TECHNICAL FIELDS

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 29 Aug 81 p 3

[Text] The German Democratic Republic (GDR) has offered the Zambian Government 1,000 scholarships in various technical fields for the period 1981 to 1984, Minister of State for Education Mr Allan Chilimboyi, has said.

The offer, Mr Chilimboyi, said takes immediate effect and covers ten non-degree courses which will be studied in East Germany over a period of four years.

He said the offer was made on bilateral basis and that most of the courses will last two and a half years while others such as electrical and meteorological engineering will cover up to 1984.

Courses in this programme include agricultural mechanics, cattle breeding, electrical engineering, meteorological engineering, textile technology, leather and clothing fabrication.

"These courses," he said, "are intended to prepare our young men and women for future challenges in the various industrial sectors of our economy," he said.

He added that candidates for this programme will not all leave at once for the GDR as the ministry of education has arranged that these will leave the country in groups of about 100 to 200 each.

"So far," he said, "we have already selected a group of 150 candidates who are due to leave the country on September 15, this year."

Meanwhile, secretary for the Bursaries Section at the Ministry of Education headquarters, Mr Wellington Chitundu, has appealed to the selected candidates who have not yet shown up at his office to do so immediately "as time is not with us."

He said all the selected candidates had been informed well in good time about their selection by radio, telegram and in writing but others have still not reported to the ministry so that they can fill the necessary papers.

"Despite our appeals for them to contact us by any means possible to them, some of the candidates have not even bothered to write us and tell us what has held them," he said.

Mr Chitundu, who did not specify the number of candidates who have not reported to him said they must do so immediately or they will be replaced.

However, Mr Chitundu has also appealed to all selected candidates who have not filled the necessary papers and those who have not yet obtained their passports to ensure that they do so now.

He said that all those who have filled necessary papers and have handed in their passports should report to his office on September 14.

The offer of 1,000 scholarships by the GDR, is second the Zambian Government has received so far this year.

The first offer, was made by the GDR in April, this year and involved 16 candidates.

PLANNED ECONOMIC SYMPOSIA

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

PRIME Minister Nalumino Mundia will hold three economic symposia in Ndola, Lusaka and Livingstone, starting from September 9, a Zimco spokesman announced in Lusaka yesterday.

The first symposium will be in Ndola at the Lowenthal Theatre and will be closed by the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr Remmy Chisupa on September 11.

The spokesman said the main purpose of the meetings was to give Mr Mundia and participants the opportunity to discuss the current economic situation in the country within the context of the Third National Development Plan.

The participants will discuss current constraints affecting the economy, including the shortages in the supply of essential commodities. Participants have been invited from the private sector, parastatal organisations and statutory boards, the spokesman said.

According to the Prime Minister's letter to participants to be released with the programme for the Ndola symposium, he states: "Participants from this cross-section of the business community will discuss any constraints in the country's economic development, find ways of removing them and map out a strategy for beefing up various sectors of our economy.

Zimco, as the organisers, have sent out letters to organisations like the Farmers' Bureau, Zambia Federation of Employers and the Zambia Industrial and Commercial Organisation. These have been requested to present written papers by September 4.

BANK OF ZAMBIA STARTS TALKS ON CREDIT POLICIES

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

THE BANK of Zambia has started talks on credit policies in the country, with financial institutions, Minister of Commerce and Industry Mr Remmy Chisupa said in Lusaka yesterday.

Mr Chisupa said it was only by creating mutual trust between the Government and the financial institutions that funds could be made available to set up new industries.

He was speaking at the signing of a K31.5 million loan agreement between a consortium of commercial banks, financial institutions and INDECO for the Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia's fertiliser expansion project.

Mr Chisupa said the Party and its Government had been very concerned with the non-availability of sufficient funds to complete the project.

As a result of the delay, the project's cost had risen to K295 million and could have risen further had it had not been for the loan from the consortium.

Mr Chisupa said he was satisfied with the progress of the talks between the Bank of Zambia and the financial institutions on credit policies.

Zambia's industrial strategy was to encourage import substitution and export promotion by establishing industries which make maximum use of domestic raw materials and intermediate goods.

"We have important industries which we should set up given financial resources, because they are very basic to industrial development of the country.

With our emphasis on agriculture, this finance has come in handy at a most crucial time of development", Mr Chisupa said.

Managing director of Barclays Bank of Zambia, Mr Mark Tress who signed on behalf of the consortium said many banking acts prohibited lending more than a certain percentage of capital to any one borrower. This was 33 per cent in Nigeria and 20 per cent in Zambia according to the Development Bank of Zambia Act.

So with the lending of K31 million to NCZ by the commercial banks and other financial institutions in addition to other loans given to the company earlier, this was 100 per cent of paid up capital.

"So the banks and institutions can fairly claim to be supporting to an extraordinary extent, an extraordinarily important national project.

"But with banks approaching fully lent positions in terms of legal and normal prudential rations, it follows that sums of the size involved in this, may simply not be available if the stream of new projects is not controlled with this constraint in mind", he said.

In her speech, Mrs Namukolo Silwangwa who signed for INDECO said for efficient management at company level, economic prices for the products and adequate availability of foreign exchange at the right time once NCZ went into production, was necessary.

She said the project had been delayed by two years already while the costs had shot up to nearly K300 million.

The ceremony was witnessed by Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia and Minister of Finance Mr Kebby Musokotwane.

Members of the consortium include Barclays Bank, Citibank, Grindlays Bank, Standard Bank, Workmen's Compensation Fund Control Board, Zambia National Commercial Bank, Zambia National Provident Fund and Zambia State Insurance Corporation.

REFINERY MANAGER PLEDGES CONTINUED ZAMBIANIZATION

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 2 Sep 81 p 5

[Text] THE Indeni Petroleum Refinery management has pledged to Zambianise as many posts as possible despite the technical nature of the jobs involved at the plant.

The pledge was made in Ndola yesterday by the company's managing director, Mr Antonio Gollin.

Mr Gollin was reacting to complaints by some technical staff at the plant that they were denied access to positions of responsibility currently held by expatriates despite the fact that some of them were capable of manning the positions.

He explained that although nearly all positions at the plant were of technical nature, requiring highly skilled manpower, this would not hinder the company's ambitious Zambianisation programme.

"Our policy is to provide training to qualified Zambians and so far 18 Zambians have taken over various responsible positions which were held by the expatriates during the past four years," he said.

Mr Gollin scoffed at workers who were levelling charges at the management, saying the workers should be grateful to the present management for encouraging on-going training programmes both within and outside the country.

"In 1977, we had 39 expatriates working at the plant but now only 21 are left. Surely, if we have managed to promote Zambians to take over from the expatriates during the past four years, where is the basis for blaming us?" Mr Gollin asked.

The managing director said even the Party and Government leaders were happy with the progress made by the company in as far as the training and elevating of Zambians to senior positions was concerned.

He warned workers against expecting automatic promotion to technical positions, saying that promoting people at random would not augur well for the company.

Some technical staff complained to this newspaper that they were being given a raw deal by the management when it came to promotions with the management claiming that it could not promote workers to senior posts because the jobs involved were highly technical.

They claimed the programme of Zambianisation had come to a standstill at the company because whenever an expatriate left, he was replaced by a fellow expatriate, leaving capable Zambians.

ROAN CONSOLIDATED MINES ISSUES 1981 ANNUAL REPORT

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 2 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] ROAN Consolidated Mines Limited [RCM] has expressed "great concern" about widespread price increases on essential spares and equipment from local suppliers.

This is contained in the company's 1981 annual report released in Lusaka on Monday.

According to the report, which covers the financial year ended March 31, 1981, the availability of essential spares and equipment from overseas sources was generally satisfactory.

Furthermore, the reopening of the road route through Zimbabwe enabled the company to increase purchases from the cheaper sources within southern Africa.

Locally, purchases were affected by the inability of most suppliers to maintain adequate stocks due to foreign exchange shortages.

"The local market was also characterised by frequent and widespread price increase which remain a source of great concern to the company," said the report.

On transport, the report said that the situation for both exports and imports remained satisfactory for most of the year with little disruption to traffic.

Capacity on the rail and road routes to the port of Dar es Salaam was restored following the completion of repairs to bridges which were destroyed last year.

Consequently, there was a reduction in the use of the more costly southern route which accounted for only 30 percent of the total copper shipped during the year as against 55 percent for the previous financial period.

The performance of the Dar es Salaam rail route, however, showed signs of deterioration towards the end of the year. This was mainly due to a reduction in locomotives because of shortages of spares and "there is little sign of an early improvement in the situation."

Operations were also affected during the last quarter by a marked reduction in return-loads from the port of Dar es Salaam.

The reduction, which also affected the performance of the road transporters, was a result of the inability by Zambian importers to effect timely payments in foreign exchange for port charges and clearing fees at Dar es Salaam.

The report said during the year under review, consideration was given to the use of the rail route through Zimbabwe to the Mozambican port of Beira.

High railage costs and capacity constraints on the Mozambican sector, however, precluded its use.

There were no new developments on the Lobito rail route to the west coast which also remained closed to Zambia traffic throughout the year.

The report also said an industry-wide strike on the Copperbelt in January involving members of the Mine Workers Union of Zambia (MUZ) led to the loss of about 600,000 man hours of production from RCM divisions.

Apart from this, there were minor stoppages at Mufulira and Luanshya divisions.

On personnel, the report said the company employed 26,040 people of whom 1,044 were expatriates. The average local labour turnover reduced from, 5.03 percent last year to 4.75 percent in the period under review while for expatriates it reduced from 28.58 percent to 19.76 percent respectively.

Shortages of skilled personnel prevailed in some technical areas and the company was unable to recruit sufficient numbers to match vacancies.

However, training and development programmes continued at satisfactory levels. Certain key technical and professional jobs are now being manned by Zambians.

RESPONSE TO SOCIAL SECURITY INQUIRY COMMISSION 'OVERWHELMING'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 Aug 81 p 7

[Text] The response to the Kabwe commission of inquiry into the social security schemes has been described as "overwhelming."

When it started gathering evidence in Lusaka last Monday, no one turned up to make submissions and no written reports were filed.

But yesterday commission chairman Mr Basil Kabwe, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, described the response in the areas his commission has so far gathered evidence as "simply fantastic."

The minister urged district governors, Members of Parliament and ward chairmen throughout the country, particularly those in the rural areas to make people understand the subject properly so that they could give evidence when the commissioners toured their areas.

"The subject matter is very important since it concerns man from the cradle to the grave. We would like to appeal to governors and MPs to explain to the people since they depend on them for communication in the rural areas."

Mr Kabwe said his commission would cover rural provinces in case roads became impassable during the rain season before returning to urban centres.

The commission winds up its sittings in Lusaka Province today, with the last sitting in Kafue before going to North-Western Province.

Mr Kabwe said people in Chongwe and Luangwa called on the Party and its Government to promote agricultural production on which people in the rural areas depended.

"Most people felt they would like to be covered by the social security scheme if they were to become farmers."

Mr Kabwe said his commission would go back to Lusaka for more sittings because it did not cover major industries.

NCCM MAKES PROFIT DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDING 31 MARCH

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] NCHANGA Consolidated Copper Mines (NCCM) has made a pre-tax profit of K13.6 million during the financial year ended March 31, its chairman, Mr James Mapoma has announced.

In a statement sent to NCCM shareholders yesterday, Mr Mapoma who is also ZIMCO Director-General also announced that 356,541 tonnes of finished copper were produced during the financial year under review as compared to 359,816 tonnes last year.

But he noted that while 1,122 tonnes of cobalt were produced during the same financial year, the substantial reduction in the pre-tax profit cast dark clouds over the company's ability to survive the current financial difficulties.

However, Mr Mapoma hoped for a bright future taking into consideration that there was the proposed merger of NCCM and Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) into Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM).

He attributed the reduction in the pre-tax profit to world economic recession and inflation.

He said copper prices during the year were much lower than in 1960s and 70s adding that the average cash settlement price for copper wirebars on the London Metal Exchange declined to K1,578 per tonne compared to K1,705 per tonne in the previous financial year.

But another major adverse factor, Mr Mapoma said, was the loss incurred at Broken Hill Division of K12.5m during the financial year and resulted into a bigger loss of K20.5m in the year under review.

On cobalt sales, Mr Mapoma said only 578 tonnes out of the total production for the financial year under review were sold compared to sales of 1,285 tonnes in the previous financial year.

He said the Western world's consumption of the metal declined by nearly 12 percent in 1980 to about 19,000 tonnes and that major producers suffered a sharp reduction in their cobalt sales.

SUNFLOWER BAGS REMAIN UNSOLD FOR TWO YEARS

Makasa's Disclosure

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 [no page given]

[Text] Over 60,000 bags of sunflower have been lying unsold for two years at four depots in the Southern Province, Member of the Central Committee, Mr Kapasa Makasa disclosed yesterday.

Mr Makasa expressed at the pile-up of the crop and has now demanded to know the capacity of the Refined Oil Products (ROP) 1975 Limited to ascertain whether the company was unable to purchase all the sunflower produced.

This came to light during a tour of main and rural depots by Mr Makasa, who is the chairman of the Rural Development Sub-committee of the Central Committee.

"I want to know the capacity of the company and also whether they no longer import raw materials used to manufacture cooking oil.

"If we are still importing cooking oil, I would like to know why this crop cannot be utilised by ROP," he said.

The MCC, who was in the province from Wednesday to Saturday last week, gave the breakdown of the unsold bags as follows: Monze 40,590, Choma 13,406, Kaleya 6,609 and Mazabuka 269. He also inspected depots in Pemba.

The MCC also clarified an earlier report by ZANA in which it was stated that K150 million was needed to pay farmers in Southern Province. In fact, the amount needed is K50 million.

Namboard Spokesman Explains Zambia Stockpile

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 3 Sep 81 p 1

[Text] ROP's non-purchase of local sunflower has been responsible for the creation of Namboard's two-year-old stockpile of the crop in the Southern Province.

A Namboard spokesman said that ROP had failed to purchase the crop from Namboard in the last two years causing the 60,000 bag stockpile in the province.

"The inability of our sister company to purchase the crop has been responsible for the stockpile in the province," he said.

The spokesman added that the stockpile can be expected to grow for as long as ROP continues to fail to purchase the sunflower produced by local farmers.

He said that Namboard was under national obligation to purchase the crop from whatever farmers produce it and would not stop despite ROP's failure to purchase the crop.

"We are still buying the crop and stocks will continue to grow for as long as ROP does not purchase it from us," he said.

The spokesman dispelled suggestions that the crop be exported saying that the present quantity was inadequate for sale to outside markets.

The spokesman added that the current inconsistency in the supply of cooking oil further put the viability of such a move in question.

"How do we start exporting sunflower seed when people are still queueing up for cooking oil at our shops?" he asked.

Member of the Central Committee responsible for rural development, Mr Kapasa Makasa is determined to find out why ROP has not bought the crop.

In a press report yesterday following his tour of four rural depots in the Southern Province, Mr Makasa demanded to know why ROP has not bought the crop from Namboard.

'PROBLEM OF SCHOOL DROPOUTS NATIONAL DISASTER'

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 2 Sep 81 p 3

[Text] Zambia has an "army" of almost a million school dropouts, according to a University of Zambia resident tutor for Southern Province, Mr Ronald Iliamupu.

He said banditry, crime and other vices which are a source of social and political instability will keep rising unless an effective solution to the rising number of school drop-outs was found.

Mr Iliamupu said Zambia was sitting on a time bomb because of her educational system which continued to "inject" thousands of children in the streets every year.

He said in a lecture he delivered to a Party women's conference in Livingstone that the problem of school drop-outs was a national disaster.

"What do Party leaders suggest as a solution? Shall we continue to feel proud to blow the Humanism trumpet as leaders when such a situation continues to prevail in our country?" he asked.

He likened the present educational system to a train which travelled on a single track bound for one destination, but ejected most of its passengers without stopping at several points along the route.

"Zambia is sitting on a time-bomb as far as the future of the youth is concerned. And unless practical steps are taken soon, this bomb will explode," Mr Iliamupu warned.

He said in 1977, over 120,000 children completed Grade Seven, but only 20,000 secured places into Form One. About 100,000 were therefore "thrown in the streets."

The resident tutor said the same number "was kicked out in the "cold" in 1978/79. Last year over 143,000 children completed grade seven and only 22,021 obtained places in Form One.

"Again out of 24,693 Form Three pupils in 1980, only 10,156 went to Form Four. Over 14,000 are out in the streets as "mishanga boys."

He said these boys would soon be adults who needed employment, housing, money and clothing.

"If the nation fails to give them a stable future, will it be surprising if we experience increased crime, violence and all vices that cause social and political instability?" Mr Iliamupu asked.

He said there was need to organise seminars, short courses, workshops and conferences for parents at which solutions to the dilemma of children could be searched.

BRIEFS

ZAIRIAN LEADER FOR TALKS--Zaire's political commissioner and governor for Shaba region Mr Citoyen Mandungu Bula, arrives in Kitwe by road today for a five-day visit and talks with Copperbelt Central Committee Member Mr Alex Shapi. A spokesman for Mr Shapi's office said in Ndola yesterday that the two leaders would hold talks in Kitwe on bilateral relations and visit farms and industries in Kitwe and Ndola after holding a joint rally at Mokambo border. The spokesman could not shed light on what the talks would cover but smuggling is expected to be on the agenda. Of late there has been a public outcry for a halt to smuggling of essential commodities into Zaire by Zambians and Zaireans. Most armed robbers have always escaped into Zaire. Last month Mufulira Division of Roan Consolidated Mines (RCM) erected iron gates at entry points into the town for motorists from Ndola, Kitwe and Mokambo and concrete blocks in main streets in a bid to seal off escape routes used by gun-men. Apart from official talks, the two leaders will address a public meeting at Mokambo border on Thursday and on Friday Mr Shapi will take his visitor to Indeni petroleum refinery and Zambia Sugar Company. SAUDI OIL IMPORTS' INCREASE--Zambia's oil imports from Saudi Arabia have increased by almost 700 percent within eight years, President Kaunda disclosed in Taif yesterday. Speaking to a news conference with the Saudi Press before departure for home, the President admitted that Zambia was facing grave economic problems. The high oil import bill, worldwide inflation, low copper prices, meagre agricultural output due to bad weather and the war situation prevailing in southern Africa were some of the negative factors. Although he praised Saudi efforts to keep oil prices down, Dr Kaunda said developing countries like Zambia found it a battle to survive. For instance, Zambia spent 30 million US dollars on oil imports but the figure was now around 204 million dollars. "Our foreign exchange situation is very bad," he said. FUEL TO ZIMBABWE--Zambia has started supplying fuel to Zimbabwe to alleviate an acute shortage in that country. ZIMCO executive director for Transport and Energy, Mr Patrick Chisanga confirmed this in Lusaka yesterday, adding that it was a temporary measure aimed at helping a sister country. "We do not have much fuel to spare, we have our own problems here regarding oil and we are just helping our brothers in Zimbabwe temporarily," Mr Chisanga said. Mr Chisanga pointed out that the supplying of fuel to Zimbabwe did not mean that Zambia had a lot of oil to spare. He did not disclose the quantity being exported. Zimbabwe is facing fuel shortages especially diesel and this has led to the curtailment of the number of buses operating in many towns while some transport companies were asked to cut-down on their fleets to save fuel. Zimbabwe's Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Moses Mvenge warned recently that the country would impose fuel rationing because it was having difficulties with its fuel supplies. STATE FARM'S PROGRESS--The proposed state farm in Mumbwa district is to become operational this year and 200 hectares of land have already been cleared in readiness for planting. This was confirmed by district agricultural officer, Mr Mwemba Miyoba who accompanied Central Province member of the Central Committee Mr Pius Kasutu to inspect the farm site. Mr Miyoba said that more than 250 hectares could have been cleared by the end of this month but this could not be possible due to a breakdown of machinery. Mr Miyoba assured Mr Kasutu that the 250 hectares would however be cleared by mid-September as the machinery has now improved. [Text] [Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 1 Sep 81 p 3]

WHITES SAID TO BE ON COLLISION COURSE WITH NATIONALISM

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2824, 1 Sep 81 p 25

[Text] Salisbury, August 29--Zimbabwe's rich and privileged white tribe has not exactly lost its head, but 16 months after the inauguration of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's quasi-socialist government the former ruling group seems to be on a new collision course with black nationalism.

In the past week the white minority has witnessed a build up towards a one-party state, a ban on emigrant export of household goods, warnings that dual citizenship will soon be abolished, and a call by Mr. Mugabe for a politicised education system, with children encouraged to join his party.

Whites are also worried about their share certificates. The bottom has fallen out of the local stock market, which is stagnant because of the lack of foreign confidence.

Today a new attack on Mr. Mugabe's policies came from former Prime Minister Ian Smith, the white leader for 20 years, who guided the whites through a seven-year bush war that left more than 25,000 people dead.

In an interview Mr. Smith warned that the economy was in "a very serious condition and deteriorating daily", and he warned that it was "very near to becoming chaotic".

Destructive Road

The Republican Front leader, whose party holds all 20 reserved white seats in the 100-member House of Assembly, predicted that essential commodities would soon be unobtainable and that Zimbabwe would follow the "same destructive road" as other independent African states.

He blamed the "breakdown" of the national rail system on government "inefficiency and mishandling". The "movement of goods has developed such a logjam that before long people are not going to have the basic necessities of life", Mr. Smith warned.

After independence in April last year Prime Minister Mugabe embarked on a policy of reconciliation with the whites, who remain the backbone of the economy, and control the important mining and agricultural sectors.

But they have continued to "vote with their feet", and are still leaving the country at the rate of 1,500 a month.

Mr. Mugabe now finds himself torn between the whites who say his mild socialist reforms are coming too fast, and blacks who bitterly complain that changes are not swift enough.

Political observers believe that Mr. Mugabe has lost significant support among the land-hungry blacks in rural areas, where 75 per cent of the population live. There have been suggestions that in the event of an immediate election the Prime Minister could even lose his overall majority. (A.F.P.)

DECISION TO BAN EMIGRANTS FROM EXPORTING FURNITURE

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 28 Aug 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Those Who Stay Are More Important"]

[Text] The decision to ban emigrants from exporting certain household goods will no doubt be seen by many people as another example of Government's determination to "turn Zimbabwe into a prison."

The moans will be loud, clear,and totally unjustified.

The edict covers refrigerators, deepfreezers, stoves, washing machines, high fidelity and stereo equipment and lounge and dining room suites. Exceptions have been made in the case of people who brought their furniture into the country, or in the case of family heirlooms.

But despite the feeling of claustrophobia being created by increasingly tight emigration regulations, the ban is justified.

Circumventing

For many years, the export of furniture and other household goods has been an effective way of circumventing foreign exchange regulations.

To make matters worse, many of the goods people were taking with them were in increasingly short supply, and every stove, refrigerator or stereo set taken out of the country meant more pressure on local prices.

It is very doubtful that by introducing the ban Government was trying to force people into staying in Zimbabwe.

Not for Them

But many Zimbabweans have decided that, for one reason or another, the country is no longer for them. So be it. But Government has quite rightly decided that people who remain in the country are far more important than those who want to leave.

By plugging up an obvious gap in its exchange control regulations, Government has in fact told those who are staying, "Why should you be penalised by the actions of others?" How can anyone disagree with that?

POSSIBILITY OF IMPROVED TRADE WITH KENYA DISCUSSED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 9 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

TRADE between Kenya and Zimbabwe could boom and result in mutual benefits if foreign currency and transport problems can be overcome, according to a Kenyan trade official Mr Morgan Githinji.

Interviewed yesterday at the end of a visit by a 13-man Kenyan trade delegation, Mr Githinji, who led the party, said the group was satisfied with the contacts it had made with Zimbabwean businessmen and was hopeful a flourishing two-way trade would be developed.

"Although our economies have a lot in common," he added, "there are still many areas where they are complementary, rather than in competition.

"This is an export-orientated delegation: so we are interested in finding which manufactured products we can sell here and what raw materials are available."

There was obviously a market for some of Zimbabwe's manufactured goods in Kenya and teams and individual businessmen from this country were opening up that market.

Mr Githinji's team was looking for mineral products to import into metal-poor Kenya so that country could continue to develop its industry. Agricultural machinery was another possible Zimbabwe export, as was maize and wheat.

But food would be a short-term export, for Kenya was usually a food exporter herself and was only short because of a run of bad seasons and droughts.

Included in possible Kenyan exports to Zimbabwe were: soda ash, sisal products, paper, pencils, school equipment, sports goods, fluorospar, insecticides, certain textiles, medical and veterinary products, chemicals, fish and seed.

Mr Githinji said he and a colleague had come out to Zimbabwe on a survey visit, hiring a local firm of industrial and commercial consultants to examine those areas where trade was possible.

Businessmen in Kenya had then been approached and a team formed up with the backing of KETA, an agency of the department of foreign trade in the Kenyan Ministry of Commerce.

A common problem for both countries was the shortage of foreign currency and the tight controls needed to ensure priorities were met. That was a major reason why the trade had to be two-way.

Transport was another, although less important problem. At a seminar the Kenyans were told of road, sea and air transport services and were advised to use the Mozambique ports, the natural route for their products.

SUCCESS OF BINDURA-DARWIN COOPERATIVE REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 9 Sep 81 p 7

[Text] MEMBERS of the Bindura - Darwin co-operative are taking their agricultural produce to marketing depots at lower costs than non-members in the area who use private transport.

Depending on the distance from a marketing depot, transport charges agreed upon by the respective committees for the societies who belong to the co-operative vary from 55c to 80c to carry a bag of maize, and between $1.75 and $3 for a bale of cotton.

Overall profits from the exercise are distributed so that the committees take 70 percent and the union 30 percent.

For farmers outside the movement, charges are pegged by individual transporters and they have complained that prices are exhorbitant. Some transporters charge as much as $1 to carry a bag of maize over a short distance and $7 for a bale of cotton.

The co-operative's truck calls at central points serving sister societies and collects farm produce for delivery to the depots of the Grain Marketing Board and Cotton Marketing Board.

Committees of the member societies decide on the rate of handling charges, and they retain the bulk of the profit while a small proportion goes to the mother union to cover its operating costs.

Instead of waiting for payment from the marketing boards, the umbrella union gets confirmation that the produce has been delivered and pays the farmer on the spot, recovering the money when the cheque is received from the boards.

The union also services the stop orders. Agricultural Finance Corporation loans are channelled through the union with a big reduction of administrative costs.

Union manager Mr Peter Mujaranji said: "From what I have experienced since I have been here for the last six months, the most important thing is that people have to get the co-operative orientation so that they really understand what a co-operative can do for them.

"Our co-operative is a non-profit making organisation. It is there to do service to people."

The union was formed 10 years ago and has now a membership of 70 000 small-scale and rural farmers in 52 primary societies affiliated to it.

The mother union takes orders from these sister organisations, purchases the requirements from throughout the country and delivers them to central points, decided by committees, in various parts of the region.

Mr Mujaranji said it requires at least 10 farmers to form a society to be affiliated to the union. Each member pays a capital fee of $2, which will be repaid at withdrawal, plus 50c joining fee.

Apart from handling charges, nothing more is paid.

GRAIN PRODUCTION FALLING TOO RAPIDLY, SAYS GPA

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 28 Aug 81 p 8

[Text] Consumption of wheat is outstripping production so rapidly that the Grain Producer's Association has predicted severe shortages within three years unless growers are offered more incentive for the winter crop.

GPA Chairman, Mr Bill Francis, said in an interview that present stocks, together with 16 000 tonnes imported from the United States, will take the country through this year and "maybe" through the next. But in the years following supply will not meet demand unless the wheat hectarage increases by 10 000 hectares annually.

He explained that this year's imported wheat from America was part of a "back to back" aid programme whereby this country, for its part, contracted to ship 21 000 tonnes of maize to Zambia.

Production

According to GPA estimates 200 000 tonnes of wheat will be consumed this marketing year, and this figure is expected to rise sharply in the future. Production, however, is not keeping pace, with only 160 000 tonnes produced last year, and between 170 000 and 180 000 tonnes grown this year.

Profitable

Because other crops, notably maize and sugar, are substantially more profitable, there has been a massive swing away from wheat, especially in the major production area of the lowveld. In the last two to three years the total hectarage of land irrigated for wheat has dropped from 44 000 hectares to about 34 000 hectares.

Bonus

Wheat producers this year were paid $165 a tonne plus a $25 a tonne bonus for any increase over 25% of last year's crop. But, said Mr Francis, this was still not a sufficient inducement for farmers. In order to bring new land into wheat production and meet the indications of consumer trends, growers will need at least $200 a tonne.

The capital investment for irrigating land works out at about $2 000 a hectare, including the costs of dam construction, pumps and pipeline. In addition to higher prices, therefore, farmers will also require the formation of special finance schemes similar to the old Farm Irrigation Fund, by which the Agriculture Finance Corporation offered long-term low-interest loans solely for irrigation programmes.

SMUGGLING OF BEEF OVER LIMPOPO REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 9 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

ZIMBABWE is losing at least $150 000 a month through illegal meat exports across the Limpopo, said the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Moses Mvenge, during the weekend.

The culprits are white farmers who deserted Zimbabwe after independence, he said, and who were bent on sabotaging the beef industry through these illegal exports of beef to South Africa.

A few individuals were involved. All such culprits were now South African residents but owned farms in Zimbabwe, mostly cattle ranches in the Limpopo valley and Beitbridge areas.

But some local resident cattle ranchers are starting to be involved in the racket, said the deputy minister.

He said the former Zimbabwean farmers used meat import licences they could easily obtain in South Africa by returning to their farms and killing their cattle, then ferrying the meat through Beitbridge or across temporary bridges over the Limpopo.

"We are aware there is an illegal temporary bridge that is operated 45 km west of Beitbridge and has been used for such trips as well as carrying furniture and belongings of other people 'gapping' it out of the country," he said.

He also alleged that small aircrafts were taking off regularly from unmonitored landing strips.

"These small planes ferry valuable belongings across the border and can be possibly used to bring unwanted goods into the country," said Mr Mvenge.

The meat that was crossing the border illegally was more than 150 000 kg a month, he said, and could be valued at $1 a kg.

Mr Mvenge called for the immediate formation and deployment of a border guard force to patrol the whole Limpopo valley and the monitoring of all landing strips in the country.

"Aircraft landing and taking off at the owner's pleasure without being monitored could cost the country a lot of wealth drained out illegally," he said.

The Matabeleland branch chairman of the Commercial Farmers' Union, Mr Rob Sayers, last night disputed the story.

When asked what his reaction would be if it was in fact true that farmers were engaged in illegal exports of meat Mr Sayers said he would not even have any reaction as he considered such a thing could never happen.

"I do not believe such a thing happens at all. Certainly not with CFU farmers, the union does not encourage any illegal activities," he said.

The chairman of the Beitbridge Farmers' Association, Mr W. Ferguson was unavailable for comment.

MERGED FARMING SERVICE STARTS RECRUITING DRIVE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 9 Sep 81 p 1

[Text]

CONEX and Devag have merged to become an agricultural extension agency called Agritech, the Deputy Secretary for Agriculture, Dr Dexter Chavunduka, announced in Salisbury yesterday.

The merger, establishment and structure of the new body had been approved and the Ministry of Agriculture was interviewing senior officers for various posts in the new department, Agricultural Technical Services.

He was speaking to the Mashonaland North regional meeting of the Natural Resources Board and amplifying his remarks in an interview afterwards.

There would be very little change, he said, because of the different training of officials of the former departments at the lowest level of organisation and most farmers would continue dealing with the people they had always known.

Those members of Devag (the Department of Agricultural Development) who had been involved in non-agricultural rural development would stay with the Ministry of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development.

"We don't want to get involved with bridge-building and all that," said Dr Chavunduka. "Our job will be purely agricultural although we will, of course, continue working very closely with the other ministry."

Resettlement areas would be decided by Lands, planned by Agriculture, developed infrastructurally by Lands and then both ministries would develop them in their various fields.

"As you see, we are going to have to work very closely together. But we have done so all along. Conex (the Department of Conservation and Extension) has done much of the planning for resettlement."

There were plans to double the size of Agritech over the next few years to give greater coverage, especially among smallscale farmers.

Now that all agricultural agencies were in a single ministry it was possible to link research and extension work far more closely.

Dr Chavunduka said he was looking at a scheme whereby a research team would be based in each major area, capable of solving problems brought by extension assistants.

DOCTORS' BUSH TOURS--The Government is considering introducing weekend stints in rural hospitals and clinics for doctors employed in Government ministries, the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, said yesterday. He told the Republican Front MP for Bulawayo North, Mr Denis Walker, that there were 16 doctors in the country's 55 rural districts and most of these were missionaries. "Hence the need to reorient our doctors so that they can start by practising in the rural areas," he said. "Nobody has said they should not practise in the cities. Of course they must come to the cities for specialisation--but only eventually and not at the beginning." Mr Walker interjected: "Why don't you yourself go and practise there?" Dr Ushewokunze a medical doctor by profession, replied: "Actually, we're going to do stints over weekends in the rural areas. Every doctor in the various ministries is going to embark on this on a self-reliance basis." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 9 Sep 81 p 1]

SOUTH AFRICA THREATENED WITH 'UNFORESEEN' CONSEQUENCES

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 4 Sep 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The Invaders' Delay"]

[Text] It has been nearly a week since South African authorities have been guaranteeing to anyone who wants to listen that their troops are leaving southern Angola. This obvious lie has been denounced by all the observers in the battlefield and has been repeatedly denied by the Angolan government.

Faithful interpreters of the Hitlerian slogan, according to which an oft-repeated lie ends up being believed by a credulous and uncritical public, the racists have not given up and are still harping on the same subject.

Meanwhile, since it does not take so long to leave a territory that was occupied to depths of almost 200 kms in a few hours by the army and more than 300 kms by the air force, the racists have now begun to resort to a series of absurd arguments to explain away the "delay" in returning to their bases in occupied Namibia.

It seems that the first reason for the delay was "damage" to their vehicles. Since this explanation cannot be maintained too long--give the fact that the racists themselves brag about their high technical ability--it was necessary to quickly find other arguments.

This is when the mines (!) came into action. This means: in a field crossed so easily a few days before by the racists who razed villages and massacred or forced peaceful people to take refuge in the bush, dangerous mines cropped up all of a sudden, in an area already under the total control of the racist army and air force.

Already very much "delayed" by these two snags, the invading troops were faced by still a third reason (and let us not even mention the time lost in macabre atrocities and soccer matches): the "pockets" of resistance of the SWAPO "terrorists" who, according to the racists, proliferate in Cunene like mushrooms.

This tactic of accusing the enemy of actions that the accusers themselves are carrying out--which is also typical of nazism--provides the evidence that the racist invaders are taking advantage of their occupation of the southern part of Angola to establish a minefield which will hamper for a long time to come the passage of people and animals in the area presently occupied.

This observation, which does not mean in any way that the racists intend to return to the territory they illegally occupy (Namibia), proves that South Africa--well aware of the aggressive support of the largest imperialist power on this planet--wishes to perpetuate its occupation of Angolan territory and is attempting to gain time to reduce the international impact of its aggression. Again in good nazi fashion, the racists are always counting on the decrease of solidarity and on a certain accommodation with criminal acts on the part of people and countries not directly involved in the problem.

Another possible intention of the racists in prolonging their occupation could be to create the conditions for the territorial balkanization of Angola and the installation of their puppets in the occupied zone. These have been busily claiming attention recently, broadcasting communiques to which no one attaches the least importance, not even their South African protectors, who are now wrapped up in another wave of propaganda.

That this replay of nazi barbarity on our own territory can be prolonged thanks to the veto of a country that fought against nazism in World War II and assumed the guise of champion of freedom and democracy constitutes a lesson for peoples like our own (generally those of Africa and the Third World): they should become fully aware of the relativity of the resonant declarations of principle and should learn to recognize, in practice, who are their true enemies.

The lesson is painful but useful. The people of Cunene, the people of Angola, can already perceive the aggressive brutality of the racists as a threat to their very lives, to their possessions, to the possibility of building a prosperous and sovereign country.

Our people do not need to explain the reason for the intransigent support of the People's Republic of Angola to the brotherly people of Namibia and their revolutionary vanguard, the SWAPO, internationally recognized as such by the UN, the OAU and the Non-Aligned Movement. The Angolan people have already understood in their blood and their minds the prophetic words of comrade President Agostinho Neto of fond memory, that "in Namibia and South Africa we find the continuation of our struggle."

In the fact of the U.S. veto of the actions proposed and accepted by the Security Council, Angola affirmed that conditions are present to individually or collectively exercise its right of legitimate defense against the racist occupiers. If they know what is good for them, they should rapidly repair the "damage" to their vehicles, solve the problem of the notorious mines and return to their bases in occupied Namibia, if not definitely to their own homes. The "delay" in Angola might well cost them an unforeseen price.

NO RUSSIAN, CUBAN PARTICIPATION--Luanda, September 7--The two-week-old South African invasion of southern Angola, with its deadly air and ground attacks on civilian and military targets, is apparently continuing despite Pretoria's denials. A group of 24 foreign journalists invited by the Angolan government to visit the war zone in the south verified over the weekend--when they were rocketed themselves by an Impala ground-attack aircraft--that South African planes control Angola's airspace and are still bombing civilian and military objectives up to 200 kms (125 miles) into Angola from the Namibian border. Military officials refused, for security reasons, to allow the journalists to travel south of Cahama, a town 130 kms (80 miles) from the frontier. It has been totally flattened by South African bombing. The press party saw no sign that Cuban or Soviet military advisers were engaged in combat with the South Africans. Many Cubans and Russians were in evidence in Lubango, especially at the air base where several MIG-21s and MIG-17s were parked. The Cubans pilot them, according to a civilian source, but they have apparently not taken on any South African planes so far. According to the Angolans, on September 1 South Africa violated Angolan airspace 36 times, 21 times the following day, 15 times on September 3 and 14 times on September 4. Cahama was also reportedly bombed again on September 2 and 3 despite the fact that its military targets--two radar stations--were destroyed on the first day of the invasion. BRITISH, FRENCH VIEWS 'SIMILAR'--London, September 4--Talks today between Angolan Ambassador to France Jose Luis de Almeida and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington on the South African incursion in Angola were "very fruitful," Mr. de Almeida said later. The discussions were described by the British Foreign Office as "friendly." Mr. de Almeida told a press conference that Angola would have preferred that Britain had taken the same position as France in last Monday's United Nations Security Council debate by voting for the motion condemning South Africa--vetoed by the United States--instead of abstaining. "But I don't think the positions (of Lord Carrington and French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson) are different," Mr. de Almeida added. The ambassador attacked the United States for "aligning itself with the South African aggression," but said the work of the western nations contact group--Britain, Canada, France the U.S. and West Germany--should go on trying to find a solution to the Namibian problem. EXTENSIVE DAMAGE FROM FIRE--A violent fire erupted in the early hours of the morning today in the Cazenga district of Luanda, reaching the Kastor paint factory and the Guedal assembly plant which is the only state unit assembling Fiat vehicles and others. The fire started with a powerful explosion, with the flames reaching up almost 20 meters. The fire destroyed part of the Kastor plant, which will now remain closed. At the Guedal plant the fire destroyed various pieces of equipment, among which are 3 cars. However, a number of Fiat cars were removed from the premises by the people and Ministry of Interior personnel. There are no victims, but damage from the fire will amount to many thousands of kwanzas. [Excerpt] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 4 Sep 81 p 1]

ELECTIONS FOR LOCAL LEADERS--Bujumbura, August 18--Grass-roots members of Burundi's sole political party will this week, for the first time, choose local party leaders as part of the government's plan to introduce more democracy into Burundian life. Local congresses of the Union for National Progress (UPRONA) will be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday throughout the small central African country. The meetings are being held under party by-laws adopted in December, 1979. Party members are also to examine the draft constitution--which was adopted by the party in June and is to be submitted to a referendum soon--and approve two-year local development plans. The constitution was written by a special committee formed in January, 1980, shortly after President Jean-Baptiste Bagaza scaled down the direct military rule imposed when he took power in a bloodless coup in 1976. NGUEMA BLAMES FINANCIAL BODIES FOR ECONOMIC DILEMMA

AB041634 Malabo Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 4 Sep 81

[Unattributed commentary]

[Excerpts] Yesterday at the Third of August Palace, President Obiang Nguema Mbazogo, in a statement to the news media, the nation and international opinion, detailed the country's economic position and blamed the financial bodies for maladministration and abuse which have placed the country in the present dilemma.

Obiang Nguema Mbazogo specified the sums received by Equatorial Guinea from external sources: $23 million from the IMF and $5 million from the Spanish Government totaling exactly 3 billion pesetas.

The Government of the Supreme Military Council gave the financial institutions and their chiefs full freedom in the management of these funds. There is written evidence to that effect.

After the coup of freedom of 3 August 1971, our country lacked everything. We lived poorly but we had no external debts. What is odd is that within 2 years and with 3 billion pesetas in circulation, the financial bodies should announce that we have external debts even if they are not considerable. It is logical for the Government of the Supreme Military Council to demand, in the name of Equatorial Guinea, a public account from these institutions and their officials. Those in charge of our financial institutions should, with documentary evidence and through the mass media, provide proof to the people of Equatorial Guinea of [passage indistinct] and investments and other activities for which the 3 billion pesetas were used.

The financial institutions must answer the questions put to them by the people of Equatorial Guinea on the economy. Where is the 3 billion pesetas? Why is there hunger, poverty and shortages when there is 3 billion pesetas available? Why have the financial institutions intentionally blocked a loan being granted on favorable terms to the Republic of Equatorial Guinea by the Government of Argentina amounting to $5 million, or, at current exchange rates, 50 million pesetas?

If the 3 billion pesetas were distributed proportionately among a population of [number indistinct], there would be 60,000 ekweles per person.

We say as a nation, and this is the general opinion, that the financial institutions and their officials should justify themselves before the people whom they have robbed and humiliated.

How did the officials of the country's financial institutions open accounts abroad? How much is in these accounts? Why do they have these accounts outside and not inside the country? Since when have they had these accounts? For what purpose? What are their intentions?

They have brought about an unsatisfactory living standard at all levels and spiraling inflation. The cost of living in Equatorial Guinea is higher than all international indices.

Through their president, the people of Equatorial Guinea have adopted as an immediate solution the establishment of a committee of enquiry to investigate foreign accounts; a committee to ensure the equilibrium of the national balance of payments; and another committee to consider the economic projects and plans.

PMAC STATEMENT ON FORMATION OF WORKERS' COMMITTEES, SPECIAL COURT

LD081750 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1748 GMT 7 Sep 81

[Statement issues by the Provisional Military Administrative Council on 7 September on the formation of Workers' Control Committees and a special court to "foil reactionary activities"]

[Text] In order to build socialism in a confident and reliable manner, it is essential first to abolish private ownership of the main means of production and distribution and to restructure the means on the basis of collective ownership. Collective ownership of production implements and supremacy over private ownership are guarantees to the working people enabling them to weaken the powers of exploiters and to crush them completely; to build their supremacy on the new economic foundation; and finally to be beneficiaries of a planned socialist development.

Socialized production relations are not only the basis for prompt development of production forces but also a vital means to ensure, fulfill and maintain the basic interests of the broad working masses. Nevertheless, the truthfulness of socialism cannot be proved only by socializing production relations.

In order to build socialism objectively and reliably, it is necessary to take care of the means of production, strengthen economic resources, expand science and technology and use them for the development of the national economy and to ensure the existence of heavy industries which are the economic bases for the new socialist system, in addition to implementing radical changes in production relations. [martial music]

One aspect of the efforts to lay a strong socialist foundation is to nurture the means of production nationalized from the reactionary order, to use them properly and to expand them. The successful accomplishment of this task and of ensuring the social nature of production relations is possible through the active participation and supervision of the broad working masses.

Generally, since the origin of supervision (?and) [word indistinct] is traced back to the beginning of the division of societies into classes and the emergence of private ownership and since the need for it is related to the need for obtaining produce, supervision exists in every social system. But in the process to eradicate the supremacy of the exploiting ruling classes and build a new society based on equality and prosperity, supervision becomes an important instrument for the development of the broad working masses.

In socialism, the need for supervision arises from the need for accelerating the building of socialism reliably, and by fighting against the activities of reactionaries aimed at weakening the new system and the negative culture of the reactionary system.

In a socialist system, supervision has a public character. Moreover, its implementation is basically ensuring the strict observance of the working people's party development plans and proclamations, regulations and directives of the government, with the full participation of the broad masses.

The revolution of the broad Ethiopian masses is a genuine people's revolution which has brought about a revolutionary change in production relations and is laying down the foundation on which the structures of socialist production relations stand. At the present development stage of our people's revolution, all the conditions for the development of the material and technical foundations on which the socialist economy will be built are being created.

However, we are not in possession of the resources necessary to speed up our economic development. Moreover, a bitter class struggle still awaits us; a struggle against the remnants of the reactionary cultures and against embezzlement of public property, pilfering, wastefulness, general selfishness and individualism, which are all directed against us by our class enemies. The economy we inherited is very weak and is not one on which we can depend to build socialism.

Moreover, although the economy is in the process of recuperating from the wounds sustained from the destructive war started by imperialism and its puppets and those who are enemies of our revolution and working people, against our revolution and very existence, it has not yet fully recovered. All these factors together make the struggle awaiting us in building socialism arduous and bitter.

To date, the broad working masses and all progressive forces of Ethiopia have built up the revolution on a strong foundation by foiling all acts of aggression against our revolution and existence through the bitter struggle they have waged and the sacrifices. Although this has been done, the enemies of our revolution who are not prepared to accept the victories of the people or the historical reality. They are still challenging us and hatching all possible kinds of plots to subvert our revolution and frustrate our efforts to extricate our country from the economic quagmire into which it has been plunged and from backwardness.

For some time now these enemies of our revolution have changed their methods of struggle and have started the very dangerous but final plan of hatching covert plots to challenge our revolution. The covert plot of antipeople elements against our revolution is expressed today in the form of exploitation, wastefulness, extortion, bribery, pilfering and individualism.

The wealth which we have been and are accumulating through the people's struggle and sacrifice of lives is being exploited today by the greedy and selfish elements. It is being used to secure comfort for private life and for antipeople and antisocialist purposes. Today antipeople elements are more than ever before increasing instances of plunder, theft, greed and individualism and are using public (?funds) and property for improving private life and luxury. These antipeople elements are putting private interests before the interests of the people by tying themselves with bonds of provincialism, kinship, marriage, friendship and private interests, and by establishing various cheap relationships.

Since building socialism in such a dangerous situation is absolutely unthinkable, it is primarily the historic and inevitable responsibility of this revolutionary generation to do away with these antipeople elements and their activities and to take proper care of our belongings in order to achieve our great goal confidently and surely. [martial music]

At this time of great struggle, when the people and all progressive forces are sacrificing their time, knowledge, energy and even their lives, we have no patience for embracing and keeping antipeople elements who are bent on organizing their own comfortable private lives by selfishly plundering public funds and property.

As these selfish elements are our class enemies who are determined to exchange the interests and aspirations of the people for private enjoyment, expose the revolution for supervision, and finally to serve the antipeople interests of imperialism, it is presently our burning revolution-advancing obligation to follow and expose their reactionary plots and bring them to people's justice. Launching a planned and programmed antiexploitation and antiwaste campaign and to formulate strong supervision for the people is a timely move and the only way to effectively and successfully accomplish this task.

As our communist leader, Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam said in a speech to the Ethiopian people on the day we celebrated the sixth anniversary of the revolution: Not caring about public and state property, putting private interests before the interests of the society and the like are not things to be taken lightly, and they should be eradicated. The revolution should not have any mercy on the parasites who are plunderers, extorters, cheats and bribe takers or on those who deny justice after taking bribes. The working people should launch another campaign in 1981 in which they should use their united strength. Also, government and mass organizations should strengthen their bookkeeping and control systems.

It is the current responsibility and obligation of every worker, genuine citizen and progressive individual to create favorable conditions for guaranteed development and to resolutely fight against enemies of the people and revolution who are engaged in these disgusting activities and against all those who are thorns and obstacles to our progress and prosperity.

Withstanding the covert antirevolution plots being hatched by antipeople elements engaged in reactionary acts is possible only when the working people duly follow and expose the conspiracies of these enemies by means of people's control and when they stand in unison throughout the country to utilize their property and wealth for their common prosperity and interests.

Aware of the danger of the antipeople activities of wasting public property, analyzing the resulting failures in the national security and the healthy progress of our revolution and realizing that the situation would continue as it is if prompt steps were not taken in time, the second regular session of the Commission for Organizing the Party of the Workers of Ethiopia, considering plans to enable the working people to campaign on these antipeople acts, passed resolutions on mapping out strategies to enable the working people to control their funds and property by widely participating in their organizations and to mercilessly fight against exposed enemies. The Commission for Organizing the Party of the Workers of Ethiopia also passed resolutions on steps to be taken to eradicate disorganization of work and property in government and mass organizations. The habit of incorrect bookeeping, not closing accounts in time, not collecting taxes and state income in time, and similar damaging manifestations, as well as to launch a campaign to seek out bribe takers, plunderers, cheats, and so forth with the cooperation of the people, so that they obtain prompt results.

Devising a people's control system and implementing it in relation to the objective reality in order to hit at, weaken, put under control and thus completely eradicate the above-mentioned social vices inherited from the reactionary system and which are used by our class enemies as means to subvert the revolution, and which are obstacles to our progress, as well as to program and coordinate the country's resources so as to speed up the economic development, has become the burning issue of the day.

It would be legitimate to create favorable preconditions for establishing the structures of a people's control system to hit at these dangerous social vices, which are showing signs of revival by exploiting our revolution, at the first stage of the campaign and then to control them.

PMAC DECLARATION ON SETTING UP OF WORKERS' CONTROL COMMITTEES

EA091145 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1748 GMT 7 Sep 81

[Declaration issued by the Provisional Military Administrative Council on 7 September on setting up the Workers' Control Committee]

[Text] Since the objective of the revolution of the people of Ethiopia is to establish a socialist order where there is justice, where every citizen's freedom and equality are respected, where every citizen is able to share in the national development by destroying the order of exploitation of man by man, and since the Provisional Military Administrative Council [PMAC] turned the rural and urban lands as well as other production enterprises into public property; in consideration of this objective, to make the production enterprises more fruitful so that they become more beneficial to the broad masses, to eradicate completely unlawful practices such as abuse of authority, carelessness in handling government and public organizations' property, selfishness, cheating, giving and taking bribes, hooliganism and other similar practices which have been inherited from the old semifeudal and semibourgeois, and to abolish inefficiency and bureaucracy; since it is necessary to make the worker fully participate in the protection of national property and administrative duties by strengthening the capacity of workers' control over themselves; since it is imperative that the broad masses know that the protection of government offices and public organizations and of the country's national forest products and wild life is for the interest of socialist development; in order to heighten the democratic participation of the worker in this regard as mentioned above; since it is necessary that a national control structure be set up; and since it has become necessary to set up a centralized workers' control committee with the necessary full authority, the following declaration has been issued in accordance with Declaration No. 110 of 1975-1976 promulgated to reiterate the authority and responsibility of the PMAC and the Council of Ministers:

BRITISH OFFICIAL RECEIVED--Richard Luce, the British foreign office deputy secretary who arrived in our country yesterday afternoon, was received this morning in audience by the minister of state for foreign affairs, Martin Bongo, and by the president of the republic, His Excellency Elhadj Omar Bongo. Mr Luce described these two audiences as very important. He said his visit to Gabon constitutes a step forward in the bid to ensure closer relations between Gabon and Great Britain, especially in the fields of commerce. Questions of foreign policy and southern Africa and Chad in particular were discussed at length. According to Mr Luce, these exchanges of viewpoints are very important for the two countries since they help to make the positions of the two sides known to each other. Mr Luce also indicated that his country will continue to maintain very good relations with African countries, especially with Francophone African countries. This is the reason why Gabon is the first country he is visiting. Mr Luce recalled the last visit of the British trade minister to Gabon and disclosed that in October Gabon will receive the Queen's cousin, who will be accompanied by an important delegation of British businessmen. After being received by the head of state, Mr Luce and his delegation were invited to a lunch offered by the minister of state for foreign affairs and cooperation, Martin Bongo, and presided by the secretary of state for public relations in charge of missions, Albert Yangari. Mr Yangari stressed the importance of this visit which Mr Luce is paying to Gabon. [Excerpts] [AB110938 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 10 Sep 81]

GOVERNMENT EXPERIENCING SEVERE CASH FLOW PROBLEMS

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 28 Aug 81 p 2

[Article by Keith Kiewiet]

[Text] Maseru--Severe cash flow problems have left the Lesotho Government unable to pay civil servants salaries without drawing on emergency sources.

Confirming the problem, the country's Finance Minister said he was convinced it was now coming to an end.

The cash flow problem has meant that the Government has been unable to meet its salary bill for the past few months and has been forced to draw on normally untapped sources.

Lesotho has a direct line of credit with the South African Reserve Bank under its membership of the Rand Monetary System.

However, according to Lesotho's Finance Minister, Mr K T J Rakgetoa, the Government used other resources to fill the money gap. He did not disclose what these were.

Confirming that the Lesotho Government has had severe cash flow problems, leading to rumours that it was bankrupt, he said the country had a massive aid programme and the way this programme operated had led to the problems. He was confident, however, that the difficulty was coming to an end.

"When an aid programme is undertaken with the approval of an aid agency we pay for the programme out of our own reserves and we are only reimbursed when we send a detailed account to the aid agency," he said.

"What has happened is that the aid agencies had been slow in coming up with the money owed to us and our reserves have been so depleted we have run into troubles."

He said, however, that some of the aid agency money had started flowing in--he was expecting some of it within days.

Lesotho's revenue is about R126-million while the capital expenditure estimate for this year was about R135-million.

'LESOTHO WEEKLY' CRITICIZES STATEMENTS BY UDP LEADER MOFELI

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 28 Aug 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Mofeli's Sweet Grapes Turn Sour"]

[Text] At last week's press conference the disgruntled leader of the so-called United Democratic Party (UDP), Mr. C. D. Mofeli, lashed out at the Government's 'failure' to curb the growing rate of crime which he ascribed partly to the presence of South African refugees. He further accused the Government of 'political bickering' on the conquered territory of Lesotho (by the Boers).

It is interesting but not surprising to note that Mr. Mofeli's criticisms levelled against the Government come immediately after his removal as Minister. He used to praise Government's concerted efforts to improve the standard of living especially for people in rural areas but now that he finds himself out in the cold yesterday's sweet grapes seem to have suddenly turned too bitter for him.

His preposterous suggestion that South African refugees should be driven out of Lesotho is clearly motivated by a misguided desire to win Pretoria's favour with the hope that he'll get financial backing for his 'party.'

His misleading innuendoes on the subject of the occupied territory of Lesotho manifest political immaturity and naivity.

Using all possible means at her disposal, Lesotho has and still spares no effort in her attempts to recover her mainland of which Qoaqoa is but a small part.

Mr Mofeli ochestrated his downfall by unwittingly concentrating his efforts and energy on the building of his 'part' at the expense of the Government. His psychological resilience underscores the futility of his sterile endeavours to regain the political image he had before he was washed out by the BCP in the late sixties.

SPOKESMAN REBUTS SOUTH AFRICAN CHARGES

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 28 Aug 81 p 1

[Text]

The spokesman was commenting on news reports which quoted South Africa's security police chief, Major-General Johan Coetzee, as having claimed that insurgents were using Lesotho as springboard for attacks against that country.

Major - General Coetzee was also said to have claimed that Lesotho was recently used as a venue for what he described as "patriotic alliance" talks between the Pan Africanist Congress (PAC) and the African National Congress (ANC).

The spokesman said South Africa could not name instance when an attack against any point in South Africa had emanated from Lesotho.

"There are numerous incidents of attacks emanating from the South African side against Lesotho all round our common border."

The spokesman said these attacks had frequently been brought to the attention of South African authorities who had always prepared to be vastly indefferent to Lesotho's protests.

By falsely accusing Lesotho of harbouring anti-South African insurgents, that country's authorities were drumming up a flimsy excuse for their destabilization activeties against Lesotho, the spokesman said.

The spokesman added that it was significant to note that Major-General Coetzee's remarks came soon after similar remarks by the quislings of Kaiser Matanzima of the Transkei and Ntsu Mokhehle of Lesotho.

VIOLATIONS OF AIRSPACE BY S. AFRICA REPORTED

Jet Aircraft Violations

EA120624 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 0430 GMT 12 Sep 81

[Text] In the past 18 months the South African Air Force has violated Mozambique airspace more than 40 times, according to information received by the Mozambique news agency from the Ministry of National Defense. In its violations of Mozambique airspace, the South African Air Force has been using jet aircraft, fighter-bombers, helicopters and (?Norad) Atlas transports. They also frequently use civilian and light aircraft.

The incident involving a French aircraft which was recently shot down by a unit of the Mozambique Armed Forces, the popular forces for the liberation of Mozambique, took place following a series of reconnaissance flights by South African aircraft over the areas where the incident took place, according to a communique received by our editorial desk.

According to the Ministry of National Defense, the main objective of these violations has been to reconnoiter the [words indistinct] and possible future operational zones, to support the gangs operating in the center of the country and to carry out intimidation as the basic policy of the racist regime against Mozambique.

Further Violations

EA121210 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 12 Sep 81

[Excerpt] At least two incursions by South African aircraft into Mozambique have been followed up by ground attacks. The first case was at Massingir on 26 October last year. Five helicopters with soldiers landed at a farm near Massingir in Gaza Province. They later ambushed a patrol unit of the Mozambique Armed Forces.

The second case was the attack on Matola on 1 January this year.

On 29 and 30 January South African reconnaissance aircraft entered our air space eight times, overflying Ressano Garcia, Moamba, Movene and Namaacha. The areas which have been overflown the most by South African aircraft are Inhaca, Catuane, Ponta do Ouro and Ponta Malongane, Mapulanguene, (Ingavene), Massingir, (Macambazulo), Mapai, Pafuri, Chicualacuala and areas of Mussorize District in the south of Manica Province. It is in the last district that the South African Air Force has carried out most of its flights of military supplies for the armed gangs of the so-called Free Africa [Mozambique Resistance Movement].

In addition to these acts, the South African army has increased its military strength, including tanks and heavy artillery, along the border with our country. It is also carrying out regular military maneuvers.

ALLEGED CASES OF SOUTH AFRICAN ECONOMIC SABOTAGE REPORTED

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 31 Aug 81 p 18

[Text]

Rumours are rife in Mozambique that South African firms are deliberately setting out to sabotage that country's trade and services. The Star's Africa News Service reports from Maputo.

South Africa's trade with Mozambique may be jeopardised by a growing suspicion here that goods ordered from the Republic are deliberately held up to sabotage production and services.

The Maputo daily newspaper Noticias has made this accusation outright. Publication of the accusation in the government-controlled newspaper indicates a significant change in attitudes here to trade with South Africa.

According to the newspaper, seed potatoes bought from an unnamed South African supplier for the state farms at Moamba and Magude in Maputo province arrived three months late, too late for planting in the case of much of the seed. The contract, involving hundreds of tons of seed, has been cancelled and in future the two state farms will use another supplier.

Similarly, spare parts for ploughs for the Limpopo agro-industrial complex in Chokwe which had been ordered from a South African firm arrived too late for this year's ploughing. Marcelino dos Santos, Frelimo's economic policy secretary, said that the late arrival of the spares was a reminder that "in fact, South Africa is our enemy."

The publication of the criticisms represents a sharp change in attitude here. South Africa is still one of Mozambique's main trading partners, and it still supplies a significant portion of raw materials and spare parts — particularly bulky items like seed potatoes which would be too expensive to ship from Europe.

Despite the increasingly strong attacks on South Africa by political leaders here, managers have tended to take a "business as usual" attitude, and continue to deal normally with South African suppliers. But it would appear to be a growing discontent from just these people which is causing the change.

Rumours of "sabotage" by South African firms have been circulating for some time. Vital equipment arrives late or is packed badly so it arrives broken. Chlorine deliveries for the Maputo water supply suddenly stopped in the middle of a cholera outbreak last year. An airplane engine repaired in South Africa was said to have been faulty and nearly caused a crash.

Whatever the explanation in each case might be, managers of both state and private firms here are said to be trying to find alternative suppliers for key items. And it is a judgment made not on political grounds but in hard business terms.

SHAGARI URGES OAU TO DISPATCH PEACE-KEEPING FORCE INTO CHAD

Khartoum SUNA DAILY BULLETIN in English 23 Aug 81 pp 5-7

[Interview with Nigerian President Shehu Shagari, by SUNA DAILY BULLETIN, Khartoum, 23 August 1981]

[Text] Khartoum, Aug. 23, (SUNA)--Nigerian President Shehu Shagari, in an interview by SUNA yesterday urged the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to dispatch a peace-keeping force immediately into Chad to take over the maintenance of peace and stability in that country. "It is due to the faults of the OAU that this situation in Chad occured. If the OAU has moved in quickly since the decision was made, the Libyans would not have got the chance to enter Chad," he said, [Question] Y.E., we would like to know your comments about the Libyan intervention in Chad?

[Answer] Well, the Libyan intervention is a matter of concern to all of us who are neighbours of Chad, the Libyans intervened in Chad without the consent of the OAUY or the members of the Chad committee (Ad Hoc Committee, on Chad). They claimed that they have been invited by Goukouni Oueddei and we said that Goukouni Oueddei has no authority to invite the Libyans because he is only a chairman of the provisional government which is represented by all the factions in Chad and he requires the consent of the government of Chad in order to commit the Chadian people which he has not done. As the Libyans are there, to my mind the only way is for the OAU to do its work. The OAU has been asked to provide a peace-keeping force in Chad, and I think it is due to the faults of the OAU that this situation in Chad occured. If the OAU has moved in quickly since the decision was made the Libyan would not have got the chance to enter Chad. But the OAU peace-keeping force failed to turn out and that is what caused the situation in Chad to give the excuse for the Libyans to get in, and I think it is still not too late, the OAU should do its job and send peace-keeping forces immediately into Chad, and the moment the OAU troops are inside Chad, there will be no excuse for Libya or any body to keep their troops inside Chad, and therefore Iurge the OAU to dispatch peace-keeping forces immediately into Chad to take over the maintenance of peace and stability in that country.

[Question] Y.E., what do you think of the OAU decision to convene it's next summit in Tripoli?

[Answer] Well, that was the decision of the OAU, unfortunately I was not present when that decision was taken because I was not able to attend the OAU Summit last time, but, I consider that it was unfortunate that the OAU took that decision without any conditions. I would have thought that the OAU might accept the hosting of the next conference by Libya on condition that they move out their troops from Chad, and also to desist from meddling into the internal affair, of the member countries. If I were there this is what I would have put to the meeting to insist that Libya has to accept these conditions before the O.A.U. accepts to meet in Libya. In fact my instructions to my own delegation is to advise the O.A.U. to defer the decision until after six months, within six months we expect Libya to abide by the conditions stipulated, if they did then we would have no objection in attending the meeting in Tripoli.

[Question] And if it did not?

[Answer] If it didn't then the O.A.U. should not accept to go there, but as I said this was our proposal and it seems that, it has not been taken into consideration somehow the O.A.U. just accepted, but I hope they should have accepted on conditions.

[Question] If Libya didn't abide by these conditions does that mean you are not going to attend the summit in Tripoli?

[Answer] Myself, well, this is not the condition which is made by O.A.U. and I don't think that Nigeria had a chance to put across this for debate during the meeting and therefore I can not say that the O.A.U. has rejected our proposal as such, but I had hoped this should have been the case.

[Question] Y.E., would you please comment on your talks with H. E. President Nimeri today?

[Answer] Well our talks have been very cordial and friendly and in brotherly manner, we have a lot in common with the Sudan. In fact we regard Sudan as our second home. You know ties and relationships with Sudan have been long in history and that when a Nigerian comes to Sudan he really does not think he is going to a foreign country, after all we have got millions of Nigerians who are resident here and who are very happy in this country which is their home. We have discussed matters of common interest, international affairs, particularly African Affairs and in all aspects,; the question of Namibia, our fight against colonialism and "aparthied, we have similar views, with my brother on the question of Libya it is all a matter of common concern to both of us because we are both neighbours of Chad and we all abhor the attitude of Libya in trying to poke its noses into the affair of the members countries of the OAU. We discussed Chad in length and thought of ways and means with which to insure peace and stability in that troubled country. We share common concern about the situation there as well as the situation in other parts of Africa, particularly in Western Sahara which we are going to discuss in Nairobi, that is why I am proceeding today to Kenya, my brother is going there too for discussing western issue. We are also both members of the good offices commission and Ethiopia-Somalis dispute is also a matter of great concern to both of us and other African issues. We are also concern about the question of North-South dialogue between the developing countries and industrialized countries and I will be attending the Mexico meeting on this issue. In fact tomorrow in Nairobi I am going to meet with my other colleagues who are in the same meeting to discuss common strategy before the Mexico summit in October. These and other international issues are some of the matters we have discussed.

FIRST BRIDGE ACROSS ANAMBRA RIVER TO BE CONSTRUCTED

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 12 Oct 81 p 16

[Article by John Nwosu]

[Text] THE problem of easy evacuation of the rich agricultural harvests of the Anam area in Anambra Local Government Area of Anambra State will shortly be a thing of the past.

This is because Anambra River will shortly have a bridge across it to link Otu Ocha and Umuezeanam. This project has already been contracted for.

Announcing this in Enugu at the week-end, the State Commissioner for Works and Housing, Chief Malachy Ezeilo said that the bridge, the first of its kind to span Anambra River will have two lanes and would measure 500 metres in length.

The bridge itself is part of a 33 kilometre road project connecting Umueze Anam-Orama Etiti-Nzam in Anambra Local Government Area. The commissioner said that this would cost the state government some ₦10.89 million, and that only 13 kilometres of this road project would be handled during the first phase of the project.

Chief Ezeilo pointed out that the new additions to the road package deal which the state government is presenting to the people would cost nearly ₦40 million—₦38,376,085.00 to be exact—and has a number of novel features.

He said that for example, the Abakpa—Nike—Trans—Ekulu access road is only 5.2 kilometre long but that it has special attributes. The road, the commissioner went on would be a dual carriage way will have two bridges, two under-passes (tunnels) and a fly over.

When completed Chief Ezeilo said, this road would make it possible for motorists entering Enugu from either Onitsha, or Umuahia or Abakaliki and not wishing to enter the city to entirely bye-pass it. In this way, the Commissioner explained, the volume of traffic in Enugu would be considerably slashed.

This access road would cost some ₦4.3 million and would take 104 weeks to complete.

The Nenwe—Ndeaboh—Awgu would measure 58km but it would have three bridges and link various communities in Awgu Local Government Area.

Virtually a ring-road, it will pass through Oduma—Ndeaboh—Mpu—Okpanku then Ndeaboh on to Awgu.

Commissioner Ezeilo explained that in constructing this road, the NPP government of the state was motivated by the need to open up the vast stretches of rich agricultural land in the area and thus encourage increased economic activities by the people. The road he said will cost nearly ₦18 million.

Another road in the new addition is the Amechi—Amodu—Obeagu—Agbani Road. To run some 12 km, the road which will span two bridges (across Rivers Nyaba and Atavo) will be completed in a year and three months.

Chief Ezeilo explained that these recent additions to the government's road package deal, underpin the desire of the government not only to match its promises with action, but indeed to give the people the best of anything that is worth giving.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS MARKETERS ASK PRICE INCREASE

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 17 Aug 81 pp 1, 32

[Article by Dapo Ajibola]

[Text] Petroleum products marketers in Nigeria are asking for a price review on Low Pour Fuel Oil (LPFO) a type of fuel used by boilers and steam engines in industries, including zonal differential to make their marketing efforts profitable.

For this purpose, representations have been made to the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) on the unprofitability of the fuel at the price of ₦5.43 a litre.

In the past two years, according to the marketers, they have been incurring losses in the sale of this particular oil and to worsen the situation the losses have in recent times increased at an alarming rate that their companies can no longer bear them.

At present, there are about seven petroleum products marketers in the country.

Though the NNPC has not given an approval for the increase, it is understood that the corporation acknowledges the need for a review. Since an official approval is needed but not forthcoming the marketers are becoming impatient.

However as an interim measure, some of the marketers because of their increasing losses have decided to change their terms of agreement with their customers, or cut down on the supply of this particular fuel to the market.

Some of the marketers as a change in their terms have come up with reviewing their service charges contracted with their customers.

Accordingly, customers may be asked to be responsible for moving the product from the refinery to their premises, or customers would be made to pay extra charges to cover sea freight, harbour dues and other incidental services from Warri.

Commenting on the planned change in terms of agreement, an official of the one of the factories using this type of fuel said already the cost of production is very high in this country if the proposed change in service charges in enforced it will further increase costs to the factories.

If the supply of the fuel is, however, reduced in the market it may make some factories which can not afford to transport the fuel themselves shut up their boilers.

PORT CONGESTION REPORTED IN LAGOS

Lagos BUSINESS TIMES in English 17 Aug 81 p 32

[Text] Thirty vessels were awaiting berthing at Apapa and Tin Can Island Ports during the dockworkers two-day strike.

The Minister of Transport, Dr. Umaru Dikko, discussed in Lagos last week while briefing the press of the effect of the DUN strike, on ports operations. It was only the Lagos ports that were affected.

He added that it is not true that there was a bunching of up to 100 vessels as reported by one national newspaper.

Dr. Dikko said that of the 31 ships awaiting berthing, 17 of them were carrying cars, three general cargoes, two of them were carrying rice, one carrying fish. Others were four bulk cargoes, three oil tankers and one fertiliser.

The Minister, in answer to a question on why vessels carrying vehicles could not be off-loaded, said that thousands of vehicles already off loaded from vessels were yet to be claimed by their respective importers.

He explained that the importers might have been experiencing financial difficulties in paying the customs and other statutory charges on their imported vessels.

Dr. Dikko declared that all available spaces in the ports have been used to park off-loaded imported cars and that the Nigeria Port Authority is refusing to allow further car carriers to berth for the purpose of discharging, he said such vessels had therefore been advised to divert to Calabar, Port Harcourt and Warri ports to ease the tension at the Lagos ports.

The Ports Manager, Tin Can Island, contributing, explained that ships making use of other ports outside Lagos enjoy some concessions.

Apart from the slight bunching ships at the ports during the strike, lorries were also seen piled up waiting to be loaded.

SHAGARI DENIES PRESS HARASSMENT--Lagos, September 4--Nigerian President Shehu Shagari has denied to media executives here that the press was being harassed in a recent police search of three opposition newspaper offices. The editors of the Nigerian Tribune, the Daily Sketch and Nigerian Standard, were also arrested but were released on bail later. The president told the media executives on Wednesday that the police had the responsibility to nip in the bud any threatened breach of the peace in the country. It was the routine practice of the police to carry out searches for evidence in order to sustain any charge they might prefer against an offender, the president added. He said that personally he would accept abuses and criticisms by any newspaper, but he would not tolerate the impugning of his integrity. (A.F.P.) PROPOSED FORMATION OF SENEGAMBIA HAILED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 20 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Editorial by Bara Diouf: "Senegambia"]

[Text] It was only a dream! But since yesterday, it is almost a reality, through the will of President Daouda Jawara, his parliament, his people. After a lightning visit of a few hours to Senegal, the head of the Gambian state officially made the announcement to President Abdou Diouf, to the Senegalese government, and to the national press. With him were the president of the Gambian National Assembly, bringing a congratulatory message for the Senegalese people and for their head, and the minister of foreign affairs of Gambia.

President Daouda Jawara, whose visit to Dakar was strictly humanitarian in nature, felt he should make some concrete proposals toward the realization of Senegambia which has become inevitable. He thus killed two birds with one stone. First of all, he deeply touched us Senegalese, by the charitable thoughts that he expressed for the dead and wounded of our army, when we gave him the military help and support he asked for during the grave times experienced by his country because of the rebellion and terrorism of some of his countrymen.

He went in person, with President Abdou Diouf, his brother, but especially his friend, to the bedsides of soldiers being treated in the various medical centers in the city. For each one he had a kindly word, a message of hope. But he did more than that, while sharing the misfortunes of the dead as well as the living, by a gift of some 300 million CFA francs for the victims and their families.

President Abdou Diouf said it. Given the international situation, the real economic difficulties that Gambia is having today, the disinterested nature of the Senegalese intervention, President Jawara's gesture, despite its highly moral significance, is embarrassing to us. But how can one refuse a relative's participation, when one is trying to bind up the family's wounds?

Learning from the peaceful coexistence dictated by history, geography, and culture, the Gambian head of state went even farther. Quite unexpectedly, he officially stated his country's desire to strengthen, by integration, the age-old ties existing between Senegal and Gambia. The form selected is confederation. Instructions have been given to the appropriate ministries for the preparation of the texts to be submitted, in the near future, for the approval of our respective governments.

Thus one might say that a decisive page in the history of Gambia and Senegal has been turned.

Without the slightest doubt the credit for this belongs to President Jawara. Courageously, he was able to learn from the grievous trials his country underwent in August, and during which, no less courageously, Senegal went to stand at his side. He understood the incongruity of the separate existence of the Gambian entity within the very entity of Senegal. Like a midwife of history, to repeat President Abdou Diouf's admirable expression, he understood that a head of state is first and foremost a visionary, before being a manager of the present. On these grounds, he has just laid the foundations of a strong Senegambia, which will serve as a model in our laborious quest for that African unity which is indispensable to our survival. We Senegalese are still full of surprise and emotion. The step that was taken yesterday does indeed fulfill one of our greatest and most legitimate aspirations. But did we have the right, therefore, to impose it on a partner that international law had just sanctioned? Thus the political acumen of men of good will has just triumphed over an incongruity and a taboo.

What remains is the challenge that the world has thrown down before Africa, as to its ability to organize itself as a people that has attained its majority, and that Africa will have to pick up. Senegambia is only one link in the chain, probably a decisive one, so far as its example value is concerned, but we have to go farther to achieve organic unity in our subregion. This is the price to be paid for the future and the survival of the black people on this side of our continent.

UNITED KINGDOM FINANCING AGREEMENT SIGNED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 19 Aug 81 p 3

/Text/ Senegal and Great Britain have concluded a financing agreement for 120 million CFA francs intended for the equipment of a cashew nut plant. The agreement was signed yesterday afternoon by Assane Seck, minister of state in charge of equipment, acting minister of the economy and finances, and Nicholas McCarthy, charge d'affaires at the embassy of Great Britain in Dakar.

The 120 million CFA francs graciously made available to our country cover the purchase, delivery, and installation of ultra-modern cashew nut shelling equipment , as well as the services of an engineer and two experts.

The factory, to be implanted at Sokone in the Foundiougne department (Sine-Saloum) will be the result of an investment of about 250 million CFA francs and will provide the opportunity for 150 to 200 jobs, of which 70 percent are intended for women.

Assane Seck, expressing pleasure at the excellence of Senegalese-British cooperation, pointed out that this action strengthens the project's viability, as the government is taking steps toward increasing cashew nut production.

The government has indeed set up and is following a policy for cashew nut plantation development, which besides the economic aspects is of vital interest for the reforestation policy of our country.

In association with private partners, the state has created a new company whose business is cashew nut exploitation. This is the cashew nut shelling company, which will be operational as soon as the equipment is in place.

Great Britain has unquestionable experience of cashew nut cultivation , in particular in India, and the enterprise that is to supply the equipment is, according to Mr McCarthy, one of the most experienced firms in the world.

In any case, this agreement consolidates friendly cooperation that dates back to the first years of our independence and covers all sectors of economic and social development.

Two years ago, Great Britain financed the purchase of a transport aircraft for Air Senegal in the sum of 1 million pounds sterling; last year the two countries also concluded an overall agreement fpr the promotion and protection of investments, covering the entire present decade.

DETAILS OF FRENCH AID FOR 1980-1981 GIVEN

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 14-16 Aug 81 p 4

/Article by Ibrahima Fall: "French Aid 1980-1981: Increased Financing, Reduced Technical Assistance"/

/Excerpt/ In the light of this analysis, the tour through Africa undertaken by Jean-Pierre Cot, minister of cooperation and development, must necessarily assume cardinal importance for all those expecting redeployment of less personalized French cooperation, serving first and foremost the fundamental concerns of the peoples, and incidentally, beyond the ties of friendship which may exist with this or that leader. Mr Cot's visit is important for African states that want to promote cooperation worthy its name, disencumbered of the dross of inegalitarianism and diktat. On arrival in our country, Jean-Pierre Cot set the tone of his visit: "France wants to eliminate all that is left of the colonial pact. It wants to decolonize cooperation. It wants to be the initiator of dynamic cooperation that will truly serve the interests of all partners." Like all African countries that have specially favorable relations with France, Senegal is expecting a redefinition of cooperation strategy. Moreover, this is the task that Jean-Pierre Cot and his co-workers are beginning to tackle. In light of his visit to our country, it is appropriate to glance back, not too far in time, to measure the efforts agreed to by France toward the development of our country as public aid in the 1980-1981 financial year's budget. The immediately striking observation concerns the multiplication of organizations committed to aid services, although their activities are under the control of the cooperation mission. Indeed, structures as diverse as the Aid and Cooperation Fund (FAC), the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation (CCCE). with its two offices, special aides, assistance in the form of personnel (technical assistance), aid in the form of personnel in Senegalese organizations, aides in inter-state organizations in Senegal, specific aid to the university of Dakar, aid in scientific and technical research, etcetera, contribute to the presence of France on the chessboard of economic and social aid to our country.

Another striking observation is the considerable reduction of French technical aid, in line with the government's desire to hasten the process of senegalization of jobs. At the end of this year, there should only be 1,200 professional assistants left in our country, compared to 1,600, 3 years ago.

Under the heading of overall aid granted our country by France for the budgetary year 1980-1981, it should be remembered that aid for investments of economic character were granted either by the FAC or the CCCE. Thus, FAC subsidies rose to 2,247,200,000 CFA francs. In 1979, they amounted to 1,727,035,000 francs. This monetary mass is directed as a priority toward sectors considered vital for our economy and its expansion , such as rural development and mine prospecting, education and training.

With respect to Central Fund for Economic Cooperation loans, two types of loan must be distinguished. First those described as "first pay-office," which are loans featuring 70 percent gift elements. As for the loans known as "second pay-office" loans, they are granted for a long period of time and at very low interest rates. Thus, under "first pay-office" loans, the CCCE has granted our country a total of 4.03 billion. Because of the special character of this type of loan,2.8 billion is composed of gift elements. "Second pay-office" loans amounted to 2.4 billion.

This budgetary year, France has granted an important special aid for the government's economic and financial recovery plan, for a total of 21.5 billion francs. It should be remembered that overall French participation in this plan is estimated at 32.5 billion.

Deflation of Technical Assistance

The section of assistance in the form of technical personnel is of prime importance in French cooperation. The technical assistants under consideration are active in all sectors of university, secondary and technical education, to say nothing of the specifically technical sector such as the financial, customs, medical fields, and so on. However, as a result of the new decisions on deflation made by the Senegalese government, the assistance sector is constantly declining. Numbers have declined by 300 elements over the past 3 years. Despite this real decline, the presence of 245 professional assistants is noted in the technical sector; in secondary, general, technical, and professional education, 853, and in higher education, 278.

France also grants management aid for some specific Senegalese organizations. Such is the case with the State Railroad Administration, where, thanks to the aid of a French organization, called OFERMAT [expansion unknown], 25 engineers and technicians are present.

French aid to inter-state organizations in Senegal should not be overlooked either. Such is the case with ASECNA [Agency for Air Navigation Safety in Africa and Madagascar], which receives 84 cooperants from OMVS [Senegal River Development Organization], 5 from OCLALAV [Joint Anti-Locust and Anti-Aviarian Organization], 6 technical.

Since education and training occupy a choice position in cooperation strategy, it is not surprising that specific aid has been planned for the University of Dakar, in addition to the teaching personnel assigned to it, numbering 278. The financial aid, devoted to operation and equipment of the university, amounts to 650 million . We should also note a special grant of 63 million intended to facilitate the replacement of French professional assistants by their Senegalese counterparts, within the framework of the deflation policy. In addition, the University of Dakar has concluded some inter-university agreements with French academies. These agreements between institutions amount to a subsidy of 29 millions. In addition, an aid allocation of 24 million francs has been made for the training of advanced Senegalese technicians in urban development and architecture.

Every year an agreement is signed establishing the program intended for scientific and technical research. This program amounts to 689 million CFA francs. Under this program, the grants made are centered mainly on agronomic research, health problems, and problems of renewable energy sources, to attenuate the drastic general drain through the importation of fuels, of which the cost has become prohibitive.

Still under the heading of education-training, an envelope of 483.5 million francs has been set aside for training scholarships offered to Senegalese students.

French state aid is not only delivered through official organizations set up by the cooperation services. Private organizations can also avail themselves of it. This is the case, for example, of the French association of volunteers for progress. This essentially private organization is involved in association with cooperation in the rural sector, in particular in small hydraulic projects, truck farming, health, and family economics in general. Thus, 50 volunteers have been distributed in the interior of the country, especially in East Senegal, Casamance, and River. Taking charge of them involved earmarking an envelope of 225 million francs, while the credits allocated to meet expenses for the small-scale projects amount to 45 million.

Doubling Aid

A Sahel country, marked by the horrors of drought that has become endemic, with its corollaries, famine and malnutrition, Senegal is sensitive to alimentary aid. For this purpose France has granted it aid amounting to 345 millions. Aid to non-governmental organizations and private Senegalese charities amounts for its part to 434 million CFA francs.

In light of the accession to power of the Left, substantial increases in French state aid can be expected. In its platform, the French Socialist Party asserted the need to double French state aid to developing countries, under a new cooperation strategy that will really benefit the peoples involved. So far as Senegal is concerned, it can be expected that redeployment of aid will concern essentially two vital sectors: rural development and mining prospecting, in correlation with the search for renewable energy sources. Occupying over 70 percent of our population, the primary sector really does set the rythm fpr development efforts. It is probably the barometer by which to judge the dynamism of the Senegalese economy. The periods of drought which depressed the sector are an illustrative proof of this.

With respect to the immense mining potential at Senegal's disposal, particularly large efforts will need to be made in this sector to hasten the start of development of the Faleme iron mines, especially. France is in any case a privileged partner in MIFERSO [East Senegal Iron Mining Company]. Oil costs are a burden on the state's budget at present. The permanent rise in the price of fuels on the international market have consequent negative effects on the stability of the trade balance. So it appears opportune to concentrate all our efforts on the development of our energy potentials. Peat, lignite, vegetation, [dome-flore], and the installation of large hydroelectric dams may be the dynamic responses to the energy challenge.

IRAQI LOAN--A loan of 10 million dollars, or about 6 billion CFA francs, has been granted Senegal by Iraq. This loan, under particularly advantageous conditions,is intended to support the government's efforts to reorganize the balance of payments, and for rural development projects. The loan agreement was signed in Bagdad on 6 August by Dr Abdou Amir al-'Ansari, president of the Iraqi Fund, and Saliou Mbacke, ambassador of Senegal to Iraq. The loan, which follows another one for 750 million CFA francs granted last April during the Iraqi vice president's visit to Senegal, bears witness to the excellence of relations between the two countries. But this effort by Iraq is also of interest to other Third World countries. It is one of the few states to have instituted a system intended to lighten the financial burden weighing upon the Third World as a result of rising oil costs./Text/ /Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 20 Aug 81 p 14/ 12149

PRESIDENT RECEIVES KENYAN DELEGATION

EA161950 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1700 GMT 16 Sep 81

[Text] President Mohamed Siad Barre received today the Kenyan delegation led by Minister of Information Oloo-Aringo at the People's Hall in Mogadishu.

Speaking on the occasion, Challe Siyad pointed out that the exchange of visits by Kenyan and Somali government officials will go a long way toward strengthening the good relations between the two peoples. He expressed his great satisfaction at the results of the talks which he recently held with President Daniel Arap Moi in Nairobi.

Stressing the need to cooperate fully in monitoring the security of the joint border, President Siad states that this will thwart the activities of rumor-mongers instigated by Abyssinia, whose aim is to destroy relations between the two neighboring states.

President Siad explained that the Somali people fully welcome the building of goodneighborly relations and cooperation with the people of Kenya. Challe Siad also referred to the (?burning) issues of the continent, saying that it is imperative for Namibia to achieve its independence with the withdrawal of racist South Africa from the territory. South Africa must also stop its aggressive raids into independent African states, the president said.

His excellency in reply Oloo-Aringo expressed his gratitude at the warm fraternal reception accorded to him and his delegation in Somalia. He stated that exchanges of visits by officials from the two countries are beneficial in cementing relations between the two sides.

Present during the occasion were: Minister of Information and National Guidance Challe Mohamed Adan Sheikh; director general in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs Challe Hashi Abdullah Farah; Somali ambassador to Kenya Abdulrahman Husayn; Kenyan ambassador to Somalia Mr Omar Fakih; and other officials.

TALKS BETWEEN KENYA, SOMALIA OPEN IN MOGADISHU

EA141846 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 14 Sep 81

[Text] The first round of official talks between the Kenyan delegation, led by the minister of information, and officials of the Somali Ministry of Information and the Ministry of Labor and Social Services, led by the minister of information, opened at the People's Hall in Mogadishu this morning. The talks between the two friendly states, which were held in a friendly atmosphere, centered on strengthening cooperation between the two countries, particularly in the field of information.

Somali Minister of Information and National Guidance Challe Dr Muhammad Adan Shaykh, who opened the talks, said he was pleased to welcome the Kenyan delegation to the Somali Democratic Republic, adding that the visit was of particular significance to the people of the two countries and to Africa in general.

He went on to say that although the two countries were neighbors, certain circumstances had stood in the way of earlier exchanges of visits because certain quarters, which we had identified, created in our minds the impression that there was little room for understanding between our two countries, and that such visits could not produce positive results.

The minister further said he believed the meeting in June between the leaders of the two nations, His Excellency Daniel Arap Moi and Challe Siad, opened the door leading to new confidence and new trust between the two leaders, which they subsequently transferred to their (?countries) and peoples.

The minister stressed the need for the mass media officials of the two countries to develop, strengthen and accelerate the process of building mutual trust and cooperation between the two sides. The minister stated that it has been said it is difficult to begin cooperating and building a relationship overnight, but in fact there was no one to stop us from (?destroying) such a belief. Dr Muhammad Adan Shaykh pointed out that several areas of Africa had experienced situations similar to that experienced by the two countries, and in order to improve the lives, education and welfare of our people it is imperative for us to come closer together in all fields.

Kenyan minister of information His Excellency Oloo Aringo said in reply that the meeting between Challe Siad and His Excellency Daniel Arap Moi was a positive example which we must emulate and loyally interpret. The minister stated that for a long time, cooperation between Somalia and Kenya had been unnecessarily hampered. But, said the minister: I am confident that if we implement it quickly, we shall successfully achieve our goals. The minister agreed there was history, fraternity and a common border between the two countries and we still have in our minds the (?black) history of colonialism and the subsequent struggle by the two countries to achieve independence and the efforts to build a healthy nation.

The Kenyan minister of information added that the Kenyan Government is interested in building and maintaining a relationship and cooperation with Somalia in the information field.

Others who held talks included His Excellency Stephen Echakara, the Kenyan assistant minister of labor, and Challe Muhammad Yusuf, assistant minister of labor and social affairs, who discussed ways of exchanging visits and holding seminars in the field of labor.

'MOGADISHU RADIO' VIEWS PROBLEMS FACING ETHIOPIA

EA131546 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 13 Sep 81

[Text] Mengistu has admitted that internal and external fires are burning his regime: that is the topic of our commentary written by (Muhammad Salah Falah Falah) [words indistinct] and despite the great changes affecting life in Ethiopia, the Mengistu regime celebrated its 7th anniversary yesterday. In his speech on the occasion, the Ethiopian dictator stated that Ethiopia's security and stability have been affected by both internal and external problems. He went on to state that some people have taken up arms and gone to the mountains, forests and to neighboring countries to fight his regime, that the country's economy is in ruins and that national services have come to a standstill.

This month Mengistu formed the anticorruption commission that will also deal with what he termed internal reaction. A spokesman of the commission has stated that life has become intolerable, with small groups grabbing everything being produced by the nation. He added that the existing problems have been exacerbated by the advent of hordes of marauding bandits who have crippled the country.

In March this year foreign journalists reported that killings were rampant in Addis Ababa but that no one knew why or who was committing the murders. Some Ethiopians who were interviewed by the journalists charged that members of the Dergue themselves were behind the chaos and were also involved in spreading rumors against the regime. The same sources also revealed that no food was sold by the shopkeepers, irrespective of whether the customer was sick, or only a [word indistinct] until there was a national outcry.

All these problems, which actually exist in Ethiopia today, need a stable regime which should first secure the country's stability and establish cordial relations with its people both inside and outside the country. But the Amhara regime yesterday urged the Ethiopian people, who have become economically and morally destitute, to be ready to wage war against their enemies. Their real enemies are hunger, the bleak future and suffering inflicted on them by the leadership of Mengistu, although he blames the United States, Somalia and Arab countries as being responsible for the misery prevailing in Ethiopia.

It is unfortunate, however, that Ethiopia has chosen to enlist the help of al-Qadhdhafi in surmounting its problems. The people of Ethiopia and of the other developing countries today need peace and a plan to invest their scarce finances in development projects. They cannot afford to dissipate their weak economies in planning wars and stirring up internal or external hostilities. It is sad that foreign industries buy Ethiopian (?produce) with ammunition which is used to kill Ethiopians. It is a pity to see the misery into which Mengistu has thrust Ethiopia in terms of internal wars which could be ended, straying from the nonaligned policy in international relations and ties with international terrorism.

It is our hope that the Ethiopian people will rid themselves of the regime which [words indistinct] and that the peoples living in the Horn of Africa will attain their goals of political freedom and total independence.

'HOPED FOR' UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA AWAITED

Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 3 Sep 81 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Views"]

[Summary] The UN General Assembly is expected today to begin a special emergency session to discuss the request of Africa to place obstacles in the path of the South African Government. Africa's request is caused by the obstinacy of the Boers' government in refusing to grant independence to Namibia.

Although the UN Security Council is the UN body with final responsibility for deciding important matters, the General Assembly session, which is starting today, is also important.

We feel that this session is another good opportunity for the nations of the world to show their contempt for racial discrimination and reveal the unity of the independent African countries by demands that severe measures be taken against the rulers in Pretoria for their oppression in Southern Africa.

We believe that the nations of the world will use the opportunity presented by the General Assembly session to condemn sharply the provocation of the Boers with regard to Angola and propose measures to aid its government.

We know that the Boers' friends are trying everything to cause the nations attending the General Assembly meeting to vacillate. If these friends of the Boers can use a veto vote to prevent a Security Council Resolution condemning South Africa for its provocation against Angola, it will not be surprising if they try to make the General Assembly session unable to fulfill its responsibilities.

The transgressions of the Boers are obvious. They are trying to conceal their crimes by introducing irrelevant matters like issuing many announcements concerning Soviet citizens whom they claim were killed during the Boers' attacks. These announcements are intended to obtain more support from their friends who protect them with their veto vote.

Africa expects the nations of the world to make clear all subterfuges of the Boers and therefore, in addition to condemning severely the oppression of the rulers of Pretoria, help the people of Angola to defend their independence and support the citizens of South Africa in their effort to liberate themselves.

EX-DETAINEE COMPLAINS OF PRISON CONDITIONS

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 28 Aug 81 p 4

[Text]

WHILE reports from Uganda during the week indicated an apparent escalation in the level of violence being waged by those who claim President Milton Obote rigged the December elections, other reports have it that the prison conditions in the country are inhuman. One of those recently released from detention by the Obote government claimed recently in an interview that prison conditions in the country are rapidly deteriorating and the number of prisoners keep increasing as a result of the continuing government campaign against the guerrillas battling to overthrow it.

The ex-detainee who had been imprisoned along with other former Amin soldiers following the fall of Kampala in May 1979, said that they were subjected to torture during their period of detention. These harrowing prison conditions he said, consisted of a serious shortage of food, and confinement for 24 hours a day. As a result, he stated, some of the inmates died of starvation or lack of medical attention. The ex-detainee who requested anonymity for security reasons, gave the example of a former warrant officer grade I called Chapa from Kigezi District as one of those who died of starvation in prison in 1979.

Also among those who died during their incarceration at Luzira were two brothers from Mbarara District. Former warrant officer II Nathan Akonge and his civilian brother, died on the same day due to lack of medical attention. The ex-detainee claimed that Akonge's brother actually died on his way to Mulago Hospital when the authorities decided at the last minute to take him there on a tipper for treatment. According to the ex-detainee, prison conditions worsened following the overthrow of Mr. Godfrey Binaisa's government by the military commission led by Mr. Paulo Muwanga, the current vice president of Uganda.

Overcrowding was particularly acute especially in Luzira prison, which is meant for 800 but held 2,500 inmates. But there were other problems. "Even the games we had previously been allowed to play were all withdrawn including football which was the favourite sport for the inmates." The authorities also denied them the chance to see their relatives while any letters from the relatives never reached them either. He claimed it was at this stage that the Red Cross intervened, an action that he said never resulted in any substantial improvement in the conditions at Luzira. "Since November 11, 1980", he said, "none of us was allowed to receive any visitors and this ruling remained in force until the day of our release July 25, this year."

The ex-inmate claimed that there are many categories of prisoners in the country among them lawyers, teachers, economists and medical assistants. He said the majority of the prisoners come from areas considered hostile to the Obote government, adding that even the release of prisoners is biased in favour of the pro-Obote tribes in Uganda. He said for example that when they were released, none but only one Muganda officer called Bosco was released.

The ex-detainee claimed that among the soldiers in detention is a Kenyan Lt. Col. Patrick Osogo detained since September last year. In addition there are many more soldiers and politicians including former chief magistrate, Mr. Gardiner Okello from Gulu who contested the same seat with Otema Alimadi, current prime minister of Uganda. Observers think it will not be easy for the Ugandan government to relax its moves against dissidents and for this reason the prison conditions in the country are likely to even get worse as more and more people are likely to be thrown behind bars in a bid to stem the rising tide of guerrilla warfare in the country.

GENERAL ADDRESSES PASSING OUT OF INTEGRATED BATTALION

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] Zimbabwe expected the highest standard of discipline from its armed forces, the Army Chief of Staff, Major-General Josiah Tungamirai, told 1 050 members of the integrated J-3 Battalion passing out at Inkomo Barracks yesterday.

"Wherever you are, we require you to show in your talking, walking and acts, in all circumstances, that you are the highly-disciplined Zimbabwean soldiers your country and your people expect you to be," he said.

"In Zimbabwe you are not just an army, but the people's army. The people want to rely on you, indeed to have complete faith in you, to protect them and to guard our peace and harmony. A good army is one that is disciplined."

National army soldiers committing criminal acts, would be severely dealt with, he said.

"When you misbehave and commit a crime, do not think for one moment that you will get away with it because you belong to the army.

"You can be sure you are going to end up in prison for your foolish behaviour."

General Tungamirai added: "In your training here you have been learning karate and judo, but let me warn you: never ever be tempted to practise them on innocent civilians. The forces of law and order will descend upon you and you will finish up in jail."

Members of J-3 Battalion were taken recently from assembly points and given three weeks' standardisation training at Inkomo Barracks to integrate them into the national army.

They now go on six weeks' leave before reporting to bases in the Shabani area where they will be stationed and renamed the 401 Battalion of the Zimbabwe National Army.

General Tungamirai said their training so far was designed to bring them together. This was important because, with the war now over, integration and unity had become the priority for the country's defence and development.

The next stage was to train them in conventional warfare, which was far different from the guerilla warfare members of the new battalion were used to.

"I am not suggesting that we are going to have a conventional war. We have peace in Zimbabwe, but it is important to be prepared.

"The training will be harder, very hard indeed. But the harder it is, the easier you will find it to cope under battle conditions."

Turning to demobilisation, he told the soldiers they were free to choose a lifetime career in the army, or to leave and be trained for civilian jobs.

SINGLE CRUDE OIL PRICES SOUGHT

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] London--OPEC ministers were holding intensive negotiations yesterday in hopes of agreeing on a single price for crude oil that would stabilise the market in the face of a worldwide oil glut, informed sources said.

Two oil ministers from the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries were in London yesterday--Kuwait's Sheikh' Ali Khalifa al-Sabah and Libya's Abdesalaam Mohammed Zagaar. Both denied an OPEC meeting was taking place.

But one top-level OPEC source, who asked not to be identified, said all the organisation's ministers were in "almost continuous contact" by phone--huge phone bills were being run up, he said--in an attempt to find a "magic formula" that would result in a single base price.

"It could be that the magic formula is found tomorrow and we can have a meeting" to ratify it, said the source. But he was quick to add agreement was by no means certain and the issue may have to wait until the next scheduled OPEC ministerial meeting in Abu Dhabi on December 10.

Meanwhile in Jakarta, Indonesia's Oil Minister Subroto who is currently OPEC president, said he welcomed the idea of a special ministerial meeting to resolve the pricing problems before the Abu Dhabi conclave. Such a meeting has been suggested for later this month.

Agreement on a single crude oil price eluded ministers at a special consultative meeting in Geneva last month.

Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani had expressed his willingness to raise his country's oil price by US$2 a barrel to US$34, if the other producers, most of whom were charging US$36, cut theirs. He also said his country would sharply cut oil output.

But the US$34 price proved unacceptable to the other nations, and the meeting ended in disarray.--AP

LOW MORALE AMONG WHITES REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 12

[Editorial: "White Morale"]

[Text] It is difficult for the Government and black Zimbabweans to understand the reason for the reported low morale among white Zimbabweans. Perhaps this is attributable to the watertight communication gap that existed between black and white for 90 years and which was a deliberate policy of the colonial governments.

Indeed, is there a reason for the sagging white morale? Naturally, the whites would answer the question in the affirmative and the blacks in the negative.

Those who ran away during the war had good reasons. There was a raging war and they were not sure about their lives. They could not visit the pleasure resorts that they were used to visiting for the weekend relief and relaxation: there was death lurking there.

The war budget was rising every day. The economy was shrinking instead of expanding. What was more, there was no foreseeable end to the trials and tribulations. So it was logical to leave.

Now all this came to an end with the advent of independence. Peace has been restored and established. People can go where they want when they want without the fear of losing their lives.

The wise policy of reconciliation has ensured that the evil past has been forgiven and forgotten. Nobody has lost his property. Farmers still carry on in the same way they have been doing for years. There is no let or hindrance. Indeed, this year they have had God's harvest in the maize section.

Industry and commerce are operating in the same manner they have been operating for years. Government has not interfered with them in any way.

Admittedly, there is a plethora of political rhetoric--an endless stream of political words, invective, diatribe and denunciations.

It is a great source of wonder that people who did not run away from guns, are now running away from words--from a mirage. It appears that in their strange logic words are more dangerous than guns.

STEP UP FARM PRODUCTION, PM URGES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] The Prime Minister yesterday urged the people to increase agricultural production in order to earn foreign exchange through export. Growing for export would help the nation to import tractors, bus engines and machinery which were not manufactured locally, he said.

Mr Mugabe was speaking at two rallies in Devure in Gutu and Muchakata near Great Zimbabwe.

He said farmers could produce 30 to 50 bags of maize an acre if they used better and modern methods of farming.

The Prime Minister appealed to the people to stop settling on farms without authority.

"Why do you rush to occupy farms without authority?" he asked. "Hunger" was the answer from the crowd.

He assured them that the Government would take over farms and settle them.

The Prime Minister said that small factories would be built in the rural areas to create jobs.

Much of the aid pledged at Zimcord would be used to develop the rural areas. More schools, hospitals, clinics and roads would be built in the rural areas, said Mr Mugabe. But he urged the people to co-operate with the Government in carrying out these projects.

In his capacity as president of ZANU (PF), Mr Mugabe thanked the people for supporting the party during the liberation struggle and urged them to strengthen the party, to buy membership cards, to pay monthly subscriptions and to attend party meetings.

Despite the rain, which delayed the Prime Minister's arrival, there was a good attendance at Muchakata.--Ziana.

CAR DEALERS DENY HOARDING TOP VEHICLES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 4

[Text]

MOTOR dealers last week denied they were trying to blackmail the Government into relaxing car price controls.

The allegation was made on television by Deputy Trade Minister Mr Moses Mvenge.

He said dealers were refusing to sell their better used cars to engineer a chronic shortage and persuade the Government to rethink its pricing measures.

Mr Mvenge said that his ministry would take action against the culprits.

But Mr Cecil Gowie, president of the Motor Trade Association, denied the accusation.

"After the price control legislation was brought out dealers did stop selling," he said. "But this was to look at their books and carry out recosting.

"It was not to try and buck the law.

"This excercise took about a week in most cases and trading is now back to normal."

He added that the MTA was still trying to renegotiate some points of the price restrictions.

"Some cars have been so reduced in price that it will be uneconomical even to repair them," he said. "They will be cast away and the country will lose thousands of cars.

"This will aggravate the shortage."

But one frustrated businessman, Mr Beejay Chinenyanga, of Salisbury, claims that he could not buy a good car for love or money—even as late as Friday.

With $5 000 in a briefcase, he went to five city dealers.

Each told him that all of their cars over $2 000 were sold.

"I don't believe them," said Mr Chinenyanga (33). "They just didn't want to sell their more sumptuous motors.

"They want the Government to allow them to charge what they like. It's avaricious."

Driven Nuts by Spares Famine

CAR dealers are pulling their hair out over the spare parts see-saw.

A feast of spares can suddenly arrive — usually from South Africa — and garages do a roaring trade.

But when the consignment is sold there can be weeks of famine.

"To say that the shortage of spares is critical is an exaggeration," said Mr Cecil Gowie, president of the Motor Trader's Association.

"But there is a general shortage — there has been for years.

"The situation can be changed overnight with a big consignment of spares. But this can be followed by severe shortages again because deliveries can take an inordinate time."

He added that dealers were still not willing to risk bringing spares in through Maputo.

"Pilfering at Maputo is very high and dealers can't get external insurance to cover this," said Mr Gowie.

"This means that we're still largely dependent on South Africa, I'm afraid."

Mr Willie du Plooy, spares manager of a Toyota and Mercedes dealer, said he turns away several customers a day because of shortages.

"The demand has gone up so much that we just can't meet it," he said. "We even get people from Zambia coming to us for help."

He added that many cars were being kept off the roads for weeks while owners scoured garages for spares.

"I've had a car in my workshop for four weeks waiting for a crankshaft," he said.

Another dealer said the spares situation fluctuated wildly.

"It's a case of feast or famine," he said.

INDEPENDENT UNIVERSITY ROLE DEBATED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81

[Article by Matthew Chandavengerwa]

[Text] Sharp differences surfaced last week when politicians and academics from developed and developing countries gathered at the University of Zimbabwe for an international conference to discuss the Role of the University and its Future in Zimbabwe.

The conference attracted academics from all over the world who gave lectures on how they saw the university functioning within our new society.

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe officially opened the conference with an address that left the delegates in no doubt how the present Government would like the institute of higher learning to function.

"If I, as an outsider, sound as if I am laying out a programme of the university reform, the reason is simple," he said.

"Higher education is too important a business to be left entirely to deans, professors, lecturers and university administrators.

"In particular we insist that our own university shall convert itself from a university in Zimbabwe into a genuine and authentic University of Zimbabwe," he said.

The curriculum of the university, while not confined to them, should necessarily lay considerable emphasis on Zimbabwe's national realities in all their diversities and interconnections. The students must of necessity be "servants in training", Mr Mugabe said.

INVOLVED

The African university, the Prime Minister said, must be actively involved in "cadre-formation" — the training of man and the extension of his skill horizons with a view to meeting urgent national needs.

Historically the African university had emphasised foreign studies, remaining silent on historical aspects of the aspirations of the indigenous people.

The words of the Prime Minister were echoed by a Ugandan delegate, Professor Asavia Wandira, the vice-chancellor of the University of Makerere, one of the oldest in Africa.

In his keynote address, Professor Wandira, went further to suggest that the university should be a vehicle for change — keeping itself in the forefront of understanding, monitoring events and keeping company with those who expressed concern for change.

The Ugandan warned against the temptation by many African countries to increase the scope of their universities' involvement in the developmental process without adequate resources to justify their ambitions.

"In a continent starved of all forms of development, the competition for the diminishing cake of the State has been fierce. University budgets have not grown as fast as have the universities' plans to offer additional services," he said.

This had led to a general deterioration in the living and welfare conditions of staff and students, Professor Wandira said.

QUESTIONS

At the extreme end of the argument was the "controversial" director of the London School of Economics (LSE), Dr Ralf Dahrendorf, who advocated an independent and "purist" type of university.

"Whoever demands from a university that it is relevant throughout, that it responds to external demands in everything it does, destroys by the same token the heart of academic inquiry and communication," Dr Dahrendorf argued.

Universities should ask questions — all questions, with no holds barred. They become of necessity a critical ferment in their environment instead of obeying the powers that be and deteriorating into producers "of cadres with blinkered and streamlined minds".

The newly - installed principal of the university, Professor Walter Kamba, spoke of the need for radical changes in the institution's approach to education.

COMMITTED

"Because of the rapid changes in society the aim of the university to fill a student with facts had to change to one of producing young men and women capable of thinking for themselves and committed to a lifetime education," Professor Kamba said in a closing address to the conference.

Another local delegate, Professor Hasu Patel, called on the Government to recognise the university as its "junior partner" while the university should restrain itself from competing with the Government.

NEPOTISM INQUIRY URGED--The Government must appoint a commission of inquiry to investigate allegations of tribalism and nepotism in the various ministries, the Zimbabwe Progressive Party, led by Mr Kingdom Sithole, urged yesterday. The ZPP said since both the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, and the Minister without Portfolio, Dr Joshua Nkomo, had repeatedly denounced the two malpractices, it was time they moved to eradicate them. A statement signed by the ZPP chairman, Mr W. M. Seke, said as the leaders of the two major parties forming the Government of the country, Mr Mugabe and Dr Nkomo owed it to the nation to appoint a commission of inquiry to scrutinise members of staff employed by the various ministries since independence. "The onus was on them to take action against this type of corruption," the statement said. [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 2]

COAT OF ARMS UNVEILED--President Banana yesterday officially adopted a new coat of arms for Zimbabwe. At a signing ceremony at State House, he said: "I today sign the Zimbabwe coat of arms, which is yet another break from the colonial past. I hope all Zimbabweans will revere and admire this national symbol." The motto of the arms is Unity, Freedom, Work. A spokesman for the President's Office explained: "The motto reminds us of our need to maintain a desire for national unity and the will to work in order to preserve the freedom which we enjoy." The shield is green to represent the fertility of the soil, with blue and white wavy lines at the top to symbolise the water that brings prosperity. Set against the green is the Conical Tower of Great Zimbabwe standing for the country's national heritage. Behind the shield is a hoe and an AK47 rifle representing Zimbabwe's transition from war to peace. A wreath of twisted strips of gold and green stands for the mining and agricultural enterprise which protects the economy. Crowning the wreath is the Zimbabwe Bird set against a red star to represent the suffering of the people. On either side of the shield is an upright kudu. "The kudu in their natural colours display a harmonious blend of black, white and brown which may be taken to symbolise the unity of purpose of the various ethnic groups which comprise the people of this country," said the President's spokesman. An earth mound carries cotton bolls, maize and wheat. [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 13 Sep 81 p 1]

SWAPO MERCENARY CHARGE--Luanda: A communique issued by SWAPO in Luanda reports that 2,000-3,000 mercenaries from West Europe, Israel and Latin America are included in the large contingent of South African troops which have attacked and occupied part of the People's Republic of Angola. In the same communique SWAPO, the vanguard of the Namibian people, condemned this act of aggression by the Boers and demanded an end to the occupation of southern Angola and Namibian territory by the South African troops. The communique added that the racist regime of Pretoria has increased the size of the South African military force based in Namibia to 110,000. LIBYA, ALGERIA MAY SUPPLY MIG-25'S--Intensive diplomatic activity is underway destined to channel military support from African countries to Angola, the victim of South African invasion. According to the latest information, these activities include contacts with Libya, Algeria, Mozambique, Tanzania, Nigeria and other African countries. It is also known that within the framework of these contacts, Libya and Algeria may send to Angola their modern supersonic fighter bombers, MIG-25. This aircraft is considered the best of its kind in the world. With the MIG-25 in action, the air supremacy currently enjoyed by the South Africans in the southern part of Angola would be ended. It will be recalled that African military support to be sent to Angola was decided at the recent extraordinary frontline summit, which took place in Lagos, Nigeria. CHADIAN REFUGEES LEAVE CAMEROON FOR SUDAN, NIGERIA

[Article by Bernard Degioanni]

[Text] Ndjamena, 15 Sep (AFP)--Distribution of food in the United Nations refugee camp for Chadians at Kousseri, northern Cameroon, will stop at the end of the month, but not all the estimated 90,000 camp inhabitants are expected to have left for home by then.

According to official (?estimates) 15,000 of the Kousseri refugees--the people displaced by last year's civil war--have indicated so far that they intend to return across the Chari River to Ndjamena, where the U.N. High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) will transfer its relief operations on October 1.

A UNHCR spokesman said that to date we have only questioned about half the camp's population. However, there is no reason why this figure will increase sharply, since the remaining refugees are political exiles, opponents of President Goukouni Oueddei.

It seems that a political amnesty proclaimed by the Transitional National Unity Government (GUNT) on July 27 had little effect on the rate of repatriation of Chadian refugees.

As the September 30 deadline for food distribution approaches it seems that most of the refugees leaving the camp are heading not for home but for Sudan, rear base of defeated rebel leader Hissene Habre and his armed forces of the north (FAN).

Some Kousseri inmates have said that they will be going to Nigeria, on the other side of Lake Chad, where they hope to find work.

The decision to close down Kousseri was taken jointly by Chad, Cameroon and the UNHCR to encourage the refugees to go back home.

According to GUNT sources the government expects 60,000 displaced people to return spontaneously to Ndjamena, either from Cameroon or from southern Chad, which also provided a safe haven during the 10-month hostilities.

The UNHCR, which has overall responsibility for the returning refugees, has already set up the facilities necessary to accommodate 10,000 people--or 2,000 families--for six months. But an official said that the High Commission was ready to provide additional aid if necessary.

The bulk of UNHCR aid consists of distributing food relief (supplied by the World Food Programme), blankets, clothes and cooking utensils. But its other tasks include construction, or reconstruction, of buildings to house the returning exiles.

However, there are increasing signs, both in Kousseri and here, that humanitarian organisations, other than the UNHCR, are unhappy about the attitude of the Chadian Government.

People working with these organisations accuse the transitional government of misusing part of the gifts donated to the victims of the war, and of being incapable, 10 months after the war ended, of submitting a reconstruction programme for the capital.

The government is quite happy to take, or misuse, the money and let others get on with the work, one official said. Members of other organisations all produce examples of corruption at the expense of the refugee population, and in Ndjamena market medical supplies donated to the refugee programme are on sale openly.

BONGO'S PROMISED 'CLEAN SWEEP' EAGERLY AWAITED

Libreville L'UNION in French 22-23 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Makaya]

[Text] I read in the papers left around my boss' waiting room that former French and American officials have all been recycled into their old jobs.

A vice president has become a television commentator, a lawyer returned to the bar, a professor went back to his beloved studies, a writer to his pen and a company director returned to his desk.

Well, this makes me think that these nice gentlemen in their air-conditioned offices, who assume important airs, will have to be recycled when the top Makaya in Gabon makes a clean sweep, as he has promised.

Some people are already setting the example by returning to medicine or commerce; others will have to go back to the land, to carpentry, teaching, to the plant or the store, forming the class of businessmen that is so sorely needed. At least, they will then know what they are talking about....

Indeed, power is like batteries, it gets used up; and the young technocrats will replace the tired old ministers in spite of the chameleons, the fetishes and other ritual exercises.

What is it to me....

UNAVAILABILITY OF MEDICAL SERVICES FOR POOR DEPLORED

Libreville L'UNION in French 8-9 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Makaya]

[Text] Poor me! Without even thinking about it, my countrymen have launched themselves into the world of bureaucracy and technocracy, forgetting one thing: compassion for the poor suffering Makaya.

Yesterday, I had a horrible toothache. I went to the general hospital where, in principle, poor people are treated. There, they told me coldly that 20 persons were ahead of me, that I had to take a number and come back on Monday. And how about my toothache that was not going away!

A bit naively, I went to the social insurance fund hospital; the dentist on duty sent me over to the secretary's office without listening to me. There, they asked me for 8,000 francs to look at my bad tooth. Where was I going to get that money? From under my hat like a magician?

Desperate, I pleaded my cause, but they told me with a big smile that I had to show a "certificate of indigence" signed by the mayor's office in my district. This is a formality that can take up to a week.

Is this what they mean when they talk about medical care for all in the year 2000? What a dog's life!

BETTER LIVING CONDITIONS OF EXPATRIATES RAILED AT

Libreville L'UNION in French 31 Aug 81 p 1

[Article by Makaya]

[Text] In a tiny work site lost in the immensity of our forests called Ekouk, I believe, a truck hits two electricity poles, interrupting the supply of power to the African workers' camp.

Refrigerators, fans, radios, television sets, things and machines are paralyzed for 3 months. Yes, you have read right: 3 months! One wonders whether the accident is so serious that officials do not want to intervene, or whether consumers are so negligible in financial terms that no one condescends to become alarmed and dispatch a repair crew.

But what is even more bizarre--and I, Makaya, want to point it out--is that the camp for the cadres (read expatriates)--continues to be ablaze with lights as for a big celebration in Libreville. Air conditioning is turned on full, refrigerators are peacefully humming, washing machines deliver their loads without any problem.

This difference in misfortune reminds me of this other camp in Ndjole where the workers of the Transgabonese [railroad] live under similarly disparate conditions. This means that in our country, we are free to speak up, but when it comes to the means of existence, we are always at the bottom of the pile.

How sad!

LIMANN, ZERBO SPEAK AT DINNER

AB171025 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 17 Sep 81

[Excerpts] President Limann has declared that only peace and security can release the resources needed for the socioeconomic development and progress of mankind. To this end, he called for collective and individual efforts to halt the wasteful arms race and threats or resort to force in settling international disputes. The president was proposing a toast at a dinner held last night in honor of the visiting Upper Volta head of state, Col Saye Zerbo.

Turning toward what he described as a grim and explosive situation in southern Africa, the president called on all countries dedicated to freedom and social justice to unreservedly condemn the unprovoked racist South African invasion of Angola and the wanton destruction of life and property in the Frontline States. He also called for international pressure and sanctions to be brought to bear on the apartheid regime to accept UN Resolution 435 as the basis for a settlement in Namibia. President Limann urged continued support for SWAPO and for the African National Congress of South Africa in their struggles.

Replying, Colonel Zerbo expressed the hope that the permanent Ghana-Upper Volta Joint Commission for Cooperation will be utilized to the full advantage of the [illegible] He said at a time when border conflicts have become rampant in [illegible] countries, the exemplary relations between Ghana and Upper Volta have been clearly demonstrated by the ability of the two countries to demarcate their common border.

Colonel Zerbo was optimistic that the free movement of persons in the West African subregion as envisaged under ECOWAS would lead to the free movement of goods. He said problems of transportation and trade must be considered as sources of unity rather than as sources of discord. The Upper Volta leader said the two countries must be able to find the basis for cooperation for the full utilization of the River Volta and expressed the belief that commitments which were undertaken in Abidjan on the Bui Dam will be fully respected.

Colonel Zerbo thanked the government and the people of Ghana for placing facilities at the Tema harbor at the disposal of his landlocked country. He emphasized that Ghana and Upper Volta must be proud of their bilateral relations because these constitute a living testimony for subregional cooperation within the framework of ECOWAS.

Present at the banquet were the vice president, Dr Degraft Johnson; the chairman of the Council of State, William Ofori-Atta; cabinet ministers; members of parliament and the diplomatic corps.

The Upper Volta leader leaves Accra this morning to return home at the end of his visit.

IMPROVED RELATIONS, COOPERATION WITH INDONESIA REPORTED

Indonesian-Malagasy Trade

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 19 Aug 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] "Indonesia will follow the principle of being open to any country for peace in the world and of solidifying its relations with all countries, particularly in the economic and commercial fields."

This statement was made by Indonesian Minister of Foreign Affairs Mochtar Kusumaatmadja on 14 August as he received the Malagasy parliamentary delegation headed by President Lucien Xavier Michel Andrianarahinjaka, which is on an official visit to Indonesia (13-23 August 1981).

On that occasion, the president of the National Popular Assembly transmitted a message from Minister Christian Remi Richard to his Indonesian counterpart, in which "he expresses the wish that relations will develop between our two countries, particularly in the economic and commercial field." President Andrianarahinjaka also stated that "the Malagasy Government would like to promote the clove and vanilla trade and in exchange, Madagascar would like to buy oil from Indonesia."

While relations between our two countries seem relatively undeveloped, particularly in the economic and commercial field, especially due to transport difficulties, "they are improving," according to Indonesian Charge d'Affaires Soerjobiono Prabowo, "thanks to mutual understanding."

He continued: "This is explained by the fact that Indonesia and Madagascar have many things in common: Their two peoples are of the same racial origin, both are in the Indian Ocean, both are developing and nonaligned and both have the same aspirations: against colonialism, for peace, for the new world economic order."

Cultural Cooperation

At the present time, our relations are mainly developed in the cultural field. For 1980-1981, Indonesian scholarships have been granted to two young people to study the art of batik, to two young women who completed a training course in rural information, to two young people to study the Indonesian language, to five pilots who completed their flight instructor course, to two doctors who visited rural health centers for three weeks, to two participants for research in the field of livestock raising and rice growing, to three young people to study Islam at the National Institute of the Islamic Religion and two higher officers in the FAP [People's Armed Forces].

Exchanges

There is definite development in the youth area, especially since the official visit by the minister of youth and sports and Mrs Koussay Said Ali to Indonesia in November 1980 for the purpose of promoting cooperation between the two countries in this area.

Our two ministers also recognized that "cooperation in the field of youth and sports promotes friendship between the young people of our two countries and will encourage efforts aimed at achieving a zone of peace in the Indian Ocean and surrounding area."

It should also be pointed out that the Indonesian Ministry of Youth plans to send to Madagascar, following the maritime route of our common ancestors, a group of young Indonesians. The maritime route will be reconstituted based on history.

Cloves and Oil

In the economic and commercial fields, there is practically no trade between our two countries because of transport problems.

Nevertheless, for several years, Indonesia has bought cloves from us. "In 1980, we bought 6,000 tons of cloves, which is the minimum of what we want." Actually, it is the Malagasy supply that cannot meet the Indonesian demand. "As long as the Indonesians smoke their cigarettes, they will always need Malagasy cloves."

And yet, the two sides are trying to develop economic and commercial relations.

Last year, Minister Justin Rarivoson, heading an economic delegation, was invited to Indonesia to strengthen such relations between our two countries and pursue negotiations on the purchase of oil and paraffin.

Suggestions

Indonesia can and wants to give aid to Madagascar. Many sectors lend themselves to such cooperation.

For example, there is the development of our small and medium-size industries. Such a project has existed between our two countries for years, but its completion requires financing from an international organization. The Indonesian Embassy is now contacting the UNDP to support the project within the framework of technical cooperation between developing countries.

Indonesia can also lend us its help in the development of freshwater fishing, rice growing, the raising of fowl and the construction of housing, as it has already done in Tanzania. To that country also, Indonesia supplied Indonesian boats and technicians to ensure communication between two cities separated by a river and in order to train local personnel.

Whatever the case, Prabowo hopes that upon the return of the Malagasy parliamentary delegation, our cooperation will develop further, thereby strengthening the bases of the mutual understanding that already exist. "With or without a third party, Indonesia will always help Madagascar because of the five common points existing between our countries, our two peoples."

Return of Malagasy Delegation

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 28 Aug 81 pp 1-2

[Excerpts] The Malagasy parliamentary delegation, headed by the president of the ANP, Lucien Xavier Michel Andrianarahinjaka, returned home yesterday morning after an official two-week visit to Indonesia. As he deplaned, President Andrianarahinjaka told the press that the delegation he heads has just responded to the invitation of the Indonesian Parliament which fits into the framework of interparliamentary exchanges in the world. He said he was satisfied with this visit, which he labeled as instructive. It was the first time such a parliamentary delegation has visited Indonesia, he said, adding that at the level of relations between the two parliaments, the delegation had three contacts, with the president of the Indonesian Parliament, first of all, then with members of the commission on international cooperation, and finally, at a dinner.

We had the privilege, on 17 August, of attending the opening of the parliamentary session, he said. At that time, we were introduced to members of the Indonesian Parliament. Such contacts enabled us to inform our hosts of the political and economic situation in Madagascar, President Andrianarahinjaka said, of its revolution and its achievements.

Speaking of the many contacts with Indonesian leaders, President Andrianarahinjaka said that the delegation was received by President Suharto, to whom it transmitted fraternal greetings and a verbal message from the head of the Malagasy Government. Also discussed at that meeting was the international conference on the Indian Ocean Peace Zone proposed by President Didier Ratsiraka.

With the Indonesian leaders, including the ministers of foreign affairs and education, the governors of Djakarta and Bali, talks touched upon the development and strengthening of bonds of friendship and cooperation between the two nations. Andrianarahinjaka said that Indonesia grants particular importance to the common origins of the two peoples and the same source of civilization.

Concerning commercial trade, President Andrianarahinjaka said that we export cloves to that country. Vanilla is grown abundantly in Indonesia at the present time. We also spoke of oil. I believe that it is up to the ministry in question to go further with talks already initiated, for that cooperation would then be called upon to develop, he said.

We transmitted an official invitation to a parliamentary delegation to visit Madagascar. It was accepted but the date will be set jointly, Andrianarahinjaka concluded.

It should be emphasized that the Malagasy parliamentary delegation was welcomed to Ivato by the CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council], Charles Ravoajanahary, the members of the permanent bureau, chief of staff Janvier Ignace and a delegation from the Indonesian Embassy headed by Ambassador Soerjodiono Prabiowo.

DUVAL SPEAKS OUT ON ILOIS PROBLEM

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in Frnech 13 July 81 p 5

[Interview with Gaetan Duval by LE MAURICIEN: "Gaetan Duval: The Ilois are British"; passages enclosed in slantlines printed in italics.]

> [Text] The Ilois affair is not over yet. The breakdown of the negotiations in London, and the empty-handed return of the Mauritian delegation on Saturday makes it necessary to reopen a case as sensitive as it is confusing.
>
> In order to understand the foundations and all the implications of the Ilois affair, we must refer to history.
>
> In 1965 negotiations were held between the British Government and delegations representing the political parties of the island of Mauritius, which was still a British colony. The Labour party was headed by Dr Ramgoolam, while the Mauritan Social Democratic Party [AMSD] was led by Jules Koenig. Deputy Chief Gaetan Duval was present also.
> Today, with the Diego Garcia affair returning to public view, he shares some useful information on the PMSD's position during the negotiations held 16 years ago. At the same time he makes some interesting observations on the statute that, according to him, the Ilois may base legal claims.

[Question]: Sir Gaetan Duval, all the controversy about Diego Garcia and the future of the Ilois takes on a new dimension with the failure of the Mauritian mission to London. In certain circles it is constantly repeated that the PMSD is largely responsible for the outcome of the entire affair. Could you briefly retrace the train of events at the 1965 constitutional congress, which you took part in yourself?

[Answer]: This is how the events took place: In London we were in the middle of debates which were heading towards the organizing of a referendum. We had proposed that a referendum on the subject of independence be set up. At that point the British requested that discussions be initiated between the two sides on the Diego Garcia question, using a kind of subcommittee format which had been worked out:

this was entirely separate from the conference. Jules Koenig attended these meetings, as the head of the PMSD. The British said that they needed to make use of Diego Garcia's strategic location. The PMSD's point was the following: We were prepared to make Diego Garcia available on a lease basis. The rate at which the lease would be settled could be changed as we saw fit, and whenever conditions obliged us to do so. Above all, we wanted to be certain, as evidenced by our proposal to rent the territory, that Diego Garcia would /remain/ Mauritian. The British rejected our proposal, and Ramgoolam did not press the matter any further. Jules Koenig then withdrew from the proceedings of the subcommittee. Ramgoolam thus allowed Diego Garcia to be ceded to the British in return for a settlement: in other words, he made a concrete deal. It must be stressed again that the work of the subcommittee was /completely separate/ from that of the Constitutional Congress. Several months later the matter turned up at a meeting of the Council of Ministers. We were faced with a "fait accompli." Diego Garcia would be given to the British for the sum of 40 million Rs [rupees]. We discussed the situation again and found it unacceptable. It was at that point that we withdrew from the coalition. So it is ridiculous to say now that we had a hand in the transfer of Diego Garcia to the British. We even held meetings to protest it.

[Question]: Did you ever approach this matter from a legal point of view, or was it strictly a political question for you?

[Answer]: I have spent much time on the matter with Mrs Bloom-Cooper and Bernard Sheridan, and we arrived at the following conclusion: the inhabitants of Diego Garcia are British citizens. Whatever that may mean.... For, remember, the word "British" carries several implications. But, no matter; they are British citizens. Why? Because the minute that Diego Garcia was ceded it became British territory. When the British granted us independence they did /not/ consequently grant independence to Diego Garcia, and it remained British territory. The nationals still on Diego Garcia were thus British nationals, and still are today. As we see it, the mistake the British made was to land the Ilois on foreign soil, namely Mauritius. If the British wanted to move them they would have had to send them to another British territory. They ought to have given each one a British passport and allowed them to enter Great Britain. In the meantime, they should all receive compensation for damages.

[Question]: And in regard to the territory itself, what is your opinion?

[Answer]: We hold the same opinion: Diego Garcia /is/ British territory. That is why we maintain that the Ilois are automatically British citizens. They have the right to indemnities for having been taken from a British island and landed on foreign territory. We feel it is therefore legal for us to demand compensation and simultaneously argue that they are British citizens. One thing must be perfectly clear: The Mauritian Government could take millions from Great Britain and do whatever it pleases with it, but this does /not/ bind the Ilois to anything since they are British citizens.

[Question]: According to you, what are the chances for a settlement to this "affair"?

[Answer]: It is obvious that there will be no political settlement. There is no chance whatever for that. It can /only/ be settled legally. An Ilois could be taken off to Great Britain, without a passport or anything else. He would be incarcerated immediately. Attempts would be made to deport him. At this point the whole matter would go before an appeals court, and then go from one jurisdiction to another until it came to the highest court, maintaining all the while that the Ilois is a British citizen. He is not Mauritian.

[Question]: There has been a lot of talk about the need for Mauritius to make a claim on the Chagos islands. According to you, Mauritius hasn't the right to do so. What are the reasons behind this affirmation?

[Answer]: The recent failure of the Mauritian mission to London can be attributed to that. The negotiations were conducted in the worst manner conceivable. We definitely knew that they would run into a wall, and also that the Mauritian delegation would make a claim on the territory. Diego Garcia is beyond any doubt British territory. I'll tell you why I believe that Professor Oraison is wrong. In the first place, let us consider the possibility of dividing the territory. This cannot apply to an island situated thousands of kilometers from our country. If the territory is split up, the geographic aspect of the problem becomes much more important. Great Britain administered Diego Garcia from Mauritius, just as the Seychelles were administered from Mauritius. This does not give us the slightest right to the Seychelles. Neither does this permit us to say that the British divided Mauritian territory by separating the Seychelle islands from us. We must be practical; we cannot stray from the principles of international law.

[Question]: Some people have said that since Diego Garcia was sold to the British before Mauritius became independent, the transaction is in some way illegal.

[Answer]: In spite of Mauritius not having attained autonomous stratus when it sold Diego Garcia, the important thing is that the 40 million Rs. obtained from the British for the sale was /kept/. By keeping the 40 million Rs., even after becoming independent, the Mauritian Government recognized that the transaction had actually taken place. I'm talking about basic law here: for example, if a 17 year old sells a car to someone, the transaction is illegal because the seller is a minor. But if, when the seller comes of age, and he has kept the money from the sale, how can he return to the purchaser of the car and claim that the car belongs to him? The fact that he still has the money (and in the case of Mauritius the money had even been spent), means that the transaction is recognized and becomes legal. Therefore, I feel it is impossible to make a claim on Diego Garcia.

MUGABE ARGUMENT FOR ONE-PARTY SYSTEM SAID 'SPECIOUS'

AB312004 Lagos International Service in English 1630 GMT 31 Aug 81

[Commentary by Nuhu Muhammad]

[Text] Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe recently made public his intention to turn Zimbabwe into a one-party state in the near future. Speaking at a rally in the town of Chinamura, north of Salisbury, Mr Mugabe opined that a one-party state was in the best interest of Zimbabwe as it would eliminate the rivalries inherent in the multiparty system. He argued that the one-party system will make for easier and greater national integration and unity. Mr Mugabe's stand has already attracted criticism from both within and outside Zimbabwe. In a reaction, the minister without portfolio in Mugabe's government, Mr Joshua Nkomo, described the move as a panicky measure. He referred specifically to the creation of a 5th Brigade of the Zimbabwe army to deal with internal troubles as an attempt to stifle genuine dissent and prepare for the imposition of a one-party state. The prime minister has already lashed back, saying that only people planning to indulge in subversive activities would be (?afraid) of the creation of the 5th Brigade.

We are surprised at the idea of a one-party state ever being contemplated in Zimbabwe. Our surprise stems from the confidence reposed in the ability of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. His background of a widely read academic makes us believe that he would avoid the obvious mistakes of other African leaders. The Zimbabwean leader has always declared his implicit faith in democracy. It could be said that it is due to Mr Mugabe's continued faith in democracy that he intends to call a referendum to enable the people to decide whether or not they want a one-party system of government for their country. That gesture could be regarded as a mark of respect for the people. Experience has shown that elsewhere in Africa the one-party system of government is usually imposed without any reference to the people.

However, what is in dispute is not the methods by which the one-party state is achieved but the goal itself. The one-party system can be regarded as a personalized form of government--a system in which opposition and dissenting views are rigorously suppressed and equated with subversion of the state. The argument that the one-party system will immediately eliminate political rivalry is specious reasoning. It is specious because rivalry cannot be eliminated from the policy of any society, particularly heterogenous societies like Zimbabwe. There will always be ethnic rivalry, which in itself is political rivalry. We cannot deceive ourselves that the ethnic factor will ever be eliminated from African politics. It has already been observed that the ethnic factor was a prominent cause of Mugabe's victory in last year's elections because of the dominance of his Shona tribe. However, our concern is that we are skeptical of the one-party system of government--whether in Zimbabwe or elsewhere in Africa. The one-party system has given Africa some highly repressive dictatorships whose records are not anything anybody can be pleased with.

The beauty of a multiparty state is that the people have the opportunity to make a choice from alternative political programs and views.

Prime Minister Mugabe himself got elected from a multiparty race for power. He should allow that to continue. His party has a comfortable majority in parliament, which means that he is governing from a position of strength. Zimbabwe, since independence, has maintained an enviable and (?pleasing) record. From Zimbabwe the world has learned an important lesson in multiracial integration. That is a record which should not be tarnished.

SENEGAL-GAMBIA CONFEDERATION QUESTIONED

AB272054 Lagos International Service in English 0930 GMT 27 Aug 81

[Text] Last week President Dawda Jawara of the Gambia paid an official visit to Senegal, ostensibly as a mark of appreciation for the assistance rendered in the wake of the recent abortive rebellion in Banjul. At the end of the visit, the leaders of Senegal and the Gambia affirmed their desire to work towards the emergence of a confederation embracing the Gambia and Senegal.

Sir Jawara told reporters in Dakar that the security of the Gambia was closely interwoven with that of Senegal and he was emphatic in asserting that this makes the need for a confederation of the two countries urgent and desirable. Similar sentiments were expressed by President Abdou Diouf of Senegal.

The Gambia, until the recent abortive coup, was regarded as West Africa's bossom haven of stability and democracy. The Gambian leadership did not therefore find much urgency or need to surrender the sovereignty of the country. Recent events have upset this reputation and have created serious security and economic problems for the Gambian leadership.

Sir Jawara should therefore be longing for protection through the proposed union with Senegal [words indistinct] on the part of Senegal can also be economic and the security needs of the country. There is nothing abhorring if the SeneGambian confederation becomes an ultimate reality. It would be serving the overall objective of the OAU which is total political and an economic integration among the various peoples of the continent.

However, the wish of the two leaders is not all it will take to make SeneGambia become a reality. The obstacles that must be removed before arriving at the SeneGambia are quite numerous.

Firstly, there is the question of language. The two countries, due largely to their colonial experience, speak two different official languages--English and French. This linguistic difference has limited the extent of cultural and commercial ties that would have existed ordinarily between the people of Senegal and the Gambia.

Secondly the renewed initiative towards the confederation is prompted by the abortive coup of Kukli Samba Sanyang. As our elders would say: The wolf cried yesterday, the child died today; who does not know that it was yesterday's wolf that killed the child?

In this regard it must be noted that Senegal's intervention in Banjul was able to restore Dawda to his seat of power because of the fact of its relatively superior numerical and military force. By this trend of event, the Senegalese leadership has ensured that it imposed its thinking on the Gambian people even though it was at the instance of their president. A confederation emerging at this point in time would have the Gambians playing second fiddle to their Senegalese counterparts. There will be in the end deeprooted feelings of resentment within the peoples of the two communities as well as thoughts of economic and political domination on the parts of the majority ethnic group.

Thirdly, there are serious administrative problems that will need constant sorting out before any action can be taken further on the merger plan. Such problems as the forging of a united judiciary and civil service system and the working out of appropriate security arrangements will be further complicated by the linguistic difference.

Fourthly, a confederation of the two countries could only be decided after ascertaining the wishes of the people. It is for the people to decide whether or not they wanta merger of the two countries and not for the leadership to impose it on them. As of now, it will be more worthwhile for Sir Jawara's government to concern itself mainly with the immediate task of rehabilitation and reconstruction prompted by the destructions of the July abortive coup. That coup could be a good (?side effect) for Africa. It has proved that coups can be resisted and defeated by determined effort. But as is said on the previous occasion, Sir Jawara should in the immediate future concentrate on those factors that made the rebellion possible in the first place. Kukli Samba Sanyang might be a defeated candidate, who even lost his deposit in the last general election; but that in itself does not mean that his uprising was totally unpopular. The coup might simply have been an attempt at stultifying a vaulting ambition on the part of the exclusive and privileged club of heads of state.

Whatever were the ulterior motives, it has shaken the confidence and reputation of the Gambia. The economic problems of the country might not be within the immediate influence of Sir Jawara because of the inflation of the general world economic situation; but, not so with the political and social problems. Sir Jawara should therefore summon the people of the Gambia to the polls once again to ascertain that he still enjoys their absolute confidence and good will.

LAGOS DISCUSSES NIGERIAN-BULGARIAN COOPERATION

AB101012 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 10 Sep 81

[Text] Bulgaria is one of the countries which have shown interest in the affairs of Nigeria and the rest of Africa. Economic cooperation between Bulgaria and Nigeria dates back to the time of independence in 1960 and has increased considerably during the past 4 years. An economic cooperation agreement signed between the two countries in Lagos was aimed at exploring the possibility of establishing joint ventures in areas such as the production and maintenance of medium-range agricultural machines and tools and the establishment of integrated poultry and piggery projects. The agreement also covers water resources, irrigation, construction of small dams and drilling of bore holes.

Since the signing of the agreement, many projects have been undertaken in Nigeria by Bulgarian companies. These include the national arts theater in Lagos--the largest center for cultural events in the whole of Africa--the Eko Hotel complex in Lagos, the Durbar Pavillion in Kaduna and the sports complex in Ilorin.

Two joint Nigeria-Bulgaria companies deal in the marketing of machines, industrial installations and the supply of (?frozen meat). Bulgarian firms are also involved in projects like irrigation, joint fishing, construction of small dams and drilling of bore holes presently going on in different parts of the federation. Bulgaria has also made the intentions known to actively participate in Nigeria's green revolution program and has actually planned investment in different sectors of agricultural production in Ondo, Bauchi, Kaduna and Niger states.

In the field of technical education, there are about 800 Nigerian students in Bulgaria, while about 100 Bulgarian engineers, physicians and lecturers are working in Nigeria. Bulgaria and Nigeria, being federal countries, share the same views on the protection of their territorial integrity and sovereignty against imperialist forces. Both nations are also committed to the achievement of a new and just world economic order. Bulgaria, like Nigeria, has unreservedly identified itself with the aspirations of its sister Third World countries. It has also, like Nigeria, remained steadfast in its stand against apartheid and racism in southern Africa. Bulgaria has not backed away in aiding liberation struggles in Africa. It also shares the same views with Nigeria on the Western Saharan issue which demanded that all forces occupying that region be withdrawn and the people of Western Sahara be allowed self-determination.

Despite all these, there are still very good prospects of increasing the volume of the bilateral trade between the two countries. For instance, the green revolution program for the modernization and mechanization of agriculture can produce further opportunities for cooperation. Nigeria can benefit tremendously from Bulgaria's long experience in the fields of large agro-industrial complexes. Bulgaria can also take advantage of our 5-year national development plan and go into joint investments with Nigerians. Therefore, the present trend of economic relations between Nigeria and Bulgaria should be seen as a promising beginning with prospects for far greater expansions to the mutual benefit of both countries.

ENDING SUBSIDY ON FUEL PRICES OPPOSED

AB151651 Lagos International Service in English 0930 GMT 15 Sep 81

[Text] Last [illegible] functionaries gave an indication that the federal [illegible] on fuel prices. The subsidy, which [illegible] members of the public to consume fuel [illegible] of stopping the government subsidy [illegible] prices. The likely reasons for wishing [illegible] not unconnected with the present glut of oil [illegible] state of the economy also must have impressed upon the [illegible] economy the need to curtail government spending in many areas.

Efforts to curb government expenditure are not limited to Nigeria alone, but have been a world-wide phenomenon at recent times. Also, it could be seen as an attempt to (?ensure) good government and to get government off the back of the people, thereby allowing them greater initiatives within the framework of the free enterprise system. However, while appreciating the need for a stable fiscal management in the concept of the nation's present economic situation, it is doubtful whether an end to the government's fuel subsidy makes sound economic judgment. It would be escaping the obvious to gainsay the fact that to (?scrap) the present government fuel subsidy will further skyrocket the level of inflation in the country. The experience of 1978 when the government last (?stopped) its fuel subsidy can be used to justify this assertion. At that time, the government action was immediately accompanied by an increase in fuel prices by the oil companies. It did not end there as public transport operators seized this opportunity to raise their fares to the displeasure and frustration of the average (?worker). The situation was most biting in Lagos and other urban centers where workers had been forced to spend as much as 30 percent of their earnings on transportation alone. Since an increase in fuel prices invariably affects the overall [word indistinct] economy, there was a corresponding rise in the prices of foodstuffs as well as other essential goods.

Certainly, this is what will likely happen again if the federal government decides to end its subsidy on fuel prices. The fact is that being an oil-producing country, Nigerians expect to purchase fuel and all other derivatives from oil at a reasonably low cost no matter the situation in the world market. It is, therefore, not tenable to compare the fuel prices in Nigeria with what obtains in other African countries that are not as fortunate as we are. It would perhaps be more appropriate to compare fuel prices in Nigeria with those of other oil-producing countries which shows that fuel prices are obviously higher in Nigeria. The comparison can even result in a call for an increase in the level of government subsidy on our fuel prices. What the government officials have not made known is the anticipated benefit that would accrue to the nation by ending the said fuel subsidy. [Passage indistinct] government economic measures should be aimed at taking good care of the welfare of the people. It is therefore advisable for the nation's economic managers to seek other ways of conserving government expenditure [words indistinct]

UNIFIED OIL PRICE SAID FAVORED BY OFFICIALS

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2820, 18 Aug 81 p 5

[Text]

LAGOS, August 14 - Nigerian officials indicated here today they favour unification of crude oil prices as proposed earlier today by Saudi Arabia's Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani.

At a press conference on the economic situation of Africa's leading oil producer, Professor Emmanuel Efozien said that "unification of prices will take care of the glut" in the world oil market. He is President Shehu Shagari's economic advisor.

Prof. Efozien indicated that Nigeria might reduce the price of its oil, now sold at 40 dollars a barrel : "While we may not attain the pre-glut level of production and prices, and therefore revenue, we will have enough revenue to pursue our policy of catering to the basic needs of our people".

In answer to opposition charges that the world oil surplus was hurting Nigeria's economy and that the government was hiding the gravity of the situation, Prof. Efozien said : "The economic situation of the country is not critical".

He recalled that the 1981 budget counted on producing 1.7 million barrels of petroleum a day and selling it at 36 dollars a barrel.

Less optimistic

Statistics show average daily production of 1.56 million barrels this year, of which only 200,000 are reportedly consumed inside Nigeria. Observers calculated from this that the government's shortfall in export revenue by July 31 was only 200 million dollars. This seemed to contradict estimates in financial circles here that the shortfall since January 1 was three billion dollars.

A less optimistic view was presented at the press conference by the President's Budget Advisor, Chief T.A. Akinleye. He estimated the possible loss in revenue this year at 30 per cent of the budget, namely 6.4 billion dollars. But prof. Efozien commented that would be the case only if the world oil glut continued.

President Shagari's oil advisor, Yahaya Dikko, confirmed that Nigeria produced only 40 per cent as much oil in July - 800,000 barrels a day - as at the beginning of the year.

Asked about the possibility of a price decrease, he declined to comment, explaining that was a matter to be decided next week at the meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) in Geneva. Nigeria would make no decision outside of OPEC, Mr. Yahaya Dikko said.

Meanwhile, Nigeria's official news agency reported that two big oil fields have been discovered in the Niger River delta by the American Mobil Oil company and the Italian AGIP. (A.F.P.)

NEW CROP STORAGE SYSTEM--The minister of science and technology, Dr Sylverter Ugoh, says Nigeria produces about 10 million tons of grain annually. They include maize, sorghum, millet, cow peas and rice. Dr Ugoh disclosed this in Ibadan yesterday while commissioning a new system of crop storage under inert atmosphere. The minister described the various methods being used in the storage of grain in the country as crude, resulting in the loss of about 3 million metric tons annually. Dr Ugoh maintained that any major effort to increase food production in Nigeria must be supported by effective storage facilities and techniques. He explained that the technology was being introduced to Nigeria by an Italian company in collaboration with the Nigerian Stored Products Research Institute under an agreement signed in 1979. The system can preserve grain for about 18 months. [Text] [AB251040 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 25 Aug 81]

KENYAN TRADE AGREEMENT--Nigeria and Kenya are to enter into a cooperation agreement in the field of trade, telecommunications and transportation including air-services and shipping. Experts of the two countries are to meet in Nairobi shortly to put finishing touches on arrangements for the agreement. A communique issued in Nairobi on the talks between the Nigerian leader, President Shehu Shagari, and his Kenyan counterpart, President Daniel Arap Moi, said that the two countries explored further areas of cooperation in agriculture, higher education and culture. SAUDI ARABIA BLAMED--THE NIGERIAN CHRONICLE writes on the recent OPEC meeting in Geneva, and blames Saudi Arabia for the organization's failure to reach a uniform pricing for crude oil. It also blames the Saudi authorities for the current oil glut in the world market. THE CHRONICLE calls on Nigeria and other members of the organization to rally members back to the negotiating table for a consensus. The paper, however, believes that without accelerating the development of alternative sources of energy, Nigeria's economy is bound to suffer greater strains in the future. BENDEL STATE FINANCIAL PROBLEMS--Benin, 29 Aug (NAN)--Most public officers in the service of the Bendel State Government are finding it difficult to collect their August salaries and wages. A News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) investigation in Benin showed that this is due to lack of funds from the state government. At the state government owned New Nigerian Bank, cheques submitted by paymasters of some establishments have been rejected on the ground that the government had no money to pay them. Many public servants who are paid through banks are also in the same plight. NAN also gathered that those who have received their salaries are those in revenue collecting establishments which have to pay their workers from monies collected. Some banks, on sympathy grounds, have granted salary advances to their customers who are employees of Bendel State Government and returned the dishoncured cheques to their employers. A teacher in the service of the state government said: Those whose cheques have been sent to the banks at all are lucky. We don't know when ours will come, if it will. He told members before they commenced the day's business that because of Nigeria's stand against South Africa's apartheid policy and New Zealand's close connection with the racists, it would be improper for members of any committee to visit New Zealand. Mr Ume-Ezeoke also reminded members that despite world opinion, the New Zealand Government had refused to call off the South African rugby team tour of New Zealand. OIL 'DISCOUNT,' NOT REDUCTION--Lagos, Aug 27 (NAN)--The federal government yesterday authorized the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNP) [NNPC] to offer a discount of four U.S. dollars per barrel to all its oil customers with immediate effect. This is not a price reduction as was earlier reported. A statement issued by the press secretary to the president said that Nigeria was still maintaining its official crude oil selling price of $40 per barrel. According to the statement, the discount offer in effect leaves the price and differential payable for Nigerian crude within the ranges approved under the Bali OPEC agreement of December, 1980. This offer will remain in force till the end of December 1981 and will be reviewed at the conclusion of OPEC's December meeting in Abu Dhabi, the statement added. JAPANESE TRANSPORTATION AID--A 300 million naira transportation project is being planned for Lagos metropolis by the state government. The foundation stone for the project known as Lagos Metro Line Transport was laid today by President Shehu Shagari. The project, to be undertaken by a consortium of Japanese firms, will span 28 km between Agege and Lagos Island. Its first phase is expected to be commissioned in 1983. The traffic device will on completion be capable of moving 44,000 passengers from one end to another in 1 hour. Speaking on the occasion, Alhaji Shehu Shagari reaffirmed that his administration will support any project that will improve the living condition of the people. He added that since independence, successive administrations have recognized the need for a mass traffic system in an overgrown city like Lagos. The state governor, Alhaji Lateef Jakande, in his speech observed that all efforts made in the past to ease the traffic problems in the metropolis had failed, adding that this was why his administration decided to embark on the metro line project. OIL PRODUCTION DECLINE--Lagos, 9 Sep (AFP)--The extent of the damage done to Nigeria's economy by the world oil glut was indicated here today by financial sources who said that oil production is down to a third of January's level at 708,000 barrels a day in August. The figure for August was about 100,000 barrels a day down on July's figure, and exports in August were only about 500,000 barrels--or a quarter of last year's average level. The loss in state revenue, which was about 1,000 million dollars a month in the last three months, totalled some 6,000 million dollars for the first nine months, according to unofficial calculations. On an annual basis, this represents almost a third of the 1981 budget set at 21,400 million dollars. [Words indistinct] or ten percent to 36 dollars should help to push up output in coming months. Oil sources suggest that output could at best climb back to about 1.5 million barrels a day in the first quarter of 1982. The statement by Saudi Arabia's Oil Minister Shaykh Ahmad Zaki Yamani that Nigeria's price could soon fall to 31 to 32 dollars has provoked no official comment here. But informed sources expressed surprise, commenting that nothing suggests another price cut for the time being. [Text] [AB091940 Paris AFP in English 1802 GMT 9 Sep 81]

GONGOLA CENSUS CRITICIZED--The federal government has disassociated itself from the current enumeration exercise in parts of Gongola State. The internal affairs minister, Prof Iya Abubakar, said in Yola that the enumeration of aliens was a federal government responsibility and added that it was unconstitutional for any state government to engage in it. He said that the exercise was [passage indistinct] pointed out, could have an adverse effect on Nigerians living peacefully in other parts of the world. The minister therefore called on the Gongola State Government to stop the current enumeration exercise. On reports of proposals by the federal government to build a fence round the country, the minister said there was no such plan. He stated that the government intended to open new border posts with enough personnel and adequate equipment to prevent illegal immigration into the country. DEFENSE CHIEF RETIRES--The chief of the defense staff, Gen Alani Akinrinade, has retired voluntarily from service. His request to do so was accepted today by President Shehu Shagari. General Akinrinade was appointed Nigeria's first chief of defense staff by the president in April last year. In the meantime, President Shehu Shagari has named Lt Gen G. S. Jalo the new chief of defense staff. Major General Inuwa Wushishi has also been appointed chief of army staff. Generals Jalo and Wushishi are currently chief of army staff and deputy chief of army staff respectively. The new appointment will take effect from the second of next month. ANGOLA RECOGNITION URGED--The vice president, Dr Alex Ekwueme, has called for a radical change in American policy toward Angola. Dr Ekwueme told the American Council on Foreign Relations in New York that the time has come for the U.S. to recognize Angola and enter into normal diplomatic relations with that country. He said that America should refrain from acts which might cause instability or threaten the security and independence of Angola. The vice president stated that these positive acts should enable the African country to feel secure enough to dispense with the presence of foreign troops of its soil. Dr Alex Ekwueme noted that since Nigeria and the U.S. shared a common democratic ideal and values based on equality of all citizens, the American Government should pursue policies that would promote such ideals in Africa. He said that pressure should be brought to bear on South Africa to proceed immediately to grant independence to Namibia under the terms of the UN Security Council Resolution 435. The vice president remarked that the American Council on Foreign Relations had a role to play in the process of establishing new awareness in the U.S. toward Africa as a whole and southern Africa in particular. GOVERNMENT MONEY-SAVING MEASURES--The federal government has directed that all trade and joint commission agreements which are to be signed outside the country should henceforth be undertaken by the Nigerian ambassadors in the respective countries. This is embodied in a circular on new measures aimed at minimizing government's spending. The new measures, which are effective from the 1st of this month, also (?stressed) of all overseas tours and conferences except with the approval of the president. In addition, the issuance of direct telephone lines in offices and quarters will henceforth be limited to officers on grade level 14 and above. OVERSEAS TOURS SUSPENDED--All overseas tours by members of the House of Representatives have been suspended till the end of the year. In addition, committee members currently on such tours are being recalled. The decision was taken by the House at a closed-door session on the state of the nation's economy austerity measures introduced by the federal government. Speaker Edwin Ume-Ezeoke told National Assembly correspondents later that as from next year such overseas tours would be restricted to matters of national importance. He stated that although the present tours were very necessary, they had to be limited in the interest of the nation's economy and the need to conserve foreign exchange. ARMY HEAD TO BUDAPEST--The chief of the Nigerian army staff, Lt Gen Gibson Jalo, left Lagos yesterday for Budapest on a 10-day official visit to Hungary. He was accompanied by a number of senior army officers. The directorate of the army public relations department in Lagos said the visit was at the invitation of his Hungarian counterpart. It explained that the visit was sequal to President Shehu Shagari's recent visit to Hungary. The Nigerian delegation is expected back in the country before the end of the month. SUDANESE TREATMENT OF NIGERIANS--The NATIONAL CONCORD is unhappy over reports of dehumanizing acts against Nigerians in the Sudan. The paper is of the opinion that the country's capacity to endure all kinds of provocations from sister African states coupled with the objectives of her Afrocentric foreign policy are responsible for these acts. Recalling similar inhuman treatments of Nigerians by some neighbouring countries, the CONCORD calls on the federal government to resist the oppression of its citizens and calls for their return home. CENTRAL AFRICAN COUP REACTION--Two papers, the NIGERIAN STANDARD and the NIGERIAN STATESMAN, focus on developments in the CAR. The STANDARD says the military takeover has not come as a surprise. According to the paper, ex-President David Dacko had lost the confidence of his people and as such the army had to intervene. The STANDARD however expressed concern for the citizens of that country whose future it believes is being toyed with in the name of politics. The STATESMAN recalls events that led to the coup and concludes that they indicated a state of recklessness on the part of successive governments and a disrespect for human dignity. It argues that the rate at which coups and countercoups occur in the continent it is not conductive to its general development. He said initially the production will be on a weekly basis, while after 6 months it will go into daily circulation. [Excerpt] [AB071804 Lagos International Service in English 1630 GMT 7 Sep 81]

NPN ELECTION PLANNINC MEETING--Lagos, Sep 4 (NAN)--The programmes and strategies to be adopted by the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) for the 1983 general elections are being discussed at a meeting of the party's national working committee which began in Lagos yesterday. Some of the topics include the registration of party members by the end of next October, the nomination of candidates for local government elections and the appointment of polling agents and electoral officers. Sources close to the meeting told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in Lagos today that the meeting had already decided that candidates for the local government elections should be nominated in November this year. Nomination congresses for the gubernatorial elections would be held in August next year, while the convention to nominate the party's presidential candidate was scheduled for

November next year. The source also said that any dispute arising from nomination congresses for the gubernatorial elections would be settled by the end of October next year. It further said that nominations for the Senate, the House of Representatives and the State Houses of Assembly would be held after that of the presidential candidate. The meeting, which is being presided over by the national chairman of the party, Chief Adisa Akinloye, is also considering the party's policy on labour, the creating of states, education and social services. Policy papers on research and publicity are also being examined at the meeting, which is expected to fix a venue for the next party convention. The meeting is expected to end today. JAIL FOR ADVOCATING REVOLUTION--Sokoto, 5 Sep (NAN)--A man, Ibrahim Zakky Zakky, whom the police in Sokoto accused of sending inflammatory messages in cassettes and posters to schools calling for an Islamic revolution in Nigeria, was yesterday jailed for four years by an upper area court. Also sent to jail, for two years each, were Sale Balarabe Usman Abubakar and Bello Haruna. They were all found guilty of holding an unlawful assembly despite an order to disperse, and of preaching without a licence. The judge, Alhaji Muhammadu Gulma, in sentencing the accused, observed that the offences committed by the accused persons were of a serious nature and that it was the duty of the court to give punishment which would serve as a deterrent to others. U.S. AFRICAN POLICY--Ibadan, 7 Sep (NAN)--The director-general of the Nigerian Institute of International Affairs, Dr Abolaji Akinyemi, has urged Nigeria and other African states to protest against America's negative approach to the situation in southern Africa. He said in a radio programme in Ibadan today that the attitude of the Reagan administration to the situation was worse than those of Mr. Richard Nixon and Dr. Henry Kissinger. Dr. Akinyemi said that Nigeria had the military capability to back up its foreign policy, but wondered whether Nigerians would be ready if any government wanted to use the armed forces as an instrument of foreign policy in Africa. He defended the policy of making 'Africa' the cornerstone of the country's foreign policy, because "the African sector represents the sector of the world that is closest to us." On the oil glut, Dr Akinyemi said that there was no need for the country to pull out of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). He explained that whether Nigeria remained a member of OPEC or not, it would still be affected by the Saudi Arabian oil production in the international economic market. [Text] [AB070948 Lagos NAN in English 0854 GMT 7 Sep 81]

OIL PRICE DROP--Calabar, 8 Sep (NAN)--The governor of Cross River State, Dr Clement Isong, has warned that Nigeria may face hard times if it is caught unprepared if and when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) breaks up. Addressing a news conference in Calabar on his return from the National Economic Council (NEC) meeting held in Lagos, at the week-end, Governor Isong said that Nigeria's oil production dropped from 2.2 million barrels a day to about 640,000 barrels. He said that Saudi Arabia produces 10 million barrels a day and sells at 32 dollars per barrel, whereas Nigeria sells its crude oil at 40 dollars. Dr Isong said that OPEC had not been able to impress upon Saudi Arabia to reduce its production to 8 million barrels a day thereby creating problems for other producers. The governor said that before the end of the year the price of Nigeria's oil would be reduced to 36 dollars and production might increase from 640,000 barrels to 1 million barrels a day. POLICEMAN ARRESTED FOLLOWING CLASH--Maiduguri, 8 Sep (NAN)--The policeman who fired the shot that killed a youth corps member, Stephen Bonat, during last Thursday's clash between supporters of the NPN and GNPP in parts of Maiduguri has been arrested. In a statement in Maiduguri over the week-end, the state commissioner of police, Alhaji Tahiru Jidda, said that several persons who took part in the clash had also been arrested. Alhaji Tahiru alleged that the disturbances were started by GNPP supporters, who were conveyed in 15 mini-buses to NPN offices in the state capital for the purposes of destroying such offices. The motive for the attack, the commissioner said, was to [word indistinct] the attack on Governor Muhammad Goni and his entourage in the village of Gajiram, in the Gubio local government area of the state where he had gone on an official tour. GAS RESERVE EXPLOITATION--Lagos, 8 Sep (NAN)--Nigeria has reserves of about 90 trillion cubic feet of natural gas yet unexploited, the presidential adviser on petroleum and energy, Alhaji Yahaya Dikko, said in Lagos today. Alhaji Yahaya disclosed this while declaring open a symposium on "Nigeria's role in the global national gas industry" jointly organised by the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) and the Bonny Liquified National Gas Ltd. The presidential adviser said that Nigeria would bear 60 per cent of the gas exploitation, estimated at N14 billion. Shell, Agip, Elf, Phillips and the BP would contribute the remaining 40 per cent, he added. Alhaji Yahaya, said that the exploitation of natural gas (?as) an alternative foreign exchange could be offset by the project. He advised that Nigeria should be cautious in handling the project, pointing out that its implications should be examined carefully before any contractual agreement was entered into. He said that the symposium was well-termed and would help to educate both the government and the public as to the derivative benefit that would accrue from national gas exploitation. NEW INFORMATION OFFICERS--Lagos, Sep 10 (NAN)--The presidential special assistant on information, John Nwodo, said in Lagos yesterday that the first group of external information officers being sent to Nigerian missions abroad would form the base for the take-off of the proposed Nigerian Information Service (NIS). He said in an interview with the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) that the information officers would have the responsibility of building a good image for Nigeria based on its foreign policy, as well as give better publicity to Nigeria's foreign policy. The special assistant also said that the officers were expected "to inform the federal government on global impressions of Nigeria's foreign policy as they affect the countries where they will serve." He disclosed that the world had been divided into seven zones for the operation of these officers with zonal headquarters at Washington, Moscow, London, Cairo, Tokyo, Dakar and Nairobi. The information officers will leave Lagos tomorrow for their places of assignment. [Text] [AB101154 Lagos NAN in English 1132 GMT 10 Sep 81]

NPN MEDIA CONTROL CHARGED--Jos, Sep 11 (NAN)--The majority leader in the Plateau State House of Assembly, Patrick Dokotri, yesterday in Jos accused all federal government-owned media organizations of serving the interest of only the National Party of Nigeria (NPN). Mr Dokotri made the accusation while reacting to an allegation by the minority leader in the House, Alhaji Zakari Yakubu, that the state owned newspaper was partisan in its publications. Addressing newsmen, the majority leader said that the federal media organizations have openly challenged, deliberately ignored or misrepresented all the other four parties in a manner which clearly shows who is in power. The majority leader condemned the aggressive and confrontational attitude of private newspapers that support the cause of the NPN against those seen as threats to the party. ARRESTS FOLLOWING KANO FIGHT--Kano, 12 Sep (NAN)--At least 77 persons were arrested by the police in Kano yesterday, following a fight between some residents of Yan Awaki quarters of Kano City and some suspected followers of Maitatsine, the state's commissioner of police, Alhaji Sani Wali, said. The commissioner told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) that the arrested persons included 28 Chadians, seven Senegalese, one Gambian and 41 others who were likely to be Nigerians. An eye-witness told NAN that the suspected Maitatsine followers had squatted around the Yan Awaki quarters for some days selling tea and bread. He said that because of their foreign nature the squatters were suspected to be followers of Maitatsine who were about to re-enact another confrontation like last December's. It will be recalled that Maitatsine was the leader of some Kano religious fanatics, whose activities resulted in destruction of lives and property in Kano City last December. UNIVERSITY STRIKE ACTION ORDERED--Ibadan, 15 Sep (NAN)--The National Executive Council of the Academic Staff Union of Nigerian Universities has directed its members throughout the country to resume their industrial action, suspended last November, with effect from the beginning of the new academic session. "The members are not to teach, register, advise, conduct tutorials or mark examination papers until the union reached a settlement with the government on its demands, according to a communique issued by the union at the end of its meeting in Jos at the weekend. The communique, signed by the union's acting president, Dr Mahmud Tukur, and the general secretary, Dr T. Uzodinma Nwala, said that no progress had been made since the presidential commission on the state of universities and the conditions of service of their staff submitted its report to the president. The union said that it had been compelled by the "deplorable situation" in the universities to resume the industrial action as a way of expediting action on the commission's report to the satisfaction of all the parties in the dispute. FERTILIZER PLANT--Lagos, 16 Sep (NAN)--The federal government yesterday in Lagos signed a contract worth more than 300 million naira for the construction of the [word indistinct] nitrogenous fertilizer company in the Rivers State. The project, which is a joint venture between the federal government and some foreign businessmen, would be financed with loans from the World Bank and Export-Import Banks of the United States and Japan. Signing the agreement on behalf of the government, the minister of state in the Federal Ministry of Industries, Dr. Ishmael Igbani, said that the company, which would consist of an ammonia plant, a urea unit and compound fertilizer facilities would produce about 700,000 tonnes of fertilizer annually. He said: "Because of the priority which the government attaches to agriculture, the government considers the increased supply of fertilizer to our farmers as a matter of great importance." Dr. Igbani said that the country needed about 10 million tonnes of fertilizer annually, adding that at present the country was using about 1 million tonnes of fertilizer, most of which was imported. Replying, Mr. Frank Shipman of Messrs M. W. Killogg, who signed on behalf of the foreign businessmen, assured the minister that the project would be completed within three years. The federal government owns 70 per cent of the company. [Text] [AB161728 Lagos NAN in English 1247 GMT 16 Sep 81]

IPU DELEGATION IN HAVANA--Havana (Cuba), 17 Sep (NAN)--The Nigerian delegation to the 68th Inter-Parliamentary Union conference on Tuesday in Havana strongly condemned the continued illegal occupation of Angola by the fascist and racist military forces of apartheid South Africa. In a draft resolution submitted to the conference, the delegation said that it viewed the occupation with dismay and pointed out that the occupation was aimed at forestalling the independence of Namibia. It said that apartheid South African Government embarked upon invasions of African nations to cause destructions under the cover of Western nations protection, especially by the United States. The delegation also condemned the military and terrorist actions by the racists against the Frontline States, and urged the Inter-Parliamentary Union to demand the urgent and unconditional withdrawal of South African troops from Angola and Namibia. The vice-chairman of the IPU committee on decolonization, Paul Mshelia of Nigeria, told the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in Havana that in drafting the resolution, his committee drew its guidelines from the federal government's strong support for decolonization and the condemnation of the recent incursions into Angola by South Africa. He said that the IPU would take a strong and critical view particularly of the apparent support the racists are receiving from the United States.[Sani Sambo] [Text] [AB171105 Lagos NAN in English 1045 GMT 17 Sep 81]

THREE FRENCH FINANCING AGREEMENTS SIGNED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 21 Aug 81 p 3

[Article by Moustapha Mbodj]

[Text] Assane Seck, minister of state for equipment and acting minister of economy and finance, signed three financing agreements with France yesterday for construction of the National Active officers School in Thies and with the European Economic Community for financing of the last link in the Dakar-Ziguinchor road connection, particularly surfacing of the Tobor dike along a 7.5-kilometer section. Finally, another ceremony marked the signing of a credit line for some $15 million, 4.5 billion CFA francs, granted by the Argentine Government and to be used to purchase hydraulics equipment and equipment to fight forest fires.

A number of high officials watched Seck and Fernand Wibaux, ambassador of France to Senegal, sign the first financing agreement for some 450 million CFA francs yesterday. The money will be used for construction of the National Active Officers School (ENOA) on the site of the old Thies air base.

This assistance from France fits into the framework of the cooperation agreements concluded in 1974 in order to enable Senegal to continue the training of its military cadres locally. Previously, Senegalese officers had been trained since 1960 by EFFERTOM [expansion unknown] in Frejus, while Saint-Maixent handled the reserve officers. Saint-Cyr then took over for the training of many classes of officers.

Through the agreement it signed yesterday, the EEC grants Senegal a loan for more than 163 million CFA francs on special conditions. This financial aid, which will join an initial installment of over 293 million CFA francs, to be taken out of EDF [European Development Fund] resources, will make it possible to complete the surfacing of the Tobor dike. This operation authorizes construction using concrete paving stones, considering the nature of the Casamance soil, of the last link in the Dakar-Ziguinchor road connection. The overall cost of the project will be over $459 million, totally supplied by the EDF. This investment completes the EEC's assistance to Senegal aimed at opening up the country's southern region and joins the repair and asphalting of the Seneba-Kouliban section, the bridges over the Tobor backwater and the Casamance at Zinguinchor and study of the bridge-dam over the Gambia River.

For its part, the government of Argentina acted through its representative to confirm its willingness to revitalize cooperation with Senegal. This line of credit, for $15 million, will be devoted to the purchase of equipment for waterworks and to fight forest fires. This is the first significant financing agreement signed by Buenos Aires and Dakar. This aid fits perfectly into the framework of our economic and social development actions, according to Seck. But one must recall that in June 1977, Argentina granted Senegal food aid amounting to 3,000 tons of wheat in order to relieve the effects of the drought. Cooperation between the two countries was mainly based on the political level, particularly within the Group of the 77. Both sides manifested their common will to intensify trade, orienting it toward the economic and financial fields. This new trend got a good start in recent years, the minister of equipment said.

OBOTE WARNS OF SECURITY THREAT

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2821, 21 Aug 81 p 16

[Text]

KAMPALA, August 20 - Ugandan President Milton Obote today said that internal security remains his government's main preoccupation and warned that he might employ vigilantes in addition to regular security forces to fight terrorists and bandits.

"We shall hunt down terrorists and bandits in every district, in every county, in every village and in every home", Mr. Obote said in Kampala in opening a two-day meeting of the National Council of his ruling Uganda People'sCongress (UPC).

"We are not killers, but we have a responsibility to stop the terror", he said. "If need be, we shall employ vigilantes to do the work", he told the party's top policy-making body in an 80-minute speech centering on security in the East African state.

Against a background of armed attacks on government targets in recent months by clandestine groups opposed to his rule, the President admitted that the situation in some districts in Uganda was not satisfactory.

But he said that the government would never hold entire populations in those districts responsible for acts of violence aimed at destabilizing his administration.

The government was formed after general elections in December which were won by the UPC and returned Mr.Obote to power after nearly 10 years' exile.

"It is terror and banditry we are fighting", Mr. Obote said. President Obote also admitted that the sound of gunfire, which has been typical of the nights in Kampala for many months, could still be heard in the capital after dark, but that this had now lessened to being an occasional occurence.

He asserted that it would not take the government much longer to silence all guns in the country because, he said, even opposition party members were tired of them. (A.F.P.)

SMUGGLED LETTER TELLS OF JAIL MISERY

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2821, 12 Aug 81 p 17

[Text]

KAMPALA, August 18 - A letter sent to Western diplomats and relief agency representatives here by prisoners in the sprawling Luzira jail has brought to light the plight of Ugandans being held without trial.

The letter said that the prisoners had no blankets, beds or mattresses.

Nothing was known about their prison conditions until the letter surfaced mysteriously last week as neither relatives nor Red Cross officials are allowed to visit detainees at Luzira.

No figures are available about the number of people locked up without trial in Uganda since President Milton Obote was returned to power in general elections last December.

The Luzira letter contained 260 signatures, but Western sources in here believed the actual number of people being held without trial since December was much higher.

These include four opposition Democratic Party Members of Parliament, at least two of whom have been served with orders authorizing them to be held without trial.

A third M.P. is believed to be held at Katabi military barracks near Entebbe. He has not appeared in court during the past two months although two court Warrants demanding his appearance have been issued.

Detention centres

Four students from Makerere University, who were arrested in February, were also believed to be in Luzira. In a statement published last week, the Youth Organisation of Uganda (YOU) demanded their release, saying they are "completely innocent" of any crimes.

The government contends that all the detainees had connections with the underground movements seeking to overthrow the Obote government and that none of them is a political prisoner.

The Government carried out almost all the arrests secretly. With the exception of two parliamentarians, the detentions have not been officially announced and relatives have often had to wait for long periods before they could trace the detainees.

According to the Munnansi newspaper, mouthpiece for the opposition Democratic Party (DP), other detention centres in Kampala include the luxurious government Nile Mansion Hotel, police stations, military barracks and a residential house near former leader Idi Amin's dreaded State Research Bureau torture chambers.

DP leader Paul Semogerere has repeatedly charged that his party supporters throughout the country have been arbitrarily detained without any formal charges or trial since the general elections. The opposition also claims that conditions and torture in the other detention centres are worse than in Luzira prison. (A.F.P.)

DECLINE OF MAKERERE UNIVERSITY DISCUSSED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2826, 8 Sep 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Mukyusa Jengo]

[Text]

KAMPALA, September 7 - Uganda's Makerere University, once unrivalled as the best in East and Central Africa, is now a pale shadow of the proud institution it used to be.

The grim facts now recounted by students and staff are enough to tell the story of Makerere's fading glory.

When the university re-opened last month for its 59th academic year the occasion was uncharacteristically gloomy due to the poor student performance in the last academic year, student overcrowding on the campus and growing frustration among lecturers.

Today, more than three weeks into the new academic year, 50 per cent of all approved posts on the teaching staff remain vacant with no qualified Ugandan or expatriate staff willing to fill them because of poor pay and working conditions.

All the problems faced nationally are to a larger or lesser extent found at Makerere, which has led to the university being dubbed a "miniature Uganda".

Lecturers start at 5000 Uganda shillings (63 dollars) a month, a salary which forces many to eat just one meal a day or take on additional teaching jobs in Kampala high schools to earn extra money.

Poor academic results

Either way, the performance of the lecturers at the university is seriously impaired, as was graphically illustrated by the poor student performance in the last academic year.

Forty-six percent of veterinary students failed their final examinations for their first degree, along with 31 per cent in medicine and 28 per cent in law, against the usual three to five per cent average for most faculties.

The number one priority set by the university administration this year is thus to fill the vacant posts with Ugandans currently teaching in overseas universities, or by bringing in more expatriates.

But Ugandans with confirmed appointments abroad are reluctant to return due to the low salaries at Makerere and the poor conditions, while the expatriate lecturers have been kept away by the 62.U.S. dollar ceiling fixed by the Uganda government on the amount of money they can remit home.

Makerere is thus faced with the dilemma of the diminishing number of lecturers against the rising number of students, which went up by 500 last month.

"Lost decade"

"We have a genuine problem of over-crowding", university academic registrar Bernard Onyango said this week. "Single rooms now accomodate two students, and rooms built for two students now have up to four".

The problems of Makerere go back mostly to the Idi Amin regime when, in the words of university vice-chancellor Asivani Wandira, "Makerere lost a decade of development".

It started with the abrupt expulsion of non-citizen Asians by Amin in 1972, including many university lecturers from India and Pakistan. British and American lecturers at the university also gave up their posts as relations between Uganda and their respective countries ruptured, precipitating a severe vacancy position in Makerere.

In 1970-71, for example, Makerere had 220 expatriate lecturers and only 134 indigenous Ugandans on its teaching staff. Ten years later, in 1980, this position had been reversed, leaving only 40 expatriates against 263 Ugandans.

The university administrators openly admit that most of the Ugandans, some with only first degrees, were promoted to senior positions in Makerere to fill the vacuum left by the departed expatriates.

Small international response

The outlook for Makerere today is somewhat bleak : a donor conference held in Bellagio, Italy, in April last year to raise money for the rehabilitation of the university came up with almost nothing.

Meanwhile, in Uganda, runaway inflation coupled with low incomes and insecurity, continue to keep the well-qualified Ugandan and expatriate lecturers away.

The money-starved Uganda government, which will now have to come up with most of the cash to tide Makerere over its current problems, has fixed the restoration of security and order in the country as its number one priority, making education a poor second. (A.F.P.)

LIBYAN MOVES—Kampala, 28 Aug (SUNA)--Paulo Muwanga, Ugandan vice president and defense minister, has expressed the hope that the Libyan leadership will reconsider its moves, which he described as threatening peace and security in Uganda. Muwanga added that the Libyan moves are risky and would have a grave impact. The Ugandan vice president was reacting to the statement made by the Ugandan interior minister before the parliament in which he stated that certain measures will be adopted against the Libyan Embassy in Kampala. FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.
